
Student government has been known to be a popularity contest or the voice of the greys. I feel the SGA is an organization that represents every student at UNCW. In the past two years I have not only represented the 1,000 students of the class of 1990 as class president but represented the other 5,000 students who attend UNCW. My challenge to be Jr. President is your choice, when you vote on March 22 at the Union. Remember Fran while voting.

DON'T FORGET TO VOTE MARCH 22

By: Amy Odum

Unlike many college graduates, UNCW graduate Mark Graham did not suffer from "PGS" when he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in December. "PGS" (post-graduation-syndrome) is a condition acquired by the average college graduate which includes symptoms of general confusion, extreme anxiety when faced with upcoming job interviews, and overwhelming nervous tension when faced with that infamous question, "What are you going to do with your life?"

Instead, the 24-year-old musician and speech communication major looked life square in the eye and said, "I wanna rock!" It may sound a bit juvenile for a graduate, but this young Wilmington native takes his songwriting and music very seriously.

"I was tickled about graduating because now I can devote full time to my songwriting and to the band," said Graham.

The band is Valence, Wilmington's local home grown rock-n-roll band. Made up of two UNCW students and one alum, the band members include: Rupert Bryan on lead guitar and vocals, Ted Koch on drums, and Mark Graham on bass guitar and vocals. Their stage presence conveys an attitude of "we're just having fun", and their cover tunes range from REM to The Beatles to Led Zeppelin. They also manage to work in several up beat original tunes. Valence has played almost every night spot in Wilmington from Orton's Pool Hall to The Mad Monk, and according to Graham it is finally beginning to pay off financially.

"We jam for the sheer fun of it, and getting paid to do something you love is just the icing on the cake. We played three gigs this weekend, two in Wilmington and one fraternity party in Raleigh, and made $1200 but it wasn't without exhausting nights, smoky night clubs, and a lot of energy. Good, along the way," Graham quickly points out.

The life of a rock-n-roll band, especially one just starting out, is not half as glamorous as MTV would have us to believe.

Valence has been together for seven months and during that time there have been long hours on the road, long hours setting up and checking equipment once you arrive at the bar, and more long hours as you begin to tear it all down at the end of the night, which is usually around 4 o'clock in the morning, and that's not all.

"The audience is really what gets us psyched up, but there is always one drunk who starts hassling us and wants to get on stage," Graham jokingly said. We usually try to ignore it and concentrate on the music."

With all these headaches involved with rock-n-roll, it is only normal to wonder what makes him want it so bad and what was the point of being a speech major?

"There are a lot of communication classes needed in this line of work," said Graham. "You have to be persuasive when you're running around trying to get gigs and my background in public relations helped us a lot when Valence needed a press kit for promotional reasons."

As far as the music degree goes, Graham is currently working on getting it, as he is going to UNCW part-time. He has been involved with the UNCW Jazz Ensemble for a few years as a bass player and credits Jazz Ensemble director Frank Bonjorno as his most influential college professor.

His mother also played a big role in directing Mark toward music. He began piano lessons in the fourth grade and after 6 years of that began to develop a desire to play the guitar.

"As the typical story goes, went out and bought this beat-up old guitar for $25 when I was 14 years old and taught myself how to play."

Since those high school days, Mark has played with several bands and once in 1985 for a very special occasion.

"I was with a band called 'Confusion' and we jammed one afternoon at the Greenfield Amphitheater in conjunction with Live Aid and the National Broadcasters Association of America. We raised $1000 for the Live Aid relief program and it felt really good to be a part of that," Graham recalled.

Because getting a gig like that one or any other one for that matter is not always steady, Mark records concerts for the UNCW Music Department and has begun teaching guitar lessons on the side.

When asked about future plans and goals, a whole list is rattled off. Gaining a second degree in music, taking the band on the road, doing some studio recordings of original work, and someday if the music doesn't work out, Graham said he would possibly like to land a public relations position with a multinational corporation.

It seems as though "PGS" never even crossed this young, self-confident artist's mind.

Concluded Graham, "I know a lot of people who have their job but love the money. I disagree with that way for me. I define success not solely in terms of how much money I make. To me it's more of a feeling—like the feeling I get from my music."

How Safe Is UNCW's Campus?

By Chad Adams
Managing Editor

Public safety at UNCW is a subject which concerns everyone involved with the university, and in the past few years the Office of Residence Life and the UNCW Police Department have made several changes to improve the overall safety of the UNCW campus.

"Very good measures are taken to insure the safety of every student, but student responsibility is the most important aspect of crime prevention on this campus," said Charlie Maimone, dean of Residence Life.

Chief Joseph Johnson, director of Public Safety, listed several factors which contribute to the rise of crime on campus. Primarily, school groups tend to increase crime because there are more people able to commit crimes or be victims of them.

UNCW's police force have had to deal with the problems of growing student population this school year especially. The growing enrollment at UNCW has forced the formation of more evening and night classes, which raises the crime potential. Night events and classes are factors because they provide the criminal a time when fewer people are nearby and the target is in the dark.

Parties and bars are also invitations for crime, especially vandalism, because intoxicated people tend to become destructive. The most important factor in the cause of crime is the abandonment of common sense, such as not caring about locking doors or knowing about your surroundings, and when this occurs, "then the potential for being victimized is incredible," said Johnson.

There are numerous ways that the administration, the police, and the Office of Residence Life have helped to decrease the potential for crime on the campus.

The shuttle service offered on campus provides a safe method by which students can travel about on campus after dark. It is driven by students and runs on a schedule from the residence halls to the other university buildings on the main campus.

A new program instigated this year on campus are the "walk-throughs". These are simple rounds made by the police through the residence halls and on campus apartments every night. During the course of an evening between the hours of 8 p.m. and 8 a.m. officers "walk-through" every hall or pod at least three times.

These "walk-throughs" add security to the residents while discouraging the potential for crime without imposing on the students by creating curfews.

Another recent addition that has helped immensely in the prevention of crime in the residence halls is the night receptionist program. In this program a student is assigned to a particular residence hall, and that student's job is to allow the residents to come and go as they please, but to question or prevent those who are not residents from entering the building.

The students in this program work from 9 p.m. until 3 a.m. on weeknights and from 9 p.m. until 4 p.m. on weekends (Friday and Saturday nights). The success of this program cannot be accurately rated, but Maimone said that the night receptionists "have turned away 6,000 non-residents in the past year from the residence halls and those non-residents can be viewed as potential criminals."

A fact that is not well publicized at UNCW is that the campus has 60 public phones. These phones are located within the residence halls, buildings and outdoors allowing any student to be moments away from a phone.

Additional lighting on campus has been a deterrent for crime by eliminating shadows where crime occurs most often and allowing students to see such things as pay phones more clearly.

The campus police department, according to Johnson, is equipped to handle any situation should it arise.

City police are called in only "if there is a complex scene and sophisticated equipment is necessary," said Johnson.

Other important aspects involving safety on the UNCW campus are how police handle a crime-related situation, what choices police have in handling the situation, and are those crimes being repeated by the same offender.

When police encounter a crime related situation, whether it be an act of vandalism, burglary, or violence, they have four choices on how to handle it. Their first choice would be to verbally warn the offender without taking actual action.

The second would be to write up that incident and refer that person, if they are a student, to the Office of Residence Life for disciplinary action.

A third choice would be to arrest the offender and file charges against him. The final and most drastic measure would be to arrest the offender, file charges against him, and refer him to the Office of Residence Life.

"In the past year our office has seen 150 students, which constitutes less than 10% of the on campus residents, on disciplinary charges and less than 2% of those offenders have had to be seen again," said Maimone.

According to Johnson, crime on the UNCW campus falls into the following four categories of offense. The first category is larceny, which includes any crime that involved theft, whether auto of within the residence halls. There were 253 offenses of larceny committed on the UNCW campus in 1987.

Vandalism is another category, which is defined as any damage occurring to campus property. The police department recorded 72 cases of vandalism last year.

UNCW had 32 burglaries, or illegal entries onto a premise with intent to commit a crime, in 1987.

In the final category, substance abuse, there were only 7 cases (which includes DWI, possession or sale of illegal substances) recorded by UNCW police in 1987.

One interesting fact that Bill Dawson, captain/coordinator for Police Operations at UNCW, pointed out was that in his nine years of police service at UNCW, he has "never investigated a forcible entry involving the breaking in of a door or the shattering of a window."

The Office of Residence Life took a survey in January 1987 of all the residents in the campus halls and apartments, which gave an accurate depiction of how residents felt about their safety. The survey showed that 97% of UNCW residents felt "extremely safe."

Another positive note on campus crime is that it is, "mostly committed by residents rather than outsiders," said Johnson. This may not seem positive, but consider how much easier it would be to identify and locate a student rather than an outsider.

Both Johnson and Maimone felt that the campus in general consisted of good people who were concerned with their environment and thus were helpful in the prevention of crime.

They further recognized the importance of student responsibility and felt that it, above all else, was the most important and effective means by which crime is prevented and safety emphasized.

It would be ridiculous to say that people are completely protected by the Office of Residence Life or the police, but "if anybody is using common sense and is aware of their surroundings when they are extremely safe on this campus," said Johnson.

Lee Barnhill

"I am neither pro or anti administration, I am pro-students"

By Alise Ellis
Staff Writer

Green and yellow signs scatter UNCW, urging students to vote Lee Barnhill for President of the Student Government Association, in the March 22 election.

"I want to unify and bring credibility back to the SGA," said Barnhill, a Castle Hayne native and sophomore majoring in Political Science.

As Representative at Large for 1987/88, Barnhill said he watched the SGA lose credibility with students because of the battle between the executive and legislative branch of government.

According to Barnhill the President and Vice President of the SGA have totally opposing viewpoints, which resulted in a torn Senate.

"I want to put the SGA back to work for the students," said Barnhill.

His programs are, SGA Works which includes an SGA retreat for the Senators, enabling them to set goals for SGA, and a student pamphlet explaining what SGA does for them.

He also wants to increase RA benefits, including higher pay, and possibly a single room occupancy. Seahawk 1990 is devised to prepare the SGA for the future growth of UNCW, and Operation Wilmington is designed to encourage more campus involvement in the Wilmington community.

Barnhill also plans to create a new position in the SGA by designating a business manager. Barnhill said he wanted tighter control of the almost quarter of a million dollar SGA budget through day-to-day contact with a manager, in order to avoid the current financial problems of this year's administration.

Barnhill does not believe his affiliation with Delta Tau Delta will sway the Senate.

"I was in SGA before I was in Delta Tau Delta. I voted to keep the Seahawk open and went against Lee King. I vote for what's best for the students," said Barnhill.

He also said he did not support the Media Pub Board leaving the SGA and running university publications without SGA approval.

Barnhill said he would not rely on the views of UNCW administration.

"I am neither pro or anti administration, I am pro students," said Barnhill.

Barnhill is not endorsing a candidate for Vice President, on the basis that he can work well with both candidates.

Karla Alston

"You don't need to hide things when dealing with public money"

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

Karla Alston is a presidential hopeful for the upcoming 1988/89 school year. She is a junior from Wilson, NC, a member of Delta Sigma Theta sorority, and a business major. Through the present position of SGA Vice President Karla Alston has had first-hand experience with student government.

As a candidate for the office of president and an active member in student government, Alston sees areas where SGA needs improvement. Her first and foremost goal is to restructure the SGA to get more students involved. She would like to schedule events that mix on and off campus students, examples include back-to-school-dances and formal gatherings open to all students.

Many UNCW students are apathetic regarding student government. "I want to change that and make students feel a part of SGA," says Alston.

The SGA's $240,000 budget for 87/88 and the estimated quarter of a million budget for next year is derived from student fees paid by everyone enrolled. Unfortunately, those who are not involved in clubs or affiliated organizations see very little of that money.

Alston wants to create activities and an atmosphere through SGA that, "gives students a reason for involvement."

entire student body involved by making these seats attainable for anyone interested.

"The SGA and administration should work as a liaison," said Alston in response to allegations made by present SGA president, Lee King, of her being pro-administration. She would like to work closely with both, but if a difference were to arise between SGA and administration she would stand up for the students.

She has several ideas which would make appropriate allocations for the UNCW publications. "I don't want SGA to seem like a censor and am willing to do what's necessary to keep that from happening," said Alston.

Alston wants the students to not only help in making decisions but also feels they should have complete open access to expenditure records. She commented in regards to SGA monies, "You don't need to hide things when dealing with public money."

Overall, Alston wants to change the face of Student Government from that of a closed door to an open one. She feels very strongly that the SGA should be dedicated to working for and with the student body.

New Sorority Joins Greek System at UNCW

By Scott Wheeler
Staff Writer

UNCW has a new sorority this semester, founded by four innovative students. The Gamma Delta Chi sorority's charter was approved March 2.

The four founding members are Kirkey Moore, who is the sorority's President; Francine Mitchell, Vice President; Angela Robbins, Secretary; and Sara Schilling, Treasurer. They currently have twenty-six sisters and hope to gain a national sponsor by next semester.

Moore, Mitchell, and Schilling met last summer while working as orientation leaders. Robbins and Mitchell have been friends since junior high.

"We got the idea to start a sorority when we wanted to join one, but could decide which to join," said Schilling. "We decided to combine all their good points into one new sorority."

The four young women met at Schilling's beach house to discuss starting their sorority. They appointed Moore as president, and divided the other offices according to each one's personal interest.

The Gamma Delta Chi plan to promote Greek life on campus by participating in Greek Week (March 18-24), various service projects such as working for Hospice, and assisting in festivities for the Union's fifth birthday party on March 21.

On February 26, they had their first mixer with the Delta Tau Delta fraternity. The Delta brothers responded very favorably towards the new sorority. "Their enthusiasm and morale is really high," said one Delta brother.

The Gamma Delta Chi plan to take part in a few mixers with the other fraternities, also. On March 2, they joined all the other sororities in a skating party at Sportsworld.

Moore commented on the campus response to the sorority. "At first, we were worried about opposition from the other sororities because we were a new sorority on campus. Instead, they extended a helping hand and offered us a lot of support, which enabled us to make the progress that we have made so far."

The Gamma Delta Chi wish to thank all of the other Greek organizations that have assisted them in their quest to become an active part of Greek life on campus.

"We've accomplished more than we dreamed of, and with continued support from campus, things will keep getting better," commented Schilling.

SGA and Greek involvement Who Is To Blame?

People often have complained about various things and with a little incentive and action, in this country, those things often get changed. On this campus people have complained about a variety of things with good reason and have brought about change.

The school built a track recently because it was in the best interest of the school and its students saw a need for one; ARA has made an effort to improve its food as a result of student complaints and actions taken by those students who weren't satisfied, parking has not improved dramatically but it has improved some on campus as a result of a more informed enrollment (people now know that parking lots such as the ones located around Trask and Kenan Auditorium are usually open for parking and have started walking to class).

Recently, students at Gaudelot College started a protest in an attempt to demonstrate their disapproval of the hiring of a non-deaf president. As a result of their non-violent actions, patience and their fair demands the board of trustees did hire a deaf president and thus the campus was put at ease.

Over the past two years, and I'm sure long before that, students have complained about the Greek involvement in the SGA, but these complaints have never resulted in any sort of action.

The complaints about Greek involvement in the SGA are fair. The SGA's current executive branch is entirely Greek, this includes the president, vice-president, treasurer, attorney, general, and chief justice. Greeks compose roughly 65% of the entire SGA body including both elected and appointed positions.

On a broader scale, Greeks represent 2% of the enrollment at this school. In all fairness this means that 65% of the student government represents 2% of the student body. The remaining 98% of the student population is represented by a mere 35% of this governing organization.

The complaints thicken as it is common knowledge that seven elected members of the SGA were from one fraternity out of a total of thirty five elected seats in the SGA. One-fifth of the entire elected body of the SGA were members of one fraternity. The obvious question is "how can this overwhelming number of Greeks represent the broad range of student interests?" and the obvious answer is that they can't.

The saddest part of this problem is that the Greeks aren't to blame for this problem, the other 98% of the student body is. The Greeks are actively involved in all aspects of campus life. They are in tune to what's going on and express an interest to get involved and change things that they don't like. When an election is coming up, they know about it. If there is going to be an open forum to discuss problems on campus, they are present. In short, they stay informed!

There have been complaints about student apathy for quite a while and I use to think that the word was ill used. Now I know it's true! People in general don't want to get involved, they would rather complain and criticize.

This country was founded by people who wanted to change things and we as citizens should be grateful that we still have that right. The majority of this school's enrollment is led by a select group and poorly represented by its populace as a whole. Only 10% of the Soviet Union's population are members of the communist party yet that party rules the remaining 90% of the nation and it isn't hard to visualize, based on current facts, that one day this country could become as poorly represented.

One can also not forget the 35% of the SGA that is not Greek. These people are to be commended for their involvement. They truly have shown an interest in the school, have found out how to get where they are, and have raised their votes from the student body. They also realize that although they are in the majority, the position they hold makes them as a political entity are sorely outnumbered.

There are even people that are involved and active in this school that aren't typical students. These non-traditional students have made the effort to get in the SGA and they aren't Greek. They have two seats that are guaranteed to their group and it would seem from a limited viewpoint that these would be the least involved of all student groups as they necessarily have a totally different set of concerns than those of the typical college student.

A possible solution to the problem at hand would be to limit the number of seats that the Greeks can hold. For a short time, about four seconds, this seems like a good idea, then the logical mind realizes that everyone who is Greek is not the same. They are people that have one common interest, true, but they also have different interests as individuals and can represent different aspects of campus life. The problem recently was that there were at least six members of the SGA at one point that were in the same fraternity and lived in the same residence hall. There is no train of logical thought that could possibly rationalize this as a fair representation for the schools' students.

Limits on who should represent what should be looked into. There are seats set aside specifically for non-trads, why not for people from the hall governments on campus, why not from commuters, or minorities. In a democracy there is supposed to be a fair representation of all people. That's why there are not fifty representatives from Idaho and just two from New York. That would not be fair and the people would protest strongly if something of that dimension were to be attempted, yet we as students let this occur year in and year out without anything more than a sneer or comment.

It must be clarified that the Greek organizations on campus are not the groups to be held responsible for the problems of representation in the SGA, someone has to run for office and they are the primary group that makes the effort to run. If they didn't run who would? In the future, the way things are done on campus, do something other than bitch! Run for office and do something about it or support someone that will; most importantly vote.

Student Expresses Concern About Upcoming Elections

Editor:

The Student Government Association at UNCW needs a big change and Karla F. Alston, is the answer. Karla has exactly what it takes to get this school back on the right track. She is currently serving as your Vice-President and strongly feels that she is qualified to be your President. Karla loves to help students. I know this because when I came for orientation she took the time to encourage me to get involved in the school and to preregister for my classes. She didn't treat me like a nobody.

In response to comments that were made about her being pro-administration, I have personally discussed this issue with her and know for a fact that the students at UNCW are her first priority. I know that if there was any conflict between the students and administration, Karla would fight the hardest for the students.

With this in mind I encourage each student—undergraduate, graduate and non-traditional, to vote for Karla Fontaine Alston on March 22nd. Take the time to make a difference. Let's put someone who cares about the students in office this time!

Columnist Defended By Letter

Editor:

This is written to the readers who complain about the contents of Rick Cairns' column, or those among us who can't tell what's intended as humor without a syllabus, whichever comes first. If you can't appreciate his style, fine, but that doesn't qualify you to condemn him.

It's dangerous to take EVERYTHING you read seriously, particularly in a newspaper or magazine. If people were to take Don Rickles seriously, he'd get lynched. About 99.99999% of all humor is based on pratfalls and shortcomings. His fans realize that he's not malicious.

The same applies to Rick; he's just poking fun at people and things good-naturedly. He wasn't ridiculing our postmaster, just the position. For those who thought he was ridiculing women, it was plain to me that the feminine deodorant 'commercials were his target, not the users of the products.

Humor should not have to be explained; that would ruin it. So, for those of you who can't appreciate tongue-in-cheek humor, keep trying; you're missing out on a lot. If you don't like the color of his language, you might not want to watch television, either.

Ode To Spring Break
Oh thank the Lord for spring break

there's nothing like a bunch of drunks on the make.

It's time for us college students to let go, and for our morals to reach an all time low.

We all gathered on the designated beach, we spent the days drinking 48 beers each, while riding around streets lined with frat patrols and spend the nights puking out of our nostrils.

I.M. Wasted

good idea of what goes on in those cities.

Life is turned upside down for these students. Instead of going to classes in the morning, they are sucking a warm beer with a glazed donut.

Instead of listening to a boring lecture — they are listening to a bunch of BS about how wasted they were the night before.

Instead of comparing test grades — they are comparing hangovers. You know the stories — "my hangover is worse than death." Or "I can't figure out if this is still yesterday's hangover or if it is a new one, or a combination of both." That's a philosophical as the week gets.

Of course there are the fools who never heard of sunscreens. You've seen them, they put out a glow or haze which makes you wince just to look at them. Many of them deny any pain, but put them on the back and they can set a world record in the high-jump.

Shooting beers becomes a common sight. It's incredible how beer can shoot out of one's ears, and it's even more incredible that these guys think that they look cool. That's what every girl wants — a drunk with beer all over his hair and clothes.

All that wild drinking leads to wild puking. I've seen it transformed into an art form. You have your basic commode huggers, and you've got your freestyles who can blow beers from any position at any time. The real winners can actually vomit and drink simultaneously. I respect that.

I have the existential puker. He feels that if nobody saw or heard him up-chuck then he didn't; then he brags about his manliness.

These guinea usually make the National news. I bet that makes for some proud parents. Can you imagine some parent's neighbors saying, "I saw your son on the news — he threw-up on the camera — isn't he going to be a criminal lawyer?"

It seems that each year some fool falls from his tenth floor balcony. That does not make for a fun spring break.

I could picture after the break, a student will ask the usual "how was your break?" He would reply, "It was great until I plunged to my death — but I was on National TV."

Did I reach a new all time low? Maybe a corpse will send a nasty letter demanding that I apologize to all the dead out there.

For all you wild ones that went to Daytona — welcome back to the real world. Hopefully you have enough brain cells left to at least remember your schedules. If not, I'll see you wandering around the campus.

"What Do I Want For Myself"

We were at anchor under a sunny blue sky surrounded by incredible azure waters off Gunn Cay just south of Bimini in the Bahamas. The water was a little cool but I knew there was a beautiful reef hidden under the waters just off the stern of our 65-foot sailboat. I put on my fins and face mask and asked who was going with me. One person roused themselves off the warm deck and joined me in admiring the beautiful scenery with multi-colored coral and fish and even the gift of observing a small nurse shark resting in a hole in the coral.

When we came back about an hour later, my friend said, "thanks for making me go, I was so comfortable I almost talked myself out of getting in the cool water again."

We talked about that at one of our get-togethers later and one of those learnings about what is important in life emerged from our conversation. Simply stated, it goes "it is easy to sell out the adventures of life to comfort."

For some this was a new insight; for me it was reinforcement for a fundamental value that I have long since discovered and held. In that "real" world that we swim, ate, sailed, explored and lived in, it was easy to live in the present moment, enjoy each other, and feel close to what is true and good. It was all too easy to look back into our more normal but "distorted" life and see how easily we trap ourselves into giving up the adventure and avoiding risks that change, with all its promise, demands of us. Most of us grow up with limited life experiences in our early years and often take on a variety of responsibilities both educationally and financially that leave us believing that we are confined in what is possible for us to achieve in our lives. We tend to want to reduce as much stress as possible in our lives and if we are able to do that, we find ourselves experiencing comfort which is pleasurable.

The problem is that being comfortable often slides us into a sense of complacency about our lives that prevents us from breaking out of our familiar and comfortable place. The end result of this process for many people when they reach mid-life is to find work and family filled with boredom and the loss of a sense of purpose and meaning.

You can avoid that trap if you are willing to begin to challenge yourself to not give in to your desires for comfort. We too often sell out our potential to comfort! We find all sorts of reasons not to take advantage of opportunities that come our way. One of the big excuses is "I can't afford it." Often times that is a lie for when we decide that some experience is worth having, most folks find a way to make that experience happen in spite of limited finances. Several of the people who went on the cruise began the process by thinking they couldn't afford it and were able to tell a variety of neat stories about how the funds became available to them or how they were able to put aside money for a year so they could go. Remember, comfort breeds excuses for not taking part in the adventures of life. Another excuse is, "I'm too afraid." Fear, if unchallenged, controls us and I believe it is worth seeking whatever help we need to find support for challenging our fears. Everyone I know who has dealt with their excuses and taken advantage of an opportunity that felt like an adventure, were glad that they had done so.

The place to begin is to ask yourself over and over, "what do I want for myself?", what kind of trips, what kind of adventures, what kind of people do I want to meet, etc., etc.? If you discover there is something you would like to have happen for you or something you would like to do, pay attention to the excuses you raise for not participating and then begin to challenge those excuses; determine not to let them be in control of your choice. The adventures are all around you if you are willing to ask questions, to check things out and be determined to take a risk at giving up comfort for the possibility of a new adventure.

Crackdown On Fraternity Drinking

Officials at 2 campuses last week tried to crack down on fraternity drinking last week, but a West Point cadet alleged he was driven from school because he wouldn't engage in practices other campuses define as hazing.

Third-year cadet John Edwards said U.S. Military Academy officials dismissed him from school because he wouldn't participate in the "humiliating and degrading" hazing of West Point freshmen.

West Point spokesman Maj.

Bruce K. Bell, while refusing to talk about Edwards specifically, said the "Fourth Class System" Edwards refused to participate in was specifically designed to teach cadets how to be leaders.

Rutgers University President Edward J. Bloustein, meanwhile, on Feb. 15 banned all fraternity and sorority parties during James C. Callahan, 18 died during a Lambda Chi Alpha hazing session.

Bloustein also said he'd try to get Lambda Chi Alpha, which reportedly forced all its pledges to "drink 'til you're sick" at a Feb. 12 hazing, kicked off the New Brunswick, N.J., campus.

At the same time, the University of Rhode Island's Interfraternity Council, responding to faculty complaints that students were showing up as Friday morning classes hung over and lethargic, voted Feb. 13 to halt the Thursday night fraternity parties that had been a URI tradition for decades.

Film competition announced

The Streisand Center, in cooperation with the West Valley Kehillah, California, invites applications for its Sixth Annual Awards for Student Film Makers. The Awards comprise a $1,000 prize for the best completed student film on a Jewish theme and a $1,000 prize for best student film proposal on a Jewish theme.

Students in either category must furnish proof of college enrollment in a currently accredited University program and must provide a resume (in triplicate) together with references. Guidelines and application can be obtained by writing to the Streisand Film Awards, c/o the Streisand Center, 900 Hilgard Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90024.

The West Valley Kehillah is also pleased to invite applications for the 2nd Annual Recognitions Awards. These awards for the best film by an independent film maker on a Jewish theme comprise a guaranteed screening of the winning film(s) in the forthcoming Streisand Center and West Valley Kehillah seasons and the presentation of an Awards certificate at a public ceremony to be held in January 1989.

For further information on the Recognition Awards please contact the West Valley Kehillah at 22622 Vanowen St., Canoga Park, CA 91307 (818) 346-5962 & (818) 346-8940.

The Streisand Center was established in 1981 with an endowment from Barbara Streisand. Its aim is to illuminate the Jewish arts by highlighting the best in Jewish creativity.

The West Valley Kehillah, California, is a communal organization established to strengthen the vitality and bonds within the larger Jewish community.

The University Foundation Visiting Distinguished Professor Program will offer a master creative writing class in fiction to be taught Spring 1989 semester at UNC-Wilmington. The course will be taught by Novelist Charles Johnson, the recipient of a 1989 Guggenheim Fellowship, who has written two novels Faith and the Good Thing and Ordering Tale. The Sorcerer's Apprentice, a short story collection and Being and Face: Black Writing Since 1970, a collection of critical essays. Charles Johnson is Fiction Editor of the Seattle Review. The course is open to any writer of fiction. Manuscripts will be screened by Charles Johnson. Submit prose manuscripts (a maximum of fifteen pages) to:

Charles Fort, Director
Creative Writing Program
UNC-W
Wilmington, N.C. 28403
Deadline: June 1, 1988.

Tonight Show drummer Ed Shaughnessy comes to festival

by Nancy K. Hill

Ed Shaughnessy, drummer for Johnny Carson's "Tonight Show" band, will be the featured musician at the sixth annual UNCW Jazz Festival to be held on Saturday, March 26 and Sunday, March 27. He will perform at 3 p.m., on Sunday, in Kenan Auditorium. General Admission to Sunday's performance is $5, senior citizens and students $2, students with UNCWLID free.

Shaughnessy's performance with the 7 O'clock Jazz Ensemble will include arrangements of "Sun Swing," "On the Move," "Saturday Night Special," "Mr. C's Boogie," and "Salt Peanuts."

Also performing will be the UNCW Jazz Fusion Group and the award-winning UNCW Jazz Combo with compositions to include "Round Midnight" and "Eye of the Tiger."

On Saturday, Shaughnessy will lead a drum clinic from 10 a.m. to 12 noon in room 114 of Kenan Hall. He will critique jazz ensembles from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. Ensembles to perform include Wilmington's Jazz-A-Tazz, East Carolina University Jazz Ensemble, UNC-Charlotte Jazz Ensemble, Caldwell-Community College Jazz Ensemble, Tarboro High School Jazz Ensemble, and Orange County High School. Saturday's events are free and open to the public.

Shaughnessy has been a regular featured instrumentalist on the "Tonight Show" for 24 years. He is the author of two books, New Time Signatures in Jazz Drumming and Big Band Drummers' Leading Guide. He has been a faculty member of New York University and is the most sought-after drumset clinician in international music education. His achievements and honors have culminated in his organization of a new 7-piece ensemble, Ed Shaughnessy Energy Force.

Shaughnessy's appearance is sponsored by Selmer/Ludwig, McPadden Music, the UNCW creative arts department and the UNCW jazz program. For further information, contact the music division at 395-3390.

Musician Update

From Musician Magazine

Led Zeppelin, universally accepted as the first heavy-metal band, is even more popular today than when they started in the early '70s. Record sales have been steady for fifteen years and their music is still heard on the radio and in school years across the country.

Now former Led Zeppelin-mates Robert Plant and Jimmy Page are playing together again on Plant's new album, Now and Zen. In the March issue of Muscleman Magazine, Robert Plant stops the Zeppelin reunion rumors before they can start: "I don't think it's a good idea at all. It was a great band and you can't get it together like Deep Purple and take it out there and look at it incredibly old. Bonzo (the late John Bonham, Zeppelin's drummer) was the main part of the band. It would be terrible for Page and me to try to re-create that."

Plant disclosed that there are "loads of tapes, films and stuff, that would make your hair stand on end." Unfortunately, we'll just have to take his word for it, because he also promises they'll never be released. "The motive of doing something like that would be questionable. People can want it forever and a day. It's a little too tacky."

As for why he chose Page to play on Now and Zen, Plant told Muscleman: "I wanted to get some of that stagger, you know? That kind of panache that he's got. And really, I wanted my old partner around for a bit. I wanted to see him swaying around, leaning around so his hair was dangling on the floor. Everybody was going, 'God, look at that man! Play! And I was sitting there proud.'"

"Now Page and I get offered everything. Everything. Women, little boys, money, cocaine, the lot, just to go back and do that again. You can't do the same thing forever and say that it's free expression, that you are expressing yourself artistically. You can't just do it because it's safe."

7,392 Musicians Throw Their Hats in the Ring

New Hampshire's well-represented, Iowa's covered, too. But the parties involved: The Jensons, The Bensons, The Willys, The Weabes, Walters, Gomers and The Groovers-are not your typical candidates.

They are entrants in Musician Magazine's second annual Best Unsigned Band Contest. A total of 1,962 bands are looking for the nomination. If prizes were awarded for names alone, the polls might predict early success for Fat Elvis, Disgraceband, Any of Several Weasels, One Fish Two Fish and Algebra Suicide.

The bands represent 49 states (wake up and make the music, North Dakota!) and four continents. Their music is nearly as diverse as their names: His Boy Elroy, Rude Buddha, Stained Rug Theory, The Eunuchs, Bite the Wax Tadpole, Surreal McCoys and Water the Dog.

The editors and publishers of Musician are screening the tapes; final decisions will be made by celebrity judges Mark Knopfler, Elvis Costello, T-Bone Burnett and Mitchell Froom. Ten first-place winners will be featured on a Musician/Warner Bros. album. One Grand Prize winner will take home an 8-track recording studio.

The primaries, however have just begun. Will the winners be Those Melvins? Fish Mallet? Midget Packs A Rod? Stay tuned...

On Stage...

by Tamara Drew

British/American Jam session was a definite success!!

There has definitely been some great jammin' in the Port City during the past few weeks. The recent visit by the British ship HMS Bristol inspired what became an "international musical incident." Actually, there were several musical incidents before the great ship and her crew of over 500 drifted back to sea.

The ship docked downtown on Friday morning, and the fact that myself and several other CFMA members were already socializing "to beat the band" (with British musicians) before dark that night was a good indication that there was much musical pleasure to come.

I took several players out to hear Three Hits (the Cary rock band) at Front Street News on Saturday night, but not until I'd had the chance to turn them on to Charlie Daniel's Powder Keg album and Loose Change, the killer debut album by the band Loose Change, whom I met at last year's Volunteer Jam. Good ole Southern Rock and about a case of Duvelweiser got Brit players Kev Donnelly and Gerald Mole (and their charming friend Graham Lloyd) all fired up for more hot music.

Which is just what I gave them. We proceeded on to hear Three Hits, and their music absolutely delighted our new friends. CFMA president Duke Ladd met us later in the evening, and we proceeded on to a multi-player jam hosted by Gary Allen's band out at Carolina Beach. Donnelly, a bassist, joined right in, and I knew that the big jam session slated for the next day was bound to be a success. Which it was.

It was a great feeling to witness the musical interaction that went on at Front Street News that day.

'Spring Fling Cabaret' Kid's benefit Saturday

The friends of Jazz-A-Ma-Tazz, a community-based, nonprofit children's jazz choir will sponsor the "Spring Fling Cabaret" benefit Saturday, March 26th from 9pm to 1am at the ILA Hall, 5th and Kidder Streets in Wilmington.

Festivities will include a live jazz floor show, featuring Ray Codrington, Reggie Codrington, Charles Dungey, Millard Bell, Larry Price, Rudy Tyson and Cynthia Tyson. Between the live performances, a disc jockey will play music ranging from the Big Band era up through the 80's for dancing. There will be plenty of food and a photographer will be available to snap photos. Door prizes will also be awarded.

A donation of $8.00 is being asked for the tickets. Proceeds will be used to help pay expenses to the 1988 Music Fest competition in Orlando, Florida on May 4-8. Tickets are on sale at the Wilmington Journal, S. 7th Street and the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, 20 Market Street.

The jam session kicked off with a jazz set by CFMA members Duke Ladd, Danny Pera, and Bill Cooper. Vocalists Amy McComb and Craig Stewart did several numbers apiece before banjo player Steve Kovack, guitarist Eric Bruton, mandolin player Susan Bondurant and drummer Michael Byrd took the stage for a set of folk/bluegrass numbers. By that time, Rick Cairns had appeared to collect notes for his column (at right) so I left subsequent note-taking to him.

Before it was over with, a total of 22 players jammed, and numerous local and English music lovers had enjoyed the jammin'. Evidently the Royal Navy players enjoyed it, too, since I saw several of them at the Blue Society Jam held on Tuesday, the night before the ship departed.

We hope to have another jam when Donnelly and his fellow musicians cruise through the area next year, since having an international musical incident can be a lot of fun for everyone. I guarantee it was a blast for me.

Comedy at Jake's

Wilmington's community theatre, the Thalian Association, will present the comedy "The Seven Year Itch" Wednesday, March 16th thru Monday, March 21.

Performances will be held at Jake's of Jacob's Run, 208 Market Street at 8pm nightly with a 3pm matinee on Sunday, March 20.

The comedy features 12 volunteer performers directed by Robbie Stone performing on a setting designed by Hunter Thompson.

Tickets may be reserved by calling the Thalian central box office at 763-3398 or 763-9328 daily, Monday thru Saturday, from 10am until 5:30pm or by going to the box office which is located at 18 Princess Street.

Pink Floyd in concert May 4

Returning to the United States after performing to sold out crowds in Asia and Australia, Pink Floyd's David Gilmour and Nick Mason, together with former Floyd member, Rick Wright, will perform in Carter-Finley stadium at North Carolina State University in Raleigh on Wednesday May 4, 1988. It will be the first outdoor stadium date in North Carolina in ten years. The show will be one of a number of stadium dates in America on this the final leg of their tour in support of their album "A Momentary Lapse of Reason", their first release since 1982. Floyd's hugely successful "Dark Side Of The Moon" has been on the album charts for a record-breaking 710 weeks.

The band promises even more special effects than those used during the two sold out shows in Chapel Hill last October. The stadium tour stage and equipment

by Rick Cairns
Staff Writer

I recently attended a major league jam session on a Sunday afternoon. A total of twenty-two local and English musicians participated in this blues and jazz show at Front Street News.

It'll be the first to admit that I was unawares of the wealth of musical talent in this area.

The Seahawk's own Tamara Drew (AKA The Music Maven) organized the event which took place Feb. 28th. The English ship The HMS Bristol was docked here, and Drew took advantage of it by inviting their musicians to join Wilmington's best, and of course, they were all for it.

Cairns

Members of the Cape Fear Musicians Association and the Blues Society Of The Lower Cape Fear (along with various and sundry other local players) participated in the event. The music started around 3 o'clock and continued until 8:30, and it was absolutely free.

I couldn't think of a better way to have spent a rainy Sunday afternoon, and I obviously wasn't the only one who felt that way, because there was a good turnout. Many people struggled in and drank a beer or two, and others sipped coffee.

Unfortunately I had to miss the first two hours, but the great mood that Drew was in assured me that it was a success. The musicians took turns with their various talents. Five or six would take the stage at a time.

The local favorite, Polar Bear Shaw was kicking ass on his guitar as I walked in -- and the music never let up.

I was impressed with vocalist Art Shuey, who formed the Blues Society. He could sing the blues and play the juke harp, plus smoke a cigarette simultaneously! Now that takes impeccable timing! A trio of Brits were accompanying them: Jerry Philo on drums, Kevin Donnelly on bass and Butch Cassidy on keyboards. (Yes, that's his real name.)

It's amazing how good a group of musicians can sound even though they never jammed together.

Later, local talent Larry Price brought his saxophone to the stage and did his stuff. Price sounded great, and he looked cool. I mean, he looks like a sax player. You'd have to see him to know what I mean.

Greg Bell took over the keyboards, Ed Crowe on the drums and Tom Blake on the guitar along with Brit Gerald Mole on bass.

The show finished with Ricky Gardner and Willie Earl Varen on drums. Perry Musselwhite was reluctant to play his guitar, but he joined the bunch on his juke harp.

Hopefully Ms. Drew will arrange a similar show in the future. I haven't seen jamming like this since I lived in Austin, Texas, and if you know anything about music, then you know of all the talent that comes out of that city.

is being transported by twenty-three eighteen wheelers and will require four days to setup. It will require over eight-thousand person hours of work to setup and take down the show.

Pro Motion Concerts President, Richard "Gus" Gusler, announced that tickets for the show will go on sale Friday, March 18 at 10:00 A.M. at all Telcelon locations and by calling Telcelon at (800) 233-4050. Pro Motion Concerts, a Raleigh based company, promoted the two sold out Floyd concerts in Chapel Hill last October. For more information call (919) 828-1277.

After Dark... with Tamara Drew

On Stage...

by Tamara Drew

British/American Jam session was a definite success!!

There has definitely been some great jammin' in the Port City during the past few weeks. The recent visit by the British ship HMS Bristol inspired what became an "international musical incident." Actually, there were several musical incidents before the great ship and her crew of over 500 drifted back to sea.

The ship docked downtown on Friday morning, and the fact that myself and several other CFMA members were already socializing "to beat the band" (with British musicians) before dark that night was a good indication that there was much musical pleasure to come.

I took several players out to hear Three Hits (the Cary rock band) at Front Street News on Saturday night, but not until I'd had the chance to turn them on to Charlie Daniel's Powder Keg album and Loose Change, the killer debut album by the band Loose Change, whom I met at last year's Volunteer Jam. Good ole Southern Rock and about a case of Budweiser got Brit players Kev Donnelly and Gerald Mole (and their charming friend Graham Lloyd) all fired up for more hot music.

Which is just what I gave them. We proceeded on to hear Three Hits, and their music absolutely delighted our new friends. CFMA president Duke Ladd met us later in the evening, and we proceeded on to a multi-player jam hosted by Gary Allen's band out at Carolina Beach. Donnelly, a bassist, joined right in, and I knew that the big jam session slated for the next day was bound to be a success. Which it was.

It was a great feeling to witness the musical interaction that went on at Front Street News that day.

'Spring Fling Cabaret' Kid's benefit Saturday

The friends of Jaz-A-Ma-Tazz, a community-based, nonprofit children's jazz choir will sponsor the "Spring Fling Cabaret" benefit Saturday, March 26th from 9pm to 1am at the ILA Hall, 5th and Kidder Streets in Wilmington.

Festivities will include a live jazz floor show, featuring Ray Codrington, Reggie Codrington, Charles Dungey, Millard Bell, Larry Price, Rudy Tyson and Cynthia Tyson. Between the live performances, a disc jockey will play music ranging from the Big Band era up through the 80's for dancing. There will be plenty of food and a photographer will be available to snap photos. Door prizes will also be awarded.

Individuals are encouraged to come dressed in the style of their favorite musical era, i.e. swing of the 30's, the hippie look of the 60's, etc.

A donation of $8.00 is being asked for the tickets. Proceeds will be used to help pay expenses to the 1988 Music Fest competition in Orlando, Florida on May 4-8. Tickets are on sale at the Wilmington Journal, S. 7th Street and the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, 20 Market Street.

by Rick Cairns
Staff Writer

I recently attended a major league jam session on a Sunday afternoon. A total of twenty-two local and English musicians participated in this blues and jazz show at Front Street News.

I'll be the first to admit that I was unaware of the wealth of musical talent in this area.

The Seahawk's own Tamara Drew (AKA The Music Maven) organized the event which took place Feb. 28th. The English ship The HMS Bristol was docked here, and Drew took advantage of it by inviting their musicians to join Wilmington's best, and of course, they were all for it.

Cairns

Members of the Cape Fear Musicians Association and the Blues Society Of The Lower Cape Fear (along with various and sundry other local players) participated in the event. The music started around 3 o'clock and continued until 8:30, and it was absolutely free.

I couldn't think of a better way to have spent a rainy Sunday afternoon, and I obviously wasn't the only one who felt that way, because there was a good turnout. Many people struggled in and drank a beer or two, and others sipped coffee.

Unfortunately I had to miss the first two hours, but the great mood that Drew was in assured me that it was a success. The musicians took turns with their various talents. Five or six would take the stage at a time.

The local favorite, Polar Bear Shaw was kicking ass on his guitar as I walked in -- and the music never let up.

I was impressed with vocalist Art Shuey, who formed the Blues Society. He could sing the blues and play the juke harp, plus smoke a cigarette simultaneously! Now that takes impeccable timing. A trio of Brits were accompanying them: Jerry Philo on drums, Kevin Donnelly on bass and Butch Cassidy on keyboards. (Yes, that's his real name.)

It's amazing how good a group of musicians can sound even though they never jammed together.

Later, local talent Larry Price brought his saxophone to the stage and did his stuff. Price sounded great, and he looked cool. I mean, he looks like a sax player. You'd have to see him to know what I mean.

Greg Bell took over the keyboards, Ed Crowe on the drums and Tom Blake on the guitar along with Brit Gerald Mole on bass.

The show finished with Ricky Gardner and Willie Earl Varen on drums. Perry Musselwhite was reluctant to play his guitar, but he joined the bunch on his juke harp.

Hopefully Ms. Drew will arrange a similar show in the future. I haven't seen jamming like this since I lived in Austin, Texas, and if you know anything about music, then you know one of the talent that comes out of that city.

It's a smart idea to check out the local talent downtown -- you've got everything to gain.

is being transported by twenty-three eighteen wheelers and will require four days to setup. It will require over eight-hundred person hours of work to setup and take down the show.

Pro Motion Concerts President, Richard "Gus" Gusler, announced that tickets for the show will go on sale Friday, March 18 at 10:00 A.M. at all Teletron locations and by calling Teletron at (800) 233-4050. Pro Motion Concerts, a Raleigh based company, promoted the two sold out Floyd concerts in Chapel Hill last October. For more information call (919) 828-1277.

Film competition announced

The Streisand Center, in cooperation with the West Valley Kehillah, California, invites applications for its Sixth Annual Awards for Student Film Makers. The Awards comprise a $1,000 prize for the best completed student film on a Jewish theme and a $1,000 prize for best student film proposal on a Jewish theme.

Students in either category must furnish proof of college enrollment in a currently accredited University program and must provide a resume (in triplicate) together with references. Guidelines and application can be obtained by writing to the Streisand Film Awards, c/o the Streisand Center, 900 Hilgard Ave., Los Angeles, CA 90024.

The West Valley Kehillah is also pleased to invite applications for the 2nd Annual Recognitions Awards. These awards for the best film by an independent film maker on a Jewish theme comprise a guaranteed screening of the winning film(s) in the forthcoming Streisand Center and West Valley Kehillah seasons and the presentation of an Awards certificate at a public ceremony to be held in January 1989.

For further information on the Recognition Awards please contact the West Valley Kehillah at 2622 Vanowine St. Canoga Park, CA 91307 (818) 346-5962 & (818) 346-8940.

The Streisand Center was established in 1981 with an endowment from Barbara Streisand. Its aim is to illuminate the Jewish arts by highlighting the best in Jewish creativity.

The West Valley Kehillah, California, is a communal organization established to strengthen the vitality and bonds within the larger Jewish community.

Tonight Show drummer Ed Shaughnessy comes to festival

by Nancy K. Hill

Ed Shaughnessy, drummer for Johnny Carson's "Tonight Show" band, will be the featured musician at the sixth annual UNCW Jazz Festival to be held on Saturday, March 26 and Sunday, March 27. He will perform at 3 p.m., on Sunday, in Kenan Auditorium. General Admission to Sunday's performance is $5, senior citizens and students $2, students with UNCW ID free.

Shaughnessy's performance with the 7 O'clock Jazz Ensemble will include arrangements of "Sun Swing," "On the Move," "Saturday Night Special," "Mr. C's Boogie," and "Salt Peanuts."

Also performing will be the UNCW Jazz Fusion Group and the award-winning UNCW Jazz Combo with compositions to include "Round Midnight" and "Eye of the Tiger."

On Saturday, Shaughnessy will lead a drum clinic from 10 a.m. to 12 noon in room 114 of Kenan Hall. He will critique jazz ensembles from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. Ensembles to perform include Wilmington's Jazz-A-Tazz, East Carolina University Jazz Ensemble, UNC-Charlotte Jazz Ensemble, Caldwell-Community College Jazz Ensemble, Tarboro High School Jazz Ensemble, and Orange County High School. Saturday's events are free and open to the public.

Shaughnessy has been a regular featured instrumentalist on the "Tonight Show" for 24 years. He is the author of two books, New Time Signatures in Jazz Drumming and Big Band Drummers' Leading Guide. He has been a faculty member of New York University and is the most sought-after drum clinic in international music education. His achievements and honors have culminated in his organization of a new 7-piece ensemble, Ed Shaughnessy Energy Force.

Shaughnessy's appearance is sponsored by Selmer/Ludwig, McFadden Music, the UNCW creative arts department and the UNCW jazz program. For further information, contact the music division at 395-3390.

Musician Update

From Musician Magazine

Led Zeppelin, universally accepted as the first heavy-metal band, is even more popular today than when they started in the early '70s. Record sales have been steady for fifteen years and their music is still heard on the radio and in school years across the country.

Now former Led Zeppelin-mates Robert Plant and Jimmy Page are playing together again on Plant's new album, Now and Zen. In the March issue of Musician Magazine, Robert Plant stops the Zeppelin reunion rumors before they can start: "I don't think it's a good idea at all. It was a great band and you can't get it together like Deep Purple and take it out there and look all incredibly old. Bonzo (the late John Bonham, Zeppelin's drummer) was the main part of the band. It would be terrible for Page and me to try to re-create that."

Plant disclosed that there are "loads of tapes, films, and a stuff, that would make your hair stand on end." Unfortunately, we'll just have to take his word for it, because he also promises they'll never be released. "The movie of doing something like that would be questionable. People can want it forever and a day. It's a little too tacky."

As for why he chose Page to play on Now and Zen, Plant told Musician: "I wanted to get some of that stagger, you know? That kind of panache that he's got. And really, I wanted my old partner around for a bit. I wanted to see him swaying around, leaning around so his hair was dangling on the floor. Everybody was going, 'God, look at that man! Play!' And I was sitting there proud."

"Now Page and I get offered everything. Everything. Women, little boys, money, cocaine, the lot, just to go back and do that again. You can't do the same thing forever and say that it's free expression, that you are expressing yourself artistically. You can't just do it because it's safe."

7,392 Musicians Throw Their Hats in the Ring

New Hampshire's well-represented. Iowa's covered, too. But the parties involved: The Jensions, The Bensons, The Wilfies, The Weables, Walters, Gomers and The Groovers are not your typical candidates.

They are entrants in Musician Magazine's second annual Best Unsigned Band Contest. A total of 1,962 bands are looking for the nomination. If prizes were awarded for names alone, the polls might predict early success for Fat Elvis, Disgraceful, Any of Several Weasels, One Fish Two Fish and Algebra Suicide.

The bands represent 49 states (wake up and make the music, North Dakota!) and four continents. Their music is nearly as diverse as their names: His Boy Elroy, Rude Buddha, Stained Rug Theory, The Eunuchs, Bite the Wax Tadpole, Surreal McCoys and Water the Dog.

The editors and publishers of Musician are screening the tapes; final decisions will be made by celebrity judges Mark Knopfler, Elvis Costello, T-Bone Burnett and Mitchell Froom. Ten first-place winners will be featured on a Musician/Warner Bros. album. One Grand Prize winner will take home an 8-track recording studio.

The primaries, however have just begun. Will the winners be Those Melvins? Fish Maller? Midget Packs A Rod? Stay tuned...

Guitarist to give recital

Michael Hull, a UNC-W music major, will present a Junior Recital on Sunday, March 20, 1988 at King Hall on the UNCW campus at 8:00 p.m. Michael is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Hull of Wilmington. He has been studying classical guitar performance under Robert Nathanson for the past two years. He also has studied briefly under Brian Morris.

This will be Hull's fourth recital since August, 1987. Two of his previous three performances have been joint recitals with fellow guitarist Sam Glaitze. Hull has received a full service scholarship and also performs frequently for weddings and other social events in addition to teaching students. This recital will be partial fulfillment of the Bachelor of Creative Arts-Music Degree.

A Note From A Friend

Before I left to cover the Colonial Athletic Association Men's Basketball Tournament in Hampton, Va., I got a letter from someone I didn't expect to hear from.

As I opened the envelope, I found a picture and a letter from one of UNCW's finest basketball players and a friend of mine, Brian Rowsom.

Rowsom, UNCW's all-time leading scorer and rebounder, left for Orthez, France after the Indiana Pacers of the National Basketball Association waived him in December.

Brian Rowsom

A second-round pick of the Pacers, Rowsom went to play in France on the advice of the Pacers and hasn't regretted a single moment of it.

"The country is really beautiful and the people are very nice. I'm playing the best basketball of my life right now," Rowsom said in his letter.

Rowsom said he plans on returning to the Pacers, who have offered him a guaranteed contract for the 1988-89 season. But by the makes it clear that if the money is right, he likes it in France enough to stay.

Reflecting back, I have made a lot of friends through sports. As exciting as the games get, it is the friendship and the shared experiences that make sports so great.

As I finished reading the letter, I sat in my room and looked up at a poster print I have of Brian scoring on a layup against Indiana University last season. I focused on the writing that goes across the bottom corner, "Thanks for the Pub, Your Friend Brian #25."

If Rowsom has made as many friendships in France as I have here at UNCW, then leaving Orthez may prove to be one of the toughest things Rowsom ever has to do.

God luck and hope to hear from you again soon.

With all the fuss over the officiating in the championship game between George Mason and Richmond, the conference has some of the best officials in the nation working its games.

The squabbling centers around the calling of two technical fouls on George Mason's bench - one on an assistant coach and one on a student trainer - by the highly respected Hank Armstrong. Armstrong called the technical on the student trainer for giving a choke sign.

In the post game press conference, GMU Head Coach Rick Barnes blasted Armstrong for putting himself and his ego above the game. He stated after blowing a couple of calls, Armstrong couldn't take the heat and his ego called the T's. He went on to say that it is something that happens all the time in the CAA, ACC officials working in the CAA and not doing the same job they do for a North Carolina and Duke game.

Barnes continued by saying that he was mad that for as hard as his kids worked all year and for a game to mean so much to GMU, it should be officiated as if it meant as much to North Carolina.

Barnes has a point, but if you want the best officiating, you have to go after the best. Dan Woolridge, the CAA's head of officials has done a great job of upgrading the conference officiating. Ideally you would like to have the best officials come in after doing an ACC game and work your game as well as the ACC contest, but sometimes that doesn't happen. Officials are human and for the most part have done an excellent job in the CAA.

Speaking of George Mason, they were snubbed by the National Invitational Tournament despite a 20-10 record.

The Patriots should be slightly irate, but they had just a 2-5 record against teams that advanced to post-season play. Twenty wins used to get you in a tournament, but not in this age of parity in the college ranks.

This year plenty of teams won 20 games and in the NIT, tradition and politics play a lot in the selection process. The CAA doesn't have a lot of pull yet and there were four Virginia-based teams selected before GMU.

Just remember Mr. Barnes, before you can be given respect, you must earn it.

Campbell Edges Struggling Seahawk Baseball Team

By Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

It was the same old story for the UNC Wilmington as Campbell beat the Seahawks 5-4 Wednesday in college baseball action.

The Camels jumped on UNCW (3-15) with a run in the first inning and one in the third inning. The Seahawks countered with a run in the fourth on Scott Brady's first home run of the season.

Campbell added another run in the fifth inning before UNCW cut the margin to 3-2 in the sixth. Eric Hickman reached on an error, went to second on a Brady single, moved to third on a Randy Fennell single and scored when Ed Stoudenmire grounded into a double play.

The Seahawks took the lead in the seventh when Mike Byers cracked his second home run of the season, a two-run shot, giving UNCW a 4-3 advantage. The lead was short-lived as Campbell countered with two runs of their own in the bottom half of the seventh off loser Bryant Balentine.

Balentine (0-1) gave up just one earned run and five hits while walking five and striking out four in eight innings of work.

On Monday, the Seahawks began a two-game series with the University of Rhode Island. UNCW captured the first game in impressive fashion, 11-3, behind the pitching of senior Eric Hickman.

Tim Langmeyer sparked the Seahawk attack with three hits, two walks, three stolen bases and three runs scored. Scott Brady also chipped in two hits and two runs batted in as the Seahawks scored in every inning but the fifth.

In the second game Tuesday, Rhode Island held off a UNCW charge to win 6-5.

RI led 6-1 going into the Seahawk fifth inning, but UNCW, capped by a Mike Byers two-run home run, tied the contest pulled to within 6-4. The Seahawks added another run in the eighth inning, but couldn't get the tying run across.

UNCW plays host to East Carolina Saturday in a doubleheader and a single game on Sunday. The first pitch each day is set for 1:00 and will be broadcast on student radio station WLOZ.

Lady Hawks fall IN THE BLEACHERS to East Carolina

From staff reports

East Carolina, paced by Mickey Ford's home run and triple, defeated the UNC Wilmington Lady Seahawks, 9-6, in college softball action Tuesday at the Bobby Benson Complex.

Kathy Cochran had a three-run double for the Seahawks, while Jamie Mincey added a double and two runs batted in.

The second game of the scheduled doubleheader was cancelled due to darkness.

The loss dropped UNCW to 4-18 on the season.

The Lady Seahawks will play again Saturday as they host a single game with Hiram College of Cleveland at 10 a.m. and a doubleheader with SUNY-Cortland at noon.

The first in a two-part series

Gambling Is Big Business, Even On The UNCW Campus

This is the first in a two-part series on gambling among college students.

By Deborah Goodman
Staff Writer

When my friend Sheila and I bet a salad from Pizza Hut on the Carolina/Duke game we joked about being such big-time gamblers, but gambling among college students is no joke.

At least one out of every four college-aged males in Wilmington will place a bet with a bookie (someone who makes their living through sports book making) this year. The bookies they place their bets with may clear upwards of two to during such major sporting events as the Super Bowl, World Series, or the ACC Tournament Championship, which took place this past weekend in Greensboro.

The bets can be made in a number of different ways. An individual may bet by line (the line is the odds on the game) or over-under (choosing whether the game's combined point total will be over or under a set number). A bookie may have a minimum bet of one hundred dollars, or even as high as five hundred dollars.

Bettors find their bookie through word of mouth, and all bets are placed by telephone to a central location. Many bookies assign numbers to identify their regular bettors. Arrangements are made in advance as to the payment or collection of winnings or losses. Collection day is usually Tuesday, but may change at the discretion of the bookie.

If an individual loses a bet and fails to pay, pressure is applied by the bookie. Backed by an implied or actual threat, the bookie will repeatedly call or visit the bettor's home, work-place, or school. The bookie's intrusion with increased persistence into the bettor's daily life usually results in payment of the debt.

A service charge, which is a set percentage of the bet placed, is paid to the bookie in the event that the bettor loses. This is called "butter money". In Wilmington, the going rate is twenty percent, at the high end of a ten to twenty percent national average. This is due to the lack of competition among bookies in town.

There are four big bookies in Wilmington that handle the local college betting action. Each may have as many as fifty to one hundred and fifty regular (all college students) at any time. The bookies are backed financially by a larger source out of town, or even the state, as is one of the local bookies.

Almost one hundred percent of the individuals placing bets with a bookie in Wilmington are white males from the middle to upper class, who have extra money to use at their discretion. They use this extra money to bet with, hoping to turn a quick profit on their "investment". Most began betting of this kind in high school, using money from jobs or savings.

With the legalization of gambling in some areas of the country, and off-track betting (OTB) and state lotteries in others, gambling has become less ethically questionable and more appealing as a pastime. Betting on televised sporting events is thought by many to be an exciting and interesting way to make money, similar to playing the stock market, and with the same element of risk.

"It's a challenge. It's a game you can never win. There is always something that can get you," says one veteran bettor.

Due to the fact that all bets are placed over private telephone lines, and for the bettor no federal laws are being violated, the risk of being caught or prosecuted is extremely low. The possible gains outweigh the small risk, and even increases the excitement for the bettor.

"If you just get slapped on the wrist if you get caught, why not take the risk?" asks one bettor.

For the bookie, however, the risk is greater. The crime of "making book" is in violation of federal law, and may result in a minimum sentence of five years if convicted.

The UNC-W campus police report no incidents of illegal gambling among the student body this year. (no arrests have been made.)

The Wilmington Federal Bureau of Investigation, the agency responsible for the policing of local gambling, acknowledges the definite presence of gambling among our students.

"It is generally known that college students make up a sizable portion of the sports betting clientele," says local FBI agent Terry Peters.

"It's a challenge. It's a game you can never win. There is always something that can get you,"

A Veteran Bettor

It is surprising to many people that gambling of this kind is as developed and widespread as it is in such a relatively small college town. As the university, and it's student body, continue to grow, it is expected that the amount of betting will grow at a proportionate rate, and my hard-won salad from Pizza Hut will become even more of a drop in the college gambling bucket.

Alston/Smith Win

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

The SGA elective offices for the 1988/89 school year have been filled. The office of president will be held by Karla Alston, former Vice President. Robert Smith, former senator, was elected Vice President.

Both Alston and Smith hope to promote a series of changes in SGA. In an interview after the election results were announced, Karla Alston enthusiastically said, "I look forward to the implementation of my campaign platform for a better organized student government."

Robert Smith looks hopefully into the future along those same lines, commenting, "I anticipate a more effective senate; a senate that passes amendments that make sense."

Alston's main concerns lie in restructuring SGA with such things as written job descriptions available to anyone for job positions, applications for those jobs in the SGA office, new procedures for clubs, and incorporation of proper budgeting format.

Her very first move will be to offer the offices of treasurer and Election Board Chairman on an application basis. Anyone interested may obtain an application starting April 1 in the SGA office.

"I look forward to the implementation of my campaign platform for a better organized student government."

Karla Alston

Aside from these office appointments there are many committees positions the president must appoint, for example, book store advisory committee, calendar committee, and various committees the chancellor sponsors. Smith agrees with Alston and stresses making clear job responsibilities and duties.

"This administration will be open to the public with easy access to any business affairs," states Alston.

Smith strongly supports this claim adding, "I want it to be known what the SGA does with the students' monies and there will be a direct line with the accounting department."

Overall the upcoming SGA leaders appear to be offering a refreshing change for the UNCW campus. Only the future will tell.

Both Karla Alston and Robert Smith would like to thank all those involved with their campaigns and the students who came out to vote.

Campus Republicans Sponsor Anti-Communism Exhibit

By Kim Kopka
Staff Writer

If you were on campus and walked by the front of the Union last Thursday or Friday, you couldn't help noticing an arrangement of cardboard tombstones. The N.C. Federation of College Republicans calls them, along with a replica of the Berlin Wall, "moving monuments" and UNCW was the first stop for these glorious, traveling tombstones.

The project is sponsored by the N.C. Federation of College Republicans and is then co-sponsored by Republican clubs that have been chartered through the federation on different college campuses.

"The project is designed to educate students and open their eyes to the fact that communism is spreading."

Kenny Kidd

This project has the tombstones moving from campuses in the Eastern part of the state to campuses in the very western part of the state. There are approximately 20 campuses chartered through the federation which will receive the tombstones, some of which are East Carolina University, Duke, Davidson, Wake Forest, and Appalachian State University, which will be the tombstones' last stop.

"The project is designed to educate students and open their eyes to the reality that communism is spreading," said Kenny Kidd, the chairman of UNCW's chapter of N.C. Federation of College Republicans. The tombstones represent countries already under communist control, or in the case of Honduras fighting against communist control.

Along with educating students, the College Republicans are obviously also protesting against communism and supporting the Reagan administration. In addition to the array of tombstones, there was a petition going around in support of the Reagan doctrine, a proposal that supports other countries by giving them military aid in their fight for freedom.

Kidd felt they reached the project's goal of raising student awareness and educating them to the spread of communism.

"A lot of students stopped and asked questions," said Kidd. "And we also got a lot of coverage from the local newspaper, T.V. and radio stations."

Well, there are always two sides to a story, especially a political one.

The President of the College Democrats, Lee Barnhill says, "We didn't pay much attention to the tombstones."

"It is not like the Democrats are for communism or anything," said Barnhill. "It was just a big production with not much substance to get press coverage."

According to Barnhill, the College Democrats "will be putting most of their efforts towards the upcoming Presidential elections."

In a greater, democratic view of the deployment of troops and providing military aid to the Contras in Honduras last week Barnhill says, "It was strictly a political move by the Reagan administration to de-emphasize the impact of the indictments handed down the same day involving the Iran-Contra hearings."

Maybe more political activity on campus could help to lower the staggering student apathy rate. It is alarming that students are either unaware or confused by political issues. The two clubs on campus that could best educate and involve students more are the College Republicans or the College Democrats.

Black Enrollment Still Low

By Barry Bryan
Staff Writer

Low black enrollment has long been a nationwide problem with colleges, especially in the South. Since 1969, the federal government has been working to force states to desegregate their state colleges by way of court actions and the passage of civil rights laws.

The government recently passed the Consent Decree which requires universities to have a certain percentage of blacks enrolled in their total population. In February, U.S. Secretary of Education William Bennett said some states still haven't met the goals of enrolling more minority students and administrators, and improving facilities at black campuses. However, he stated they had made progress.

The Consent Decree dictates UNCW is required to have 10.4% black students in its population. It

How To Stretch A Dollar Abroad

For students searching for ways to stretch the shrinking dollar abroad, the Council on International Educational Exchange announces the publication of the 1988 Student Travel Catalog. Now in its fifteenth edition, the Catalog is one of the most comprehensive, free budget travel guides available. It is an invaluable source of information on the basics of traveling, studying and working abroad.

This handy 68-page publication puts everything a student need to know to save money in an easy-to-read, question and answer format. The Catalog covers rail passes, insurance, working and studying abroad, volunteer projects, tours and, perhaps most important, how to obtain the International Student Identity Card — the only internationally recognize proof of student status an absolute must for any student traveler. There is also information on air fares, car rentals, hotels, discounts for teachers!

The Catalog comes complete with handy applications and order forms for all the programs, services and publications described. Although some services are available to students only, most are open to all.

Since its founding in 1947, the Council has been a leader in developing on-going programs of educational and cultural exchanges worldwide. It provides counseling services and acts as a general clearing house of information, processing annually more than 200,000 inquiries on international educational exchange from individuals, academic institutions, foundations, businesses and governmental agencies.

The 1988 Student Travel Catalog may be obtained from CIEE, Dept STC '88, 205 East 42nd Street, New York, NY 10017, (212) 661-1414; or 312 Sutter Street, San Francisco, CA 94108, (415) 421-3473. Enclose $1 for postage and handling.

Paralyzed Veterans of America Youth Scholarships Available

Applications now are being accepted for the PVA/Youth for Vietnam Veterans Scholarship Fund, announced R. Jack Powell, executive director of the Paralyzed Veterans of America (PVA).

Powell said, "Applicants must be the natural or legally-adopted son or daughter of an Honorably Discharged veteran who served on active military duty in the Vietnam theater of war from August 4, 1964 to May 8, 1975, who was: killed in action; died 'in country'; listed as missing in action; a prisoner of war; disabled with 100% service-connected rating; or rated as 100% disabled for Veterans Administration pension purposes, as the result of a spinal cord injury or disease (such as multiple sclerosis)."

Each scholarship grant will be $1,500 and applicants must be enrolled in, or accepted by, an accredited four-year institution of higher learning. The student's academic performance, community and extracurricular activities, as well as financial need, will be considered in the award criteria. Powell added that completed applications and required submissions must be postmarked no later than May 31, 1988.

For an application or more information, contact: Scholarship Committee; c/o Paralyzed Veterans of America; 801 18th Street, N.W.; Washington, D.C. 20006; or, consult your telephone book for the PVA Service Office or Chapter nearest you.

The PVA/Youth for Vietnam Veterans Scholarship Fund was initiated by a group of students at the University of Kansas in Lawrence, KS. It is funded by the proceeds of a Veterans Day benefit concert which featured musicians David Crosby, Stephen Stills, John Fogerty, and George Thorogood and the Delaware Destroyers. Peter Fonda served as emcee.

The Paralyzed Veterans of America, a veterans service organization chartered by the U.S. Congress, has for more than four decades served the needs of its members — all of whom have catastrophic paralysis caused by spinal cord injury or disease. PVA is funded through private donations and neither seeks nor receives government funds.

"Gold Addy Award" Presented

The Cape Fear Advertising Federation has awarded a "Gold Addy Award" for creativity in audio visual presentation for more than 60 seconds to the 1987 UNCW Halftime Segment produced by WWAY-TV 3. The segment was produced for use by the Colonial Athletic Association during televised Seahawk basketball games and for other conference promotional activities.

Featured on the three-minute video were Dr. Tom MacLennan, associate professor of English and director of the UNCW Writing Place, discussing computer English; Dr. David Webster, assistant professor or biological sciences and curator of mammals regarding Loggerhead Turtle research; Dr. Denis Carter, associate dean of the Cameron School of Business Administration, speaking on international business; and the UNCW Seahawk and cheerleaders.

Mimi Cunningham, director of university relations, created and coordinated this production for UNCW athletics. The producer was Bill Mushrush, former director of creative services for TV-3, and the photographer was Bob Singleton.

Alternatives Fair To Be Held

The Alternatives! Center proudly presents our first annual Alternatives! Fair on April 20, 1988. The fair will be held on campus in front of the University Union. Events include Ropes Course, Balloon Rides, Fun-run, Jazzercise, Water Aerobics, community and campus resource booths. Come join us for fun, food, and lots of alternatives!

The purpose for the Alternatives! Fair is to promote alternatives to substance abuse.

Our main goal is to deter students from becoming chemically dependent, by encouraging student involvement in community and campus programs, which emphasize outdoor adventure, personal growth and community service.

If your organization would like to be involved, please contact us at 395-3683. Thank you very much. We look very forward in hearing from you.

TAKE THE COURSE. WE'LL PAY FOR IT.

The Army Reserve's Tuition Assistance Program offers Reservists financial help in meeting bills at nearby colleges, trade schools, art schools and business schools.

You train one weekend a month, usually, plus two weeks annual training, and you'll be putting extra money in your pocket—over $80 per weekend.

Peace Corps Announces Increases In Allowances

Peace Corps has announced an increase in the monthly readjustment allowance paid to Peace Corps volunteers when they complete their service overseas.

Loret Miller Ruppe, Peace Corps director since 1981, approved a $25 increase in the allowance earned by Peace Corps volunteers and trainees. The increase, to $200 a month effective in January, is intended to ease the readjustment process when volunteers return home after working in a developing country for at least two years.

Peace Corps provides extensive cultural, language and technical training in the country of service.

Under the new rate, a volunteer serving a two-year assignment earns a total readjustment allowance of $4,800, not including their training period. One-third is given to the volunteer just before completion of service, with the remaining two-thirds sent to his or her home in the United States.

In addition to the readjustment allowance, Peace Corps provides extensive cultural, language and technical training in the country of service, medical and dental care, paid vacation and living expenses.

Ruppe, who has visited Peace Corps programs in more than 60 developing countries, said she authorized the increase to help current volunteers and to provide additional incentives to those interested in Peace Corps. Congress approved a similar readjustment increase from $125 to $175 a month in 1982.

"Our volunteers work so hard," she said. "It's fitting that we reward their sacrifices and their commitment to peace and progress with an increase in the money they earn for their readjustment. We all wish it could be more but it must compete with the long list of priorities for peacemaking that the agency faces."

Peace Corps received $146.2 million from the Congress for fiscal year 1988, permitting an increase in volunteer levels and funding a number of improvements in the agency's worldwide operations.

Congress has directed Peace Corps to expand to a worldwide volunteer corps of 10,000 by 1992, nearly doubling the number in service overseas. The agency is actively expanding its links with the private sector, universities, minority organizations, civic groups and organized labor to achieve this goal through a Leadership For Peace campaign which involves all segments of American Society. Peace Corps is particularly interested in recruiting minorities, older Americans, and those trained in technical fields, such as biology, forestry, agronomy and animal husbandry.

Peace Corps service offers a number of benefits to college students who have just earned degrees in specialty fields. It gives them an opportunity to test the theories and practices they learned in the classroom. They gain a cross-cultural experience in an international setting and learn another language. In some instances, portions of student loan obligations can be cancelled for Peace Corps service under legislation passed by Congress. A number of undergraduate overseas internship opportunities also are available.

More than 5,200 Peace Corps Volunteers and trainees are working in more than 60 developing countries in grassroots, self-help projects in agriculture, education, forestry, fisheries, health and small enterprise development. Through Peace Corps, more than 120,000 Americans have served in more than 90 developing nations since 1961.

For more information and an application, please call toll-free (800) 424-8580, extension 93 or write: Peace Corps, Room P-301, Box 717, Washington, D.C. 20526.

ROTC Takes Intramural Basketball Championship

Army Second Lieutenant Morris Dillard scored 39 points to lead the ROTC intramural basketball team to this year's championship. ROTC defeated "Time" 74-66 in the game played late Thursday night, the second of March. "Time" was led by James Fisher's 36 points, 30 of which came in an unbelievable first half performance.

The ROTC team had a 17 win 3 loss season. Throughout the year, the team relied on Dillard, Gordon Graham, and Bobby Blackmon to provide the bulk of the scoring and rebounding. Blackmon's 14 rebounds and 12 points provided the inside strength to complement Dillard's outside game. Graham, a mainstay for the team this season with a 17 point per game average was called on to play defense in this championship game, holding the league's leading scorer to just 6 points in the second half. Other members of the ROTC were Derderain Brooks, James Wilson, Clement Coward, Army Sergeant Howard Summers and Army Captain Richard Longo, and Craig Moore.

"Time" is a fantastic team" says CPT Longo, adding that "Time" defeated the ROTC team soundly during the regular season. "They have outstanding guard play, good big men and, of course, the 'Fish'. The 'Stars', another team from the ROTC-Time league, made it to the semifinals having beaten both teams during the regular season.

Dillard and Graham will graduate and be attending Army Officers' Basic Course next season, so the championship that they have shared for 3 years will be up for grabs. There are many excellent teams on campus. Next year's intramural basketball season promises to be as exciting as ever.

UNCW Piano Students Win Honors

By Nancy K. Hill
Contributing Staff Writer

Dr. Richard R. Deas, III, music professor and assistant to the creative arts department chairman at UNCW, announces that two of his piano students won honors at the College Piano Contest/Festival held March 11-12 in Whiteville. Deas served as judge in the high school division.

Each student presented a 15-minute program and played a composition from that program in the final recital.

Winners from The University of North Carolina at Wilmington were:

Larry Gerald McLendon, a sophomore, won first place and a $200 prize for his rendition of the Scherzo movement of Beethoven's "Sonata, op. 31, #3."

Jennifer Shute Stallings, a junior, won third place in the collegiate division for her rendition of Debussy's "Little Shepherd."

Construction site located behind New Hall where Residence Life hopes to house 400 more students in several newly designed three story apartments.

Chamber Theatre Presents "@*#@! LEFTovers and Other Stuff"

By Nancy K. Hill
Contributing Staff Writer

The University Chamber Theatre Presents "@*#@! LEFTovers and Other Stuff" on March 24-27 in the SRO Theatre in Kenan Hall on the campus of UNCW. The performances of this compilation of twentieth century protest poetry will begin at 8 p.m. each night.

"LEFTovers" will feature performances from the speech communication faculty: Carole Tallant, director; Frank Trimble, lecturer and director of forensics; and Randy Harrington, instructor. "Protest poetry is some of the most exciting and diverse literature to perform," said Tallant.

"LEFTovers" includes protest poetry concerning racial equality, women's rights, war, nuclear catastrophe and general influences that diminish the human spirit. Protest poetry has always aimed to change something, if only attitude."

General admission is $4, free to students and faculty with UNCW I.D. Seating for the performances is limited so reservations are required. To reserve a seat, call 395-3448.

Friends of UNCW Present 13 Grants

By Ray Cockrell
Contributing Staff Writer

The Friends of UNCW presented 13 grants totaling approximately $7470 to the University on Friday, March 11. The grants were presented at the Friends annual "tea."

Since its beginning in 1963, the Friends have been the longest continuing operating support group at UNCW and have made a remarkable difference to the quality of education at the university.

Originally named the Friends of the Library of Wilmington College, its mission was to build up the library's inventory of quality books. Today, the group's scope has been expanded to meet the many needs of the university and works to support the various aspects of university life through its monetary endowments.

Good Nutrition Stressed For College Students

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

The 1980s have been marked by an increase in health awareness for people of all ages. The month of March has been designated as National Nutrition Month. The Health and Wellness Center offer a wide variety of information and counseling on maintaining a healthy mind and body.

Many people tend to be misled by fat diets and misinformation in the area of general good nutrition. Katie Gilbert of the Wellness Center stresses, "We want to encourage students to stop following fat diet plans and simply eat well balanced meals incorporating the four basic food groups."

There is a tendency for college students to eat on the run and pay little attention to what goes in their systems. To the opposite extreme are those who have a set ideal for their bodies and struggle fruitlessly for an unattainable goal.

The secrets to being fit and trim are tied up in counting calories (correctly), exercise, and well rounded meals, according to Katie Gilbert. The ideal weight for each individual is determined chiefly by body size. Whether a person has a small, medium, or large frame can be evaluated by a simple test. Measure the bony part of the wrist with thumb and forefinger. If fingers overlap this means small frame. If fingers meet perfectly you have a medium frame. Fingers that do not meet at all show a large frame. This is a very simplified test but it gives you some idea. Each person should plan their diet based on individual frame size. If someone has a large frame there may be no way to ever weigh 100lbs. and remain healthy.

Eating the right foods and in the right amounts can prevent cancer, anemia, and obesity among other things. It also promotes a general feeling of well being. The question is what foods to include in your diet and which to eliminate.

Cholesterol levels are an important issue now. Cholesterol levels are now being screened in the Wellness Center and diets low in cholesterol are strongly recommended. Foods very high in cholesterol are usually also high in calories. Examples are: French Fries (McDonald's 214), Burger King Whopper (241 cal.), Kentucky Fried Chicken (950 3 piece extra crispy). In general anything pork or fried in animal fat is bad.

A strong defense against digestive problems is fiber. It is low in calories and found in many foods; it is also vital to a healthy system. Some examples of fibrous foods are peas, corn, baked potatoes, apples, bananas, grapefruit, spaghetti, and cereals such as All-Bran, Fruit'n fiber, and many others.

Overall good eating is also believed to reduce risks of certain cancers. Katie Gilbert recommends that those who are able should cook their own stir fried vegetables, broil skinless chicken and fish, cook dried beans and eat fruits and raw vegetables as snacks. These things may sound unappealing but all are actually very good, it's just a matter of changing habits.

Good health habits are essential for a long and prosperous life and the sooner they are formed the closer each individual is to looking and feeling better. The UNCW Wellness Center offers a vast amount of help in nutrition matters as well as other general good health tips.

For a complete nutrition assessment contact Deborah Haywood of the Livewell/Alternatives center located in the student union. She has access to a computer which can evaluate a typical diet and suggest adjustments. The Health and Wellness center can provide various test to establish health conditions. Contact one or both of these offices and get started on the road to good nutrition.

cancers. Foods rich in Vitamin A such as deep yellow and dark green fruits and vegetables are known to be cruciferous. Vitamin C is thought to be a cure-all for many things and it is found in oranges, red and green peppers, strawberries, and limes.

Frame Size

The Metropolitan weight tables list weight ranges for men and women between the ages of 25 and 50 according to their body frames. Here's how to calculate your frame size:

1. Extend your arm and bend the forearm upward at a 90° angle. Keep your fingers straight and turn the inside of your wrist toward your body.
2. Place the thumb and index finger of your other hand on the two prominent bones on either currently has approximately 6.7%. Recruiting efforts are not idle, and after minority visitation day about 75% of visiting students stay and enroll.

Although more people are going to college, black enrollment has suffered a decline in recent years. The percentage of black students enrolled hasn't changed appreciably, yet the actual numbers of blacks in college have.

Why aren't more blacks going to college? Money is a major response. However, student aid has increased 76% since 1980. Long term, low interest loans and grants have increased as well.

A more important factor is the fact there are only so many black students with the right preparation to attend college. Members of this pool of eligible black students is Dr. Hubert Eaton, recipient of the Outstanding Citizen of the Year award by the UNCW Alumni Association, is deeply involved with the black population of Wilmington. As he states, UNCW has no problem with discrimination, but black students have told him it is lacking in social activities.

Once a student is attracted to UNCW he must be induced to stay, which is why the black retention program was begun. It consists of minority scholarships and advising programs to keep the black student enrolled. It is working; the black hotly sought by universities and colleges in order to fulfill government requirements. To snare minorities, scholarships and grants are produced. The competition between colleges resembles an auction that the highest bidder gets the student.

"The costs are mitigated by minority scholarships and grants such as the Minority Presence Grant given to prospective black applicants," said Doug Johnson of UNCW Admissions Office.

More black students are attracted and enroll, but as Bob Fry, Director of Institutional Research commented, "A few more enroll, but the percentage of the total population has been slow to increase. This is reflected nationwide."

UNCW is traditionally a white campus and blacks may be uncomfortable enrolling, according to Doug Johnson. Blacks are more likely to attend historically black universities such as Winston Salem or N.C.A. and T. Yet this is changing, and black universities are enrolling more white students also. retention rate was 70% last fall and has increased to 85% this fall.

Black enrollment, however slowly, is increasing. UNCW's incentives make it increasingly difficult to turn down. As information of UNCW's student support programs, scholarships and grants reaches further, serious black students will give it a thoughtful look.

Nursing School Receives Full Accreditation

(UNCW NEWS)-- The School of Nursing at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has received full accreditation by a unanimous vote from the Board of Review of the National League for Nursing. The announcement was made by the board in New York City on Thursday, March 17.

National League of Nursing accreditation recognizes programs that meet standards of excellence beyond those required by state boards of nursing.

Of particular significance is the fact that national accreditation has been awarded at an early phase in the career of the UNCW School of Nursing. UNCW's baccalaureate degree nursing program began in 1984 and it graduated its first baccalaureate class in 1987.

The national accreditation strengthens an already sound undergraduate nursing program at UNCW. The School of Nursing had a 100 percent pass rate on the registered nurse licensure examination of its first baccalaureate graduates in 1987.

National League of Nursing accreditation will allow UNCW nursing graduates increased career options. A nursing student must be a graduate from a nationally accredited undergraduate program for acceptance into NLN-accredited master's programs, schools of anesthesia, or to enter the military as a commissioned officer. Equally important, graduates of nationally accredited nursing schools are often given preference in hiring and job promotions.

"National accreditation will make a significant impact on recruiting nursing students to UNCW. Many prospective nursing students want to enroll in such programs," said Dr. Marlene Rosenkoetter, dean of the School of Nursing.

Rosenkoetter noted that the accreditation's long-term effect will be a program that will attract more graduates to help alleviate the nursing shortage.

UNCW Track To Open Soon

By Scott Wheeler
Staff Writer

One of the newest editions to our ever-expanding school is the new Harold Greene Track and Field, named in honor of the gentleman who donated the majority of the $751,000 needed to complete construction of the track.

Greene is a local businessman who owns several hotels in and around the Wilmington area. "He decided that he wanted to do something for the University, so now we have a track and field complex," said William J. Brooks, Director of Athletics at UNCW.

"The surface is of pigmented polyurethane with EDM granules installed upon an asphalt foundation," said Brooks in regard to the track's construction.

He also mentioned that the track still needs some finishing touches such as landscaping. "The grass will need time to establish itself in the soil before we go in and trample it all down," said Brooks. "According to Mr. Glen Wilkin, who was the consultant during the construction of the track, it is one of the top ten tracks in the nation," said Brooks, "and I hope the students will treat it as such and not mess it up."

"... it is one of the top ten tracks in the nation, and I hope the students will treat it as such..."

William J. Brooks

The UNCW Athletic department has placed an advertisement in The weekly NCAA News for a track coach. Mr. Brooks said of the forthcoming track and field team, "all of the plans are not made, but we hope to have a coach in here by the first of August to coach the cross country team and to begin recruiting people for our first track team."

The Athletic department plans to recruit high school seniors and current UNCW students who are interested in running for the track team. "We want approximately fifty men and women, but we probably will not have that many for the first year," commented Brooks.

The Athletic department has not yet decided upon the number of scholarships to offer in their new program.

The Athletic department hopes the new track and field will help UNCW build a competitive program in an already competitive conference.

UNCW is a member of the Colonial Athletic Association, which has eight member institutions, including American University, East Carolina University, James Madison University, George Mason University, the US Naval Academy, the University of Richmond, the College of William and Mary, and UNCW.

Major opponents mentioned by Brooks were a strong George Mason team and an ever-present East Carolina team.

The athletic department plans to recruit high school seniors and current UNCW students who are interested in running for the track team.

Track is not an official CAA sport, and the member institutions with track programs operate independently.

It is Brooks's hope that a first-class track facility will be the foundation for a top-notch Division I track program.

Workers use a complex synthetic material to prepare surface for the new track at UNCW. This special surface will make the track one of the finest in the Southeast. The track was to be completed in February.

Harold Greene (c), a local developer whose contributions funded the construction of the Harold Greene Track and Field Complex, reviews the track's construction with UNCW Athletic Director Bill Brooks (l) and Vernon C. H. Wilkins, Jr., president of Wilkins International Ltd., a track consulting firm based in Upland, CA.

Stanford University Wants Greeks To Change

(CPS) Fraternities and sororities should change the way they choose their members if they want to stay on campus, Stanford University officials said last week.

But finding "objective" ways of choosing members "would not work," asserted Durwood Owen, executive director of Pi Kappa Phi's national chapter in Charlotte, N.C.

"You can't quantify friendship or comradeship. What do they want us to do? You can't quantify the concept of fraternity."

Durwood Owen

Nevertheless, Stanford Dean of Student Affairs James Lyons last week suggested a policy to give the Palo Alto, Cal., campus's greek houses 3 years to establish "objective" standards for membership. If they don't, they may have to leave campus.

In his report -- which will be subject to debate before being adopted as campus policy -- Lyons suggested fraternities and sororities might adopt admissions procedures like cooperative houses, which give priority to students who simply agree to abide by certain rules and standards.

But such standards, he said, would be preferable to the current system, which encourages the student groups to discriminate on the whole spectrum of prejudices of race, gender, social class, family background, religion and even sexual habits.

In fact, on Feb. 23 the University of California at Los Angeles officially recognized Lambda Delta Lambda, a 9-member sorority formed by lesbians who felt shut out of other UCLA houses.

"We started it because we feel excluded from the greek system now," explained member Marci Kay.

Earlier in February, the University of Texas-Austin's Panhellenic Council ended a 6-year dispute by signing a non-discrimination pledge that UT requires all recognized student groups to adopt.

The council had argued that only in the sense of choosing their members carefully.

Choosing new members in any other way, Owen argued, compromises the idea of fraternity.

"You can't quantify friendship or comradeship. What do they want us to do? You can't quantify the concept of fraternity," he said of the Stanford report.

The traditional system of choosing fraternity members, he said, "isn't broken. There's no reason to fix it."

"If we had a chapter (at Stanford), I'd withdraw it or recommend that we withdraw it."

$500,000,000 OF RESEARCH HELPED CLIFF SHAW PLAY BASEBALL AT AGE 85.

In November 1973, Cliff Shaw was stricken with cancer.

Fortunately, it was detected early enough. And with surgery, Cliff was able to continue living a healthy, active life. There was a time when such a diagnosis was virtually hopeless.

But today, cancer is being beaten. Over the years, we've spent $500,000,000 in research. And we've made great strides against many forms of cancer.

With early detection and treatment, the survival rate for colon and rectal cancer can be as high as 75%. Hodgkin's disease, as high as 74%. Breast cancer, as high as 90%.

Today, one out of two people who get cancer gets well. It's a whole new ball game.

Eaton Receives Distinguished Citizen Award

By Chad Adams
Managing Editor

Dr. Hubert A. Eaton received the Distinguished Citizen Award for 1988 from the UNCW Alumni Association Feb. 19.

Dr. George Bair, special assistant to the chancellor, presented the award to Dr. Eaton, saying that, "patience, determination and undying hope for a more just world are the hallmarks of Dr. Hubert Eaton."

Eaton was born in Fayetteville, N.C. Eaton's father was a physician as is his son. He attended the Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte receiving his Doctorate of Medicine at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor. In 1943 Eaton became a resident physician in Wilmington.

In the summer of 1947 Eaton was called to testify in court and noticed that the court had separate benches for the "colored" and white to take the oath upon.

Distinguished

Although Eaton's actions in the twenty years following the summer of '47 left him unpopular in the white community of Wilmington, eventually he earned the respect of all.

"I think that UNCW is, without a doubt, the greatest thing to happen to Wilmington"

Hubert Eaton

Through his judicious and constructive use of the law Eaton has achieved, without fights, changes acknowledged by all in schools, hospitals, golf courses, the YMCA and banks to promote racial equality out of the sense of simple justice and common decency.

Eaton's philosophy of life is best described in the preface to his

Government Provides Research Funds

(UNCW News) The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has received $9,118 from the State of North Carolina and $6,715 from the federal government for research on a program titled "Evaluation of Plasmid Profiles as a Method to Determine the Source of Fecal Pollution in an Estuarine Environment."

Project director Ronald K. Sizemore, associate professor of biological sciences, says, "water samples will be collected from multiple sites around Wrightsville Beach and Harbor Island and will be examined, using the latest EPA technique for the presence of microorganisms which indicate fecal pollution. The indicator organisms will be enumerated to determine the level of fecal pollution around the island."

These organisms will also be maintained in the laboratory and examined for the presence of extrachromosomal particles called plasmids. The plasmids will be extracted from the bacteria, purified and characterized by restriction nuclease analysis. The nuclease analysis should permit determination of plasmid similarities and will be used as a subspecies identifier for the microorganisms. If successful, this analysis will be useful in tracing the source of fecal bacteria in the environment. According to Sizemore, "this environmental epidemiology will be useful in assessing the source of pollution and planning to prevent future environmental alterations which will cause pollution. If completely successful, the proposed technique will provide the most powerful tool currently available to trace fecal pollution to its source."

University Union Sees Some Changes

If you have not stopped by the University Union in a while you will be greeted with some pleasant surprises on your next visit. The Union staff has been working hard to keep the Union a "comfortable" place for students, faculty, and staff.

Over Christmas Break the living room got a facelift with reupholstered furniture. The fabric was chosen with the help of some very interested students that spend a lot of free time lounging on the furniture. The new look results in a much brighter atmosphere.

Magazine check-out has been added to the list of the many services the Information Center offers. Newsweek, Rolling Stone, Sports Illustrated, and MS. Magazine are available to anyone with a University I.D.

The union hosts many interesting events each month. A new computerized calendar which is located across from the Post Office provides at-a-glance coverage of these events. Any club or organization that is interested in having a message placed on the board should contact Heather Goodman in Room 214.

The Hawk's Nest is now remaining open until 10:00 p.m., Monday-Thursday. They have added many items such as pizza and specialty burgers for late night hunger pangs.

The University Union staff is very interested in your ideas and suggestions about how to better serve the UNCW community. There is a suggestion box located in the Information Center that you are encouraged to use. Responses to suggestions will be placed on the Information Center News Board each month and an effort will be made to incorporate your ideas.

The votes for the general SGA election were tallied and posted. And believe or not, a write-in won. It wasn't for the position of SGA President or Vice-President; it was for the Sophomore Class Vice-President.

There were no candidates running for that position at the time of the election because the one who was running withdrew, then was unable to re-enter the race the day of the election.

If you were one of the many who voted Tuesday, it was hard to miss the person running for SGA President as a write-in. The person in question, Al Nolan, stayed outside campaigning the entire day.

He received somewhere in the neighborhood of 55 votes, despite the fact that, according to the constitution, he was ineligible to run (he had not served in the senate for a year).

Bumper To Bumper

I bet that the first bumper sticker was made of wood and said something like: "I Love My Model T," or "Henry Ford On Board."

What I like about bumper stickers is that they can tell you so much about the driver. They range from the obnoxious to the mundane (the stickers and the drivers).

A sticker that doesn't fit the car or driver is the funniest. How often do you see, "Don't Laugh It's Paid For" on a Mercedes? When was the last time you saw an eighty year old woman driving fifteen MPH with "Surf Naked" or "Sex Wax" on her bumper.

Some bumper stickers are so rude; the driver's got to be a buthole. "Is That Your Face Or Did Your Neck Throw Up?" is pretty obnoxious. Not even I would have that one. You really don't see those on Porsche's.

I hate geeky stickers like,

"Hugs Are Better Than Drugs." What a stupid statement; it's so general — hugs from who? What drugs? Is a hug from Yasser Arafat better than pure cocaine? I doubt it.

A dweeb will have the sticker that says, "School Is Open; Drive Carefully." What the hell does that mean? In the summer when the kids aren't safely locked away, but are playing in the streets, you should drive recklessly? Is the sticker taken off on weekends or during the summer?

"Warning: I Brake For Animals," now isn't that special? Doesn't everyone automatically brake when an animal darts in front of their car? Do people with that bumper sticker think that they are "holier than thou"? I've noticed that you don't see those stickers on pick-up trucks with gun racks.

Bumper stickers are usually facts and tend to come and go. One should put much thought into a sticker, because it could prove to be embarrassing. How many "Mondale/Ferraro" stickers did you see after November '84? All you can do is cover a Mondale sticker with a "Wilson's" or "Winn Dixie" sticker; aren't they an attention getter? Unless you owned Wilson's, why would you want one on your car?

Who ever started the "I heart whatever" stickers should be shot. You know, they have a heart on it which is supposed to mean love. They make me want to puke!

I've seen "I Love My Wife" on a few bumpers. Spare me. Is this guy supposed to be righteous or something? You know that a whipped wimp is driving that car. How about "I Love My Boodie"? That is so cute. (Puke City!)

Some person has actually made millions with the "On Board" sign. They are worse than the stickers because they block your view, and they cost more.

"Baby On Board," I'm sick of that one the most. What's it supposed to mean? I shall refrain from hitting that car because there is a baby in it? I'd love to hit a car that has one of those signs, but no baby in it. You can tell them that you knew there was no baby on board, so you hit their lying ass.

Even rednecks love bumper stickers. Their favorites are something like, "The More I Learn About Women, The More I Like My Truck," or "This Car Protected By Smith And Wesson." I won't definitely not run into them.

My favorites new sticker is, "If You Don't Like My Driving, Call 1-800-EAT-S---." You fill it in, I don't want to get nasty letters.

I've only had one bumper sticker, and that was a few years ago. It read, "Warning: I Brake For Hallucinations." I put it on the "Green Monster" — a big ole Mercury Monterey. It was a new sticker then, so it got a lot of laughs. It said a lot about the driver.

A Greek Speaks Out

This letter is a response to many of the words that have been written about the Greek system this year.

When an individual makes the decision to join a Fraternity or Sorority, it is usually a decision based on the opportunities of Greek Life. Greek organizations provide a foundation for students from which they can use as a springboard to other activities. Many students never become involved in student activities. That is unfortunate since most personal growth and development is determined by the education one receives through leadership and involvement in campus organizations.

Greek organizations build confidence in its members, exemplify why it is important to be involved, show them how much fun it can be, and then encourage its members to involve themselves in organizations they have an interest in. It is a healthy relationship. Students who are already involved in campus life often join the Greek system because they understand how positive a Greek experience can be.

Greek life does not end when a student graduates. Often, as in my case, Greek organizations help with career placement. There are alumni chapters and functions which encourages networking later in life. Many national groups have over 100,000 initiates, with many years of experience, and the desire to further enhance the educations of its undergraduate members. This involvement can be in the form of advice, programming, scholarships, or leadership education.

On the UNCW campus Greeks are not only involved in Student Government. Respected organizations, like the Ambassadors and Student Orientation Leaders, have a high percentage of Greek members. Members of these groups are selected for their outgoing personalities and leadership abilities, not because they are affiliated with a Greek organization.

Greeks are a very diversified group. Members represent different parts of the country, ethnic backgrounds, religious affiliations, and personal beliefs. In raw numbers Greeks equal roughly 9-10% of the campus population. In reality Greeks represent most types of students that attend UNCW.

Greeks are also involved with groups like the University Program Board, the Seahawk, club sports, WLOZ, professional clubs, Crew club, and other organizations too numerous to mention.

I would guess the ultimate test to see if Greek involvement really works is to determine the performance of Greeks after graduation. Greek alumni in the news today include Jesse Jackson, Robert Dole, George Bush, and Mary McLeod Bethune. Greek alumni are well represented in the U.S. Senate, as Fortune 500 company CEO's, members of the House of Representatives, and Presidents of the United States.

Many professors on this campus represent the Greek system including Dr. James Harris-Finance, Dr. Ronald Copley-Finance, and Dr. Randy Harrington-Communications. University Administrators who are Greek include Dr. Richard Mullendore-Associate V. C. of Student Affairs, Mr. James Braye-Director of Career Planning and Placement, Dr. Bill Bryan-V.C. of Student Affairs, and others.

Members of Greek organizations commit themselves to reaching common goals. In attaining these goals challenges need to be met. Personality and decision conflicts, as in any organization do develop. We work through these challenges and conflicts. We pick each other up, dust each other off, learn from our mistakes, and then try again.

Maintaining and developing a Greek group takes not only experience, but strong problem-solving, leadership, communication, and people skills. If I understand correctly those characteristics parallel those types of skills that interviewers look for in job candidates. Maybe being a Greek is not so bad after all!!

Angry Student Wants To Park

Editor,

I live in the campus apartments. Since the start of the construction of the Gazebo I have noticed a direct correlation between the number of parking spaces available in the apartment's parking lot and the ability of students to use the sidewalk leading to New Hall from the apartments. When the sidewalk was closed I had no trouble finding a parking space late at night. Now that it's open again, I can rarely find a place to park short of having to park at the New Hall parking lot. I would like to tell the residents of New Hall to use their own damn parking lot. It is closer to where they live and more importantly it has a well-lighted path leading to their resident hall.

The people of new dorm should at least have some consideration for the female residents of the apartments who must walk an extra 300 yards to get to where they live using inadequately lighted paths when they are forced to park in New Hall's lot in the middle of the night.

Faculty Member Thanks University

Dear Seahawk Editors:

On behalf of the Steering Committee of the UNCW Faculty Women's Network, I am writing to thank the University community for turning out to hear congresswoman Patricia Schroeder speak. We regret the delay in her appearance due to innumerable snafus with the airlines. We really appreciate people's efforts to reschedule their day in order to hear Representative Schroeder's talk.

For those who managed to attend, I know they felt the effort was worthwhile. Pat Schroeder is a woman of wit, intelligence and vision. She is an inspiring role model for women and men across the nation.

Again, thanks for supporting our program.

Sincerely,
 Barbara Frey Waxman

P.S. Dr. Nell Painter's talk on Tues. march 29 at 7:30 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium promises to be equally stimulating and inspiring.

People: Designed For Relationship

Consider the facets of life, how many varied.

How like jugglers we are. All the dimensions and all the issues that make up each of us are like a series of balls we have to keep in motion in the air, grabbing one only to let it go to grab another. Into this juggling act, I want to introduce the concept of wholeness as a means of gaining perspective on all bits and pieces that make up our lives.

I believe that we emerged out of God's creative process designed for human existence characterized by a sense of wholeness. Four aspects of that wholeness help me orient my life choices and daily activities, help me to be more able to choose which balls I want to juggle.

We are people designed to be in relationship. First, there is our relationship to ourselves. What is your concept of yourself, your worth, your skills, your value?

The struggle towards a clear sense of identity grounded in my own sense of self worth marks the journey with one's self and includes coming to terms with the shadows within that create dis-ease and distort our view of self. It is a life-long journey of self awareness leading, potentially, to our taking increasing responsibility for who we are and how we interact with our environment and even how we treat our own bodies.

Our second relationship is with significant other people in our lives, friends and family who make a real difference in our quality of life. We are designed for intimacy but intimacy does not come easily. For a variety of reasons, relating to our view of self and others, we are space" called Earth. Growing involves decisions about what it means for us to be global citizens and leads us into political involvements and social justice concerns.

As a part of this third dimension, we are also eco-citizens, potential polluters of a delicate ecological system. It becomes a matter of personal values whether we are spoilers or sustainers of our natural paradise.

The fourth dimension, that which undergirds all the others for me is our relationship with God, our spiritual journey. It makes a critical difference to our sense of wholeness where in we lodge our belief as to the core of meaning. For me to say that a special kind of love, Holy Love, exists at the center of all creation and all life and is the power out of which I live is to point to the very center and core of meaning in my own life. To deny or ignore God or relegate God to the occasional worship service on Sunday, is to cut ourselves off from wholeness in life and a source of power that undergirds and sustains our search for wholeness.

To work at each of these relationships is to grow toward wholeness. To be at a place in your life where you feel a kind of balance between these four areas of relationship is to know peace and fulfillment in the midst of this comedy-drama that we call our human journey.

REVIEW

The Influence

by Scott Urban

I have a feeling that Ramsey Campbell has had the basic idea for The Influence rolling around in his head for quite some time. The Influence reads like a novel that should have come near the beginning of Campbell's career. If his past three novels have been long, complex examinations of an ethically ambiguous world, this current book paves down his scope, focusing on one family's involvement in and reaction to the unexplained. (The Influence, $14.95 from MacMillan, is available at Waldenbooks on Oleander Drive in Wilmington.)

For the uninitiated, Ramsey Campbell is England's answer to Stephen King. He began his writing career at a young age as an imitator of H.P. Lovecraft's ornate style, with its reclusive scholar and shambling, formless horrors. In the late '60s and throughout the '70s, Campbell found his own unique, macabre voice. His British city-scapes are cloaked, brooding vistas peopled with unpleasant characters and even less pleasant intruders from the "outside." His dense, richly-descriptive prose have made him a modern master of the short story.

In his latest novel, Alison and Derek Faraday, with their young daughter Rowan, share and uneasy and uncomfortable existence with Alison's aunt Queenie. Queenie is a bed-ridden spinster who nonetheless rules the household with an iron hand. When Queenie dies, she leaves her home to the Faradays—but she takes with her to the grave a locket with a snippet of Rowan's hair. Hermione, Alison's sister, a youthful victim of Queenie's manipulations, believes that evil forces are still at work, even after her aunt's death.

Rowan meets a mysterious girl named Vicky who bestows on Rowan dubious gifts and makes her question her family's ways. Rowan becomes solitary and uncooperative. She accompanies Hermione to her aunt's home in Wales, where Hermione finally breaks, and digs up Queenie's grave, while Rowan falls into a fit. She awakens and embarks on a nightmarish journey home—only to find that another Rowan has taken her place and that no one can see her. It is up to Alison to realize that something has gone awry in her home, and she must save her daughter—if she can figure out how.

Unfortunately, this is a plot and theme we've seen worked before, occasionally to better effect. The evil influence is clearly unambiguous and there's not much question as to what is going on or even what will happen from the first chapter. What makes the book interesting is the interaction between characters. Rowan is a believable, endearing child protagonist, and her mother and father's financial and emotional crises are portrayed convincingly. Campbell does turn in some effectively hair-raising scenes, particularly during Rowan's trek home, when she travels on a haunted commuter train and through a quiet neighborhood from Hell.

Because of its very drawbacks, The Influence makes a good starting point for the beginning Campbell reader. For those used to Campbell's more complex and grimmer visions, the new novel is a bit of a let-down. The Influence is somewhat less than we've come to expect from the reigning British goose-flesh maestro. (By the way, if Campbell sounds fun, pick up his Cold Print anthology, now out in paperback, which collects all of Campbell's Lovecraft-influenced stories.)

Bestsellers Pink Floyd play Raleigh on May 4

Returning to the United States after performing to sold out crowds in Asia and Australia, Pink Floyd's David Gilmour and Nick Mason, together with former Floyd member, Rick Wright, will perform in Carter-Finley stadium at North Carolina State University in Raleigh on Wednesday May 4, 1988.

It will be the first outdoor stadium date in North Carolina in ten years. The show will be one of a number of stadium dates in America on this the final leg of their tour in support of their album "A Momentary Lapse of Reason", their first release since 1982. Floyd's hugely successful "Dark Side of the Moon" has been on the album charts for a record-breaking 710 weeks.

Pink Floyd is the undisputed master of quadrophonic sound, in conjunction with modern methods of technology, lighting and special effects. The upcoming Pink Floyd show, promises to be spectacular and will feature material from their new album, as well as music from the albums "Dark Side of the Moon", "The Wall", and "Wish You Were Here."

The band promises even more special effects than those used during the two sold out shows in Chapel Hill last October. The stadium tour stage and equipment is being transported by twenty-three eighteen wheelers and will require four days to setup. It will require over eight-thousand person hours of work to setup and take down the show.

Pro Motion Concerts President Richard "Gus" Gusler announced that tickets for the show went on sale Friday, March 18 at 10:00 A.M. at all Ticketron locations and tickets may be obtained by calling Teletron at (800) 233-4050. Pro Motion Concerts, a Raleigh based company, promoted the two sold out Floyd concerts in Chapel Hill last October. For more information call (919) 828-1277.

Pro Motion Concerts President, Richard "Gus" Gusler announced that in conjunction with the Pink Floyd concert in Carter-Finley Stadium on May 4, WRDU Radio and the Record Bar will join with Pro Motion to collect food for the community food bank in Raleigh as well as other communities through out North Carolina. Each person attending the show in May will be encouraged to bring a can of food to the show to donate to the food bank. The food bank will have volunteers at the show to collect the food. The goal is to collect fifty-thousand pounds of food to feed the hungry.

The Seven Year Itch

by Heidi Berge

The Thalian Association seems to be shaking out some dust as it celebrates its 200th Birthday this year. Over eighty percent of the cast of "The Seven Year Itch" presented last weekend at Jake's were talented students from UNCW.

Terry Shappert shined as the husband who struggles between his conscience (Bruce Stow) and his desires for the young model/actress (Linda Porter) who moves into the apartment upstairs the day his wife (Tracy Stevens) and son (Michael McNeill) leave for their summer vacation.

Daniel Riggs plays a funny psychiatrist and author of the book The Scarlet Letter (that's A for adultery). The three women that the husband believes are after him have wonderful moments both together and on their own - especially Caroline Lewis as the sexy secretary.

Director Robbie Stone, cast members Mitch Butts, and St. Claire Ready also leaped from the SRO to present a great show!

Charlie a champ!!!

by Tamara Drew

The recent Charlie Daniels/Sawyer Brown concert was an enjoyable one, but I must admit that to criticize it puts me in a somewhat paradoxical situation.

As far as Wilmington performances go, the concert was fine. In comparison to a concert in Charlie Daniel's league, though, it was somewhat anticlimactic.

I guess that's what happens to a music lover who's been "spoiled" by witnessing the monstrous Volunteer Jam.

Sawyer Brown kicked off the show with several rousing numbers, but I was most impressed with the sweet harmonies in their rendition of "Please Come to Boston." Several slow and melodic songs followed before rousing numbers like "Can't Get Enough Of Your Love" got the audience on their feet and on the move. Though I'd give the band an overall OK for their set, I can't get rid of the feeling that the entirety of their musical energy got left somewhere down the road in South Carolina. They just didn't seem to really be INTO the concert.

Charlie Daniels

Daniels and his players came across like champs, though. There was a much higher degree of energy on the stage, and the band overcame an annoying array of technical difficulties without missing a beat. They showed true professionalism - when half of the stage was left without power, the half that had it played. When Tom Crain's amp went out, he juggled axes to keep the music flowing. Daniels is a firm believer that the show must go on, and it's hard telling how many people in the audience even knew what kind of technical problems were being overcome.

Between fighting the technical blues and shuffling around the stage, the Charlie Daniels Band performed an array of past hits, standards, and cuts intended for new albums - all to the delight of the crowd. Each of the players were spotlighted to best advantage, and my prevailing thought as I left the concert was that it was a shame that we couldn't provide a class national act like The Charlie Daniels Band with the mega crowd of many thousands of fans that they truly deserved.

I'll be there next time, you can count on that.

'Spring Fling Cabaret' Kid's benefit Saturday

The friends of Jazz-A-Ma-Tazz, a community-based, nonprofit children's jazz choir will sponsor the "Spring Fling Cabaret" benefit Saturday, March 26th from 9pm to 1am at the ILLA Hall, 5th and Kidder Streets in Wilmington.

Festivities will include a live jazz floor show, featuring Ray Codrington, Reggie Codrington, Charles Dungey, Millard Bell, Larry Price, Rudy Tyson and Cynthia Tyson. Between the live performances, a disc jockey will play music ranging from the Big Band era up through the 80's for dancing. There will be plenty of food and a photographer will be available to snap photos. Door prizes will also be awarded.

Individuals are encouraged to come dressed in the style of their favorite musical era, i.e. swing of the 30's, the hippie look of the 60's, etc.

A donation of $8.00 is being asked for the tickets. Proceeds will be used to help pay expenses to the 1988 Music Fest competition in Orlando, Florida on May 4-8. Tickets are on sale at the Wilmington Journal, 5, 7th Street and the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, 20 Market Street.

Tonight Show drummer Ed Shaughnessy comes to festival

by Nancy K. Hill

Ed Shaughnessy, drummer for Johnny Carson's "Tonight Show" band, will be the featured musician at the sixth annual UNCW Jazz Festival to be held on Saturday, March 26 and Sunday, March 27. He will perform at 3 p.m., on Sunday, in Kenan Auditorium. General Admission to Sunday's performance is $5, senior citizens and students $2, students with UNCW I.D. free.

Shaughnessy's performance with the 7 O'clock Jazz Ensemble will include arrangements of "Sun Swing," "On the Move," "Saturday Night Special," "Mr. C's Boogie," and "Salt Peanuts."

Also performing will be the UNCW Jazz Fusion Group and the award-winning UNCW Jazz Combo with compositions to include "Round Midnight" and "Eye of the Tiger."

On Saturday, Shaughnessy will lead a drum clinic from 10 a.m. to 12 noon in room 114 of Kenan Hall. He will critique jazz ensembles from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. Ensembles to perform include Wilmington's Jazz-A-Tazz, East Carolina University Jazz Ensemble, UNC-

Charlotte Jazz Ensemble, Caldwell-Community College Jazz Ensemble, Tarboro High School Jazz Ensemble, and Orange County High School. Saturday's events are free and open to the public.

Shaughnessy has been a regular-featured instrumentalist on the "Tonight Show" for 24 years. He is the author of two books, New Time Signatures in Jazz Drumming and Big Band Drummers' Reading Guide. He has been a faculty member of New York University and is the most sought-after drumset clinician in international music education. His achievements and honors have culminated in his organization of a new 7-piece ensemble, Ed Shaughnessy Energy Force.

Shaughnessy's appearance is sponsored by Seimer/Ludwig, McFadden Music, the UNCW creative arts department and the UNCW jazz program. For further information, contact the music division at 395-3390.

The Beatles: "I Want to Hold Your Hand," "Come Together," "Help!" "Lullabye for a Lazy Day."

That last title is no ringer. It's an unreleased Beatles tune, sung by John Lennon, unearthed for the syndicated radio series, The Lost Lennon Tapes. Legal problems prevent the song from being played on the radio, but you can read all about it—including some lyrics—in the April issue of Musicians Magazine.

"Lullabye for a Lazy Day" is just one of many Lennon discoveries coming to light this year. For although the ex-Beatle was murdered over seven years ago, a flood of Lennon-inspired TV, film, radio and print projects-in-process confirm the public's ongoing obsession with him. The Lost Lennon Tapes—drawing on 300 hours of material stored underneath Lennon's New York apartment building—is one of the most interesting developments.

Yoko Ono (Lennon's widow) tells Musicians why she released the tapes for broadcast: "There is always negative out there. I think we always have to try to do something positive, to turn it around. John was promoting my work all the time when he was alive. Now it's my turn. I wanted to share them with the people."

Elliott Mintz, a friend of John and Yoko, inventoried all of Lennon's possessions after Lennon's death. "He liked to hide things," Mintz revealed. "If he liked a song he wrote he would hide it on a cassette that began with 10 minutes of classical music taped off the radio, then hide the cassette in the linen closet."

Adding fuel to the burning Lennon fires will be the release this fall Andrew Solt's feature-length film, Imagine: John Lennon. Mintz recalls, "I was at Andrew Solt's office looking at the rough cut of the documentary. I left there and I went directly to a bar and had two double vodka martinis, dry with two olives in each. My hands were shaking. There's an aspect of all this that is still terrifying."

Time For Some Awards

With basketball season winding down, it is time once again for the 2nd Annual Shanklin Superlatives.

Without further adieu, the Shanklin Superlatives.

Player-of-the-Year: Hershey Hawkins, the scoring machine of Bradley University.

Coach-of-the-Year: The man of a million staves, John Chaney of Temple University.

The All-World Team: At the guards, Mark Macon of Temple and Gary Grant of Michigan. At center, Charles Smith of Pitt and at forwards, Danny Manning of Kansas and Sean Elliott of Arizona.

All-America Team: Guards are Vernon Maxwell of Florida and Steve Kerr of Arizona. The center is Stacey King of Oklahoma and the forwards are Fennis Dembo of Wyoming and Derrick Chievous of Missouri.

All Underrated Team: Guards include Byron Larkin of Xavier and Tom Garrick of Rhode Island. The best unknown forwards are Lionel Simmons of LaSalle and Tom Hammonds of Georgia Tech. The center is Mark Bryant of Seton Hall.

The All-Mike Tyson Team: The starting five of the Georgetown Hoyas, with help from Jerome Lane of Pitt and the rest of the Big East.

Best Excuse (A Tie): Charles Shackelford of N.C. State falling asleep on his hand on the flight back from Hawaii and UNCW assistant coach Bob Rosenkranz. "Seriously guys, the band broke on my watch and it fell into my coke."

Best Quote: "Think about what you just asked. How do I get from Bloomington, Indiana to Richmond, Virginia in the middle of basketball season. As I said before, Dick Tarrant is a great coach, but the son-of-a-bitch isn't my brother," said Bobby Knight after losing to Richmond in the NCAA tourney.

Best Game: The Loyola Marimont-Wyoming contest in the first round of the NCAA Tournament (Loyola won 119-115).

The following awards are derived from the UNCW basketball season and their opponents. I was fortunate and unfortunate to travel several times with the Seahawks.

The Best Crowd in the CAA: Who else, the fans of UNCW.

Best Facility in the Conference: The Patriot Center at George Mason.

Shot of the Year: Major Wiggins of UNCW with his monster dunk against William & Mary. It was a shot that shined in more ways than one.

Worst Official: Lenny Wirtz and all his wonderfully brilliant blind calls.

Best Nicknames: Larry "Snake by the Sea" Houzer and Scott "Smoker, Don't touch it its hot, Baby Fat" Tierney.

Worst Road Trip Moment: "But coach, I was in my room all night. I didn't light the fireworks off the stairwell." Myself while on the road with the Seahawks at Old Dominion.

Best Moment: Roy Walker canning two free throws with one second left on the clock to beat East Carolina Jan. 31, 1988.

UNCW has a claim to the number one ranking. This year's number one team, Temple, lost to Nevada-Las Vegas, who lost to Missouri, who lost to Kansas, who lost to Oklahoma, who fell to Pitt, who lost to Syracuse, who lost to Georgetown, who lost to Boston College who UNCW trounced.

In the other scenario, Temple got beat by UNLV, who fell to Missouri, who fell to Illinois, who got killed by UNC. The Tarheels lost to Duke three times, while Maryland downed the Blue Devils. Maryland got beat by West Virginia, who lost to James Madison, who UNCW beat twice.

"We have no claim to the Colonial Championship and we can't claim anything until we win 20 games," said UNCW forward Greg Bender about UNCW's claim to fame.

Adam Porter, a redshirt junior went even farther by saying, "The only thing we (the players) can claim is our sneakers. We can't even claim our jocks because they are taken up from us at the end of the year."

A Virginia-based school, Maryville also has a claim on the top spot as they conquered Roanoke, who beat VMI, who topped James Madison, who beat Richmond, who beat UNCW three times.

"Anybody with a name like Maryville shouldn't have a claim to anything. Do they even have a nickname?"

This all goes to show that the winner of the NCAA Tourney is the only one that has rights to claiming national prominence.

Who said the little man can't jump.

Playground superstar Tommy 'Sky' Atkins rocked Trask Coliseum with another one of his infamous dunks. (Atkins wasn't the culprit, but another UNCW student was as this backboard was shattered Friday in Trask Coliseum.)

Gambling Can Be A Disease

By Deborah Goodman
Staff Writer

This is the conclusion of a two-part series on gambling among college students.

For most people who participate in occasional sports betting, the worst thing that will happen to them is that they will lose some money. However, for about fifteen percent of individuals who gamble, it will change their lives. These people will become compulsive gamblers.

Gambling crosses the line from harmless pastime to an addictive disease when the individual is no longer able to control the desire to bet, and the consequences that follow.

Debts begin to pile up, and the betting interferes with, or destroys, the other parts of their lives such as work, school, family, and relationships.

According to the National Council on Compulsive Gambling, approximately eight to ten million Americans are afflicted with this psychological disorder. The average age of compulsive gamblers is 32, and 96 percent of them began to gamble before the age of 14.

As with any other addiction, the gambler is the last to admit that he has a problem, and then goes to only as a final option. Many never get to that point, as the suicide rate among compulsive gamblers is estimated to be more than 200 times that of the national average.

There are many personality and life-style traits that are common to most persons who are compulsive gamblers.

Almost all are white males from the middle to upper class. They are the life of the party, being friendly, sociable, funny, and generous. They love to go out in groups of people, never wanting to miss out on the action.

The gambler is usually of superior intelligence. Clever and manipulative, he is able to figure out angles to things that others might miss. He is assertive and persuasive; a real "bullshitter".

Compulsive gamblers are risk-seekers, with a craving for constant stimulation, excitement, and change. Many are entrepreneurs in their professional lives.

This is where the addiction to betting fits into the psychological profile. Gambling meets the needs of the person for stimulation, challenge, and risk.

To the casual observer, the compulsive gambler looks like he has it all. For those who know better, the picture is less rosy.

The compulsive gambler is hiding a great deal behind a front of confident independence and disregard for what other people think of him. He has trouble maintaining long-term intimate relationships, and so has many superficial friendships with people who hardly know the "real" him.

The goals of compulsive gamblers are to make friends, avoid rejection, and acquire the material goods and status that will win them recognition and approval.

To do this they will very often create a fantasy world around themselves that is the way that they would like for their life to be, making up stories of trust funds, world travel, and phony adventures.

This is where the lying begins that is such a large part of the compulsive gambler's life. With their lies, they build an elaborate castle of sand. As the tide of unpaid debts and other related problems come crashing in, the castle begins to wash away, exposing the compulsive gambler for what he is.

The compulsive gambler will lie about anything. He lies about where he went, where he is going, where his money went, and why he needs more. Lying becomes so natural to him that he begins to lie about things that have nothing to do with gambling, with things that no one would care about one way or the other.

As the disease progresses, the individual will get deeper and deeper into a rut that becomes unable to get out of. A vicious cycle begins as the gambler increases the frequency and intensity of his betting, in an attempt to cover his losses. At this point others will be called in to rescue the addict when he continues to lose.

Friends and family will write checks to cover those that would otherwise bounce, and assist in smoothing over other troubles that begin to publicly surface, so that the addict is able to avoid the pain of confronting the truth, and admitting that he has a problem. He is walking a tight-rope of lies and deception between debts and bad checks. His friends and family are the net that catch him when he falls.

For the cycle to be broken, the enabling behavior of the people around him must stop. This forces the gambler to face the responsibility for his own actions. Otherwise the cycle will continue, to a perhaps tragic ending.

"The first thing that has to be done is that the family has to stop bailing them out," says Dr. Robert Weinstein, a Wilmington psychiatrist.

"It's an issue of growing up." Compulsive gambling can be successfully treated. There are 425 national chapters of Gamblers Anonymous, a self-help group patterned after Alcoholics Anonymous, that helps compulsive gamblers regain control of their lives. The nearest GA chapter is in Raleigh.

Private counseling is also available for the treatment of this addiction. All of the psychiatrists in the Wilmington area are trained and willing to see patients with this problem, as are a number of the mental health service organizations that function within the city.

Compulsive gambling is a serious and destructive disease. For an individual to reach out for help is a very difficult and frightening thing, especially after having invested so much in creating the illusion that everything is fine, but when they do there is help available.

Baseball Team Begins To Gel

From Staff Reports

The overall record doesn't necessarily show it, but fifth-year coach Bobby Guthrie is convinced UNC Wilmington's baseball team is beginning to jell as it nears the midway point of the 1988 season.

The Seahawks, 6-16 overall and 2-1 in the Colonial Athletic Association, are in the midst of a seven-day stretch that features the same number of games. Included in that span is a three-game set this weekend (March 23-26) with league rival Richmond.

"I think we're beginning to play better overall as a team," said Guthrie. "I thought we played better the last two games of the Georgia Southern Tournament and it's carried over. We've played pretty good baseball most of the time."

The young Seahawks have faced a rugged schedule, losing early to regional powers Old Dominion, Clemson, and Virginia Tech. The tough non-conference trek paid off last weekend when UNCW took two-of-three with East Carolina in the Colonial Athletic Association opener.

"We've been in about every ball game," added Guthrie. "I feel like we're doing some things better. We're getting a whole lot closer to where we want to be."

The Seahawks have won three of their last four games behind the continued strong play of seniors Tim Langmeyer and Eric Hickman. Langmeyer is the leadoff batter and Hickman is a designated hitter/pitcher for UNCW.

Langmeyer, an outfielder from Charlotte, N.C., leads the team in hitting with a .397 batting average. He paces the team in five offensive categories: batting average (.397), runs scored (21), hits (29), stolen bases (15-16), and walks (19).

"Tim is definitely having a great year for us. We're weren't sure about having him as the leadoff hitter going into the season. But he's taken some pitches and gotten on base for us this spring."

A local product out of New Hanover High School, Hickman leads the team's pitchers in earned run average with a 2.25 ERA. The 1987 All-CAA performer, primarily a reliever one year ago, has taken over a position in the starting rotation for Guthrie.

State drops UNCW, 9-8

From Staff Reports

Mark Withers tie-breaking RBI-single off losing pitcher Keith Jarmen (0-1) gave N.C. State a 9-8 victory over UNCW in college baseball action Wednesday.

Ed Stoudenmire's RBI-single in the top of the ninth pulled UNCW even at eight apiece, but the Seahawks couldn't hold on. Tim Langmeyer and Stoudenmire had two hits each for the Seahawks who fall to 6-17 on the season.

Lady Seahawks Take Tournament

From Staff Reports

The UNCW women's golf team captured first place in the prestigious North - South Invitational Tournament at the Bay Meadows Golf Course March 8-9. The Lady Seahawks shot a team total 656 (318-338) and were led by Paige Cribbs 156 (73-83).

"I feel pretty good about the way we've played," said Dudley. "Our scores are a little high, but I'm very optimistic about what we can do."

The Lady Seahawks return to the Inks April 1-2 at the Duke Invitational.

Johns Keeps Lady Netters On Roll

From Staff Reports

The UNC Wilmington's women's tennis team is off to an impressive start with a 6-1 record. Fifth year head coach Kim Clark attributes the Lady Seahawks early success to the play of their number one seeded player, Karen Jones.

"I'm very happy so far and hope we can continue our success," Clark said. "I've been pleasantly surprised with Karen Johns. I didn't know how she would react to college tennis, but she's done well."

The Lady Netters, fresh off a victory Tuesday against Atlantic Christian, play again Wednesday at Coastal Carolina.

AT A GLANCE

Ronald McDonald Fundraiser

Alpha Delta Pi is working with Scott Paper Company to help out the Ronald McDonald House. For every UPC code clipped off of Scott Paper products, Scott Paper Company will donate $.05 to the Ronald McDonald House. Since the Ronald McDonald House is our national philanthropy, we are pushing this project hard and would like your help. They will give five free pizzas to the group who collects the most UPC codes and returns them to us by April 20, 1988.

Lapaire's Article Accepted

Dr. Pierre J. Lapaire, assistant professor in the department of modern languages, has had an article accepted for publication in the French Review. The article is an analysis of the values and functions of dramatic silences in Henry de Montherlant's play, "Le Cardinal d'Espagne."

Toplin's Article Published

Dr. Robert Toplin, professor of history, has had an article on the filmmaking of Bill Moyers published in Perspectives, a publication of the American Historical Association.

UNCW Welcomes Employees

Welcome to new employees, Susan V. Ritz in management & marketing; Frank L. Blais in the physical plant and Martha MacLennan in modern languages.

Students Win Honors

Two piano students of Dr. Richard Deas, professor of music, won honors in the Southeastern Community College Piano Contest/Festival held March 11-12 in Whiteville. Larry McLendon won first place and $200 and Jennifer Stallings won third place in the Collegiate Division. Dr. Deas served as judge in the High School Division.

Martin Nominated for Award

Dr. Ned H. Martin, professor of chemistry, was co-author of an article, "Corrosion Inhibitors for Flue Gas Desulfurization Systems," which appeared in the February issue of Materials Performance. The authors were honored on their outstanding contribution in corrosion engineering represented by their work on reducing corrosion in SO<sub>2</sub> scrubbers on coal-fired power plant stacks. The research was done in conjunction with LaQue Center for Corrosion Technology at Wrightsville Beach.

Johnson's Article Accepted

Dr. James Johnson, assistant professor of psychology, has had his article entitled "The effects of multiple moderation of salient cognitions" accepted for publication in the Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin. The article, to appear later this year, was co-authored by Dr. Lee A. Jackson, professor of psychology.

Lockledge conducts Workshop

Dr. Ann Lockledge of the school of education attended the annual meeting of the North Carolina Council for the Social Studies held February 25-26 in Greensboro. While there she conducted a workshop on teaching material entitled "Elevating Economics to Exercises in Excitement."

Cunningham Judges Entries

Mini Cunningham, director of university relations, recently participated in judging the 1987 entries in the North Carolina School Bell Awards for excellence in reporting and interpreting public school news. This is the fourth time she has been invited to represent UNCW as a judge for these awards which are sponsored annually by the NC Association of Educators.

Combs Presents Paper

Dr. C. Sue Combs, assistant professor of physical education in the HPER Department, presented a paper, "Project Transition: Assessment and Curriculum on Health Related Fitness and Hygiene for Mentally Retarded Adults," at "A Total Commitment Workshop" held last week at NCA&T University. The workshop was held for individuals serving handicapped youth and adults in health, physical education, recreation and dance.

McGuire's Review Published

Dr. Phillip McGuire, history faculty member, has had his book review of Martin W. Stewart: America's First Black Woman Political Writer: Essays and Speeches by Mariya Richardson accepted for publication in The Journal of the Interdenominational Theological Center.

Borngiorno A Finalist

Frank J. Borngiorno, assistant professor of music, has been selected as a quarter finalist of the Concert Artists Guild International New York Competition.

Cockrell Presents Workshop

Dr. David Cockrell of the department of health, physical education and recreation, presented a workshop recently on teaching-critical thinking in the parks and recreation curriculum during the Society of Parks and Recreation Educators' National Teaching Institute held in Saratoga Springs, NY.

Fort Publishes Poem

Charles Fort, director of the creative writing program and associate professor of English, has published a poem from his sonnet-sequence, The Post's Daughter, titled "Something He Called Her Lovely." The poem appears in The Lyricist, the literary journal at Campbell University.

Alston Fulfilling Promise

By Celeste E. Bulley
Editor-in-Chief

Newly elected Student Government President Karia Alston is already following through on one of her campaign promises, a promise to involve the UNCW students through opening several formerly appointed positions and committee seats to an application process instead. The first area to receive this change is the Campus Judicial Board (CJB) and applications will be available April 1 in the SGA office.

The Judicial Board is a group of 6 students and 2 members of the faculty which hears original cases of students who are subject to disciplinary action. It also serves as a board of appeals for students who feel they have been treated unfairly in an administrative hearing, and its members have always been filled by appointment at Student Government meetings.

"The (CJB) has never been filled by applicants before," said Alston. "Formerly the Senate appointed members, and the same type people usually served on the Board."

"It is not appropriate to have all the same people on all the same committees -- they sometimes overextend themselves," said Alston.

Assistant Dean of Students Mary Ann Maimone, who has worked with the campus Judicial Boards of other campuses, has written a proposal for implementing an application process at UNCW and agrees with Alston's ideas.

"A seat on the Campus Judicial Board is a fairly prestigious position," said Maimone. "Students don't realize that only the Chancellor can overturn the Board's decisions."

Alston said she had talked to Maimone about the proposal before she put the process in motion. "She and I feel that the application method is the only fair method of giving the students thorough peer representation when appealing cases," said Alston.

"Through the implementation of an application process, a Board can be selected which more closely resembles the demographics of the actual student population," said Maimone. "Diversity among board members (can) lead to representation of varied perspectives hearing each case which, in turn, (increases the) board's overall objectivity."

According to SGA Vice President Robert Smith, who is a member of this year's CJB, when a student is sent to the Dean of Students for disciplinary action, they have a choice of who will hear the case, the Office of the Dean of Students or the CJB. "This is our primary function, and it is not an easy job," said

Smith. "most of these type of original cases are clear-cut; the appeals are not so easy."

The function of the Campus Judicial Board in hearing an appeal is that of reviewing the action of administrative hearing officer to determine if an alleged violation of the rights guaranteed to the student has occurred, the sanction is too severe for the violation, or new evidence has developed which has bearing on the verdict.

In the event a charged student disagrees with a finding of guilt or sanction of an administrative hearing officer, the charged student may request an appeal to the CJB within 72 hours after notification of the decision. Original sanctions are normally put into effect only after the CJB makes a decision.

"According to personal interviews with both current and past board members, students know little about the board and just what they are getting involved in at the time of their appointment," said Maimone.

For example, many students do not realize the educational and developmental side of the board. The CJB tries to help students learn from their experiences by assigning students with substance abuse violations

Greek Week Closes A Success

By Alise Ellis
Staff Writer

The UNCW "Beach" Greeks battled it out March 18-24 during this year's Greek Week, with Sigma Alpha Epsilon coming in first place with 132 points; Tau Nu Pi and Alpha Delta Pi tied for second place with 124 points; and Delta Zeta came in third.

According to Jeff Stienmiller, Greek Advisor, fraternities and sororities earned points through participation in Educational sessions; Philanthropy; banner, sing, float, lip sync; and the competitive games.

"I think Greek Week was successful, it brought enthusiasm back to the Chapters and gave them something to work for"

Kevin Kolner

In a freak accident Tuesday, a student was attacked by an angry bookcase. APRIL FOOLS!!! Actually, Spring has started, exams aren't here yet, but at least one student is feeling overwhelmed with all the pre and post Easter exams.

Non-Trads Growing

By Theresa Mallon
Staff Writer

Only a semester after it first began, UNCW's Non-Traditional Student Organization has taken off to a truly promising start! Under Mary Ann Maimone, the acting Assistant Dean of Students, who is serving as advisor much progress has already been made.

A constitution for the organization has been drawn up by the members and officers and it will have gone before the S.G.A. on March 30th, in order to gain university recognition and support for the group.

The officers, themselves were also just recently appointed. Five of the original charter members to the organization were named to offices; Amy Byrne (Chairperson), Lin Klungie (Vice-Chairperson), William Nealy (Treasurer), Doris Priest (Secretary) and Corliss Wolfe (Practicing Student).

The group meets every Thursday evening from 7:30-8:30 in room 210 of the University Union, "The Quiet Lounge". The main goal behind the organization is to be supportive as well as educational while keeping the unique needs of the non-traditional student in mind. Each meeting features a guest speaker as well as activities designed to help the non-trad make the transition into university life.

Two of the more recent events held by the non-traditional student organization were huge successes. On March 23, a pizza dinner was held in the University Union for non-traditional students and their families and it had a turnout of over forty members.

The following evening, March

24th, female non-traditional students were hosted to a dinner by "Zonta," the Women's Rotary Club, and this had an equally pleasing turnout of twenty-three members.

This Thursday, March 31st, Diane McIntosh, Director of the Student Development Center and fervent supporter of the non-traditional student organization, will be giving a stress-management workshop from 7:30-8:30 pm in RM 210 of the University Union. "It's very important," said Amy Byrne, chairperson to the organization, "that we hear from the students in order to help fulfill the needs they encounter."

If you have any questions, comments or need information on upcoming events, please call Amy Byrne at 395-3280 or Mary Ann Maimone at 395-3119.

"During the Educational sessions, which dealt with AIDS, we learned a lot about the different aspects concerning psychology, religion, and health," said Missy Kenon, co-chair of Greek Week.

To fulfill the Philanthropic aspect, the "Beach" Greeks are raising money through car washes in April, which will be given to Hospice in care of AIDS patients. Kenon anticipated the Greeks could raise over $1000 for the charity.

"I think Greek Week was successful. It brought enthusiasm back to the Chapters and gave them something to work for," said co-chair Kevin Kolner.

Kenon and Kolner have been organizing Greek Week since November, and both were happy with the overall participation of the Greek members.

Other awards which were presented include: the Spirit Award-Tau Nu Pi; Greek Man-Jeff Clark; Greek Woman-Kim McIntosh; and Faculty Member-Dr. Gerald H. Shinn of the Philosophy and Religion Department.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon was presented a trophy which they will keep until next year's competition. The second and third place winners received plaques.

Greeks Face Hard Times Nationwide

(CPS) -- Administrators at 2,700-student Hope College in Holland, Michigan, had had enough.

Hearing of "life-threatening" hazing activities -- pledges were dropped off in woods in the middle of the night, forced to drink alcohol and to perform mock sexual acts during a "slave auction" -- at the Arcadian fraternity, they kicked the chapter off campus March 3.

It was the second time in a year they'd disciplined a fraternity.

The administration, said Brian Breen, editor of the school paper, is "anti-greek."

And, for the first time at Hope and scores of other campuses around the country, administrators probably would agree.

"If that's their opinion, that's fine," said Hope spokesman Tom Renner. "But there's a growing national awareness that Greeks must be responsible citizens."

The troubles at Hope -- when some 300 students signed petitions complaining administrators are too quick to crack down on fraternities and sororities -- are just the most recent in which colleges have been quick to discipline Greeks.

Since February 1, for example, administrators at Duke and Turgers universities and the universities of Rochester, Texas, Pennsylvania and Colorado have disciplined, suspended or banned outright certain chapters.

Still others opened debated to change the way frats are run, or to get rid of them altogether.

Yale University President Benno Schmidt -- a former Delta Kappa Epsilon -- blasted fraternities for their "exclusionary" policies and emphasis on drinking. "If I were doing it again I would not join a fraternity."

"Some reports would indicate that alcohol consumption is the main reason for the existence of some of them," said Schmidt.

Stanford University Dean of Students Affairs James Lyons issued a report that said fraternities and sororities should change the way they choose members if they want to stay on campus.

The current system, he said, encourages Greek organizations to discriminate on the basis of race, gender, sexual preference, class and religion.

Students Against Greek Establishments (SAGE), a University of California--Santa Cruz student group with 95 members, is lobbying to shut down the university's Greek system on the grounds it fosters sexism, racism, homophobia and uses subjective selection methods when choosing new members.

Distilking Greeks, in short, is an increasingly hot topic on many campuses.

The current anti-greek wave probably began in the early 80s when, pressed by insurance companies worried that drunken students might hurt themselves and violations to the "Thinking About Drinking" program through the Alternatives! center, for example. "We've assigned some violators to 10 hours of community service with the campus police," said Maimone.

The application interested students will be receiving is designed to educate them in two ways. First, a cover letter briefly describing the CJB's functions and the member's responsibility will accompany the application. Then applicants would be required to respond to essay questions addressing their motivation for applying and their understanding of CJB member's responsibilities.

Alston hopes having the students respond to such questions will prompt students to learn a little more about the board and examine how they see themselves as part of an effective CJB.

The application deadline for the CJB is April 15, and the appointments will be made by the Student Senate April 18.

"It is a very important board, and it is important to have more students involved with it than just the student leaders who come around the SGA office, or those who've heard about it from their SGA friends," said Alston.

"I hope the campus wide application process will give the board a broader membership, and the selectiveness of the board will increase the CJB's reputation."

sorts of potentially dangerous activities.

Nevertheless, it took 5 years of neighborhood complaints and ultimately a shooting incident to convince University of Arizona to ban the UA Sigma Nu chapter.

That same year, the University of Georgia abolished a fraternity for the first time ever, but only after police broke up drug sales at the house. Twice.

"No one was willing to say this was wrong and take action because so many alumni belonged to fraternities, and no one wanted to offend those who gave generously to their schools," said Eileen Stevens, who founded an anti-hazing group—the Committee to Halt Useless Killings—after her son died in a hazing incident.

Administrators also had an attitude of "boys will be boys."

All that, Stevens said, is changing "as people understand just how bad this has been."

No one wrings hands or waits for committee reports anymore.

Rutgers President Edward Bloustein took all of 24 hours to call for kicking the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity off campus after a pledge, James C. Callahan, 18, died during a "drink until you are sick" party Feb. 12.

Hope College's Renner noted there are other reasons administrators are cracking down on Greeks harder and faster.

His school's insurance company has threatened to cancel liability insurance in the wake of reports of excessive drinking and physical abuse. "Either we take steps for safe, college-sponsored activities, or we lose our insurance."

Greeks themselves argue they're being victimized and unfairly stereotyped.

Jonathan J. Brandt, executive director of the National Interfraternity Council, points out that the popularity of Greek organizations have enjoyed throughout the 1980s—after suffering from declining interest in the late 60s and 70s—can not be attributed to drinking alone. Many students join fraternities and sororities for academic and career support, he said, adding that Greeks are often leaders in promoting safe drinking.

"Fraternities are not designed to be drinking clubs," said Brandt. "We're promoting moderate and lawful use of alcohol."

"We are not exclusionary except we do not let women rush," said Yale Delta Kappa Epsilon Steve Gallo at a campuswide forum on whether fraternities and sororities have a role at the school.

Finding "objective" ways to choose members "would not work," contended Durwood Owen, executive director of Pi Kappa Phi's national chapter, in a phone interview with College Press Service.

"You can't quantify friendship or comradeship. What do they want us to do? You can't quantify the concept of fraternity," he said of the Stanford suggestion to change the way Greeks choose members.

"Pledging is a complicated process and every activity we do serves some purpose," wrote Harry Coffill, a member of Hope's Emersonian fraternity, in a letter to The Anchor, the campus paper. "It is also considered our greatest secret."

Renner argues Hope merely is trying to "sensitize" Greeks to controlling their memberships better. "We're not trying to make Greeks extinct on campus. We've evidenced we're trying to work with them."

Ex-Candidate Has His Say About Election

Editor:

The road to Office A in the SGA Office is never an easy one. You never know quite what to do; I know in my heart I chose the right road; it just led me the wrong way.

I ran a clean campaign. I chose not take big money from special interests. I chose not to run as a Greek Candidate. I chose not to run as the white male candidate.

What I chose was to run as a student. A student with ideas that would put SGA back to work for the students. I did not try to mold myself to fit anyone's special needs. I did not run a "what ever you want to hear" campaign. I went to organizations and I talked issues. But I guess that's not what UNCW wanted to hear.

To the 250 students who voted for a complete change in SGA, you have my deepest heart-filled thanks. To Brian Holler and Jim Kraft, a special thanks. To all the students who promised to help me and never showed up, maybe you could have made a difference. To all of the students who wanted Kermit the Frog for SGA President, I just want you to know that you more or less got your way. A real puppet for a puppet job.

At this time so many what ifs come to mind. What if I did this, what if I did that. Well, who knows.

I think it is evident that a bull horn speaks louder than a single voice. Well, my single voice will still be in the Senate fighting for what's right. Fighting for you. Good luck to Karla. She has a hard road ahead.

Annual Recreation Banquet To Be Held In Hawk's Nest

The Annual Recreation Banquet, sponsored by the Recreation Majors Association, will be on Wednesday, April 13th, from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. The banquet will be held in the University Union's Hawk's Nest. The occasion will bring together recreation alumni, friends, students, and faculty for and evening of professional enlightenment and social interaction. Dr. Karen Hancock, Coordinator of the Recreation Curriculum of East Carolina University, will be the keynote speaker for the evening.

Chapter status has been granted to UNCW's Park and Recreation curriculum by Rho Phi Lambda, the national recreation, parks, and leisure honorary fraternity. The chapter will be officially inaugurated that evening and our first members inducted.

All students are invited to attend. Tickets are $5.00 per person and can be purchased through ticket sellers in every recreation class. For more information, please contact Dr. Dave Culklin, faculty advisor to the Recreation Majors Association, in the HPER office in Trask Coliseum.

Leadership Workshop Offered

The University Union's Activities Office is sponsoring a workshop on Wednesday, April 20th from 5 to 7 p.m. to cover the topics in the forefront of every leader's mind right now. Whether experienced or brand new, student leaders from any campus organization will benefit from this small investment of time. The what, where, when, and how of beginning a new term of office will be addressed, with plenty of tips on how to give your organization the edge come fall semester.

There will be no charge for the program. Pre-registration is required and forms can be obtained from the Student Activities Office, room 202 in the Union and the Union Information Center. For more information contact Jeff Steinmiller or Cindy Zeiler in the Student Activities Office or Linda Moore, Union Director.

COMMENTARY

Causes Becoming Hip Again

by Erin Doyle
Special to the Seahawk

(CPS) — Causes are hip again. But not if you have to wear love beads.

The new volunteers are swarming to help the least fortunate at a startling rate. Perhaps more startling is their origin. These are not particularly socially conscious individuals raised on a kibbutz or a commune. These are people living in high-rises and driving cars that cost twice what most of us will be paid our first year out of college. These people are busy. They have money to earn, coffee beans to grind and brunches to eat.

Yuppies are volunteering. It's the latest thing.

Good for them. Right? What could be better than people with time, money and compassion to give? People who actually give it.

As one volunteer put it, volunteering "makes me feel lucky. When I go home and see what I have, it all means so much more."

There are so many social problems and so few ways to address them," notes another, adding that volunteering "makes you feel less guilty."

Shirley Keller, vice president of Workplace Programs for Volunteers, speculates this sudden increase in voluntarism is, in part, due to the need for security. Individuals feel that if they look after someone now, someone will look after them later. Probably while their friends and children are boating.

Mike King, executive VP of the organization, has a different theory.

"Why are they there? To meet other yuppies. It's better than a singles bar."

The newest trend, the compassion kick, is receiving more publicity every day. Tutors. Hospital volunteers. Soup-kitchen workers. Volunteering is a lot less fun than squash, but it beats aerobics any day.

The upwardly mobile are anxious to help. It sounds so good. It only takes a few hours a week.

However, as a friend of mine noted, "Um, I don't mean to cut it down, but I think volunteering has been around for quite a while. It's nothing new."

She's right. I have an aunt in Washington, D.C., who, every holiday season, stays there. Her mother lives in Chicago, as does the rest of the family, but my aunt stays to deliver Christmas dinner to shut-ins. My aunt is no saint, but I do admire her for this. She genuinely wants to help someone. She does not do it for the sole benefit of making herself feel less guilty for owning a Cuisinart.

In many cases, a lot of the motivation is positive publicity. Companies that sponsor volunteer programs look good in the eyes of everyone but the stockholders. It bothers investors to think that their money may be poured into a company that is not putting all its effort into making more cash.

Some companies, most notably Atlantic Richfield Co., were forced to downplay volunteer expenditures when the company was not as profitable as it had been the previous year. Helping the less fortunate has its merits, but shareholders have their good points too.

There's something wrong with this whole rationale.

Volunteering, I always thought, was something one might do with one's extra time because there was a need to be filled. The needy take the form of homeless individuals, children with reading problems or seniors citizens unable to pick up their own groceries. It could take the form of terminally ill kids.

This need, until now, had not manifested itself as a need to purge oneself of guilt or meet other who share that guilt in hopes of diffusing it.

One exec mentioned a day he was exhausted from work and contemplated skipping his customary visit to a terminally ill boy. He arrived at the hospital and told the kid what a bad day he had.

The boy replied, "Yeah, I had a pretty tough day too."

Imagine that. In a very warped way, however, things are happening. People are being helped. The motivation for all this positive action is laughable. And that's unfortunate. We're dealing with a very serious problem: people who are in desperate need of help. The people helping them are treating it as a trendy hobby. They are feeding a few dozen of the hungry homeless and visiting a sick kid or two. For that low price they get:

REDUCED GUILT!
OPPORTUNITIES TO MEET NEW PEOPLE!

What is going on? We can only hope that the ends do indeed justify the means. Even if the helping is done for the wrong reasons, there remains the potential for an important learning experience.

Personal interaction with people in need can only raise consciousness, making individuals with the power aware of what needs to be done. After the trendiness of the whole concept wears off, maybe there will remain a core of concerned people with the means to do a lot of good.

It would be a shame if the cause became old news and was replaced by another diversion.

Residents Should Have A Choice

On-campus residents have a variety of choices as to where they want to live. One choice they don't have, however, is whether or not they want to have a meal plan.

Students on this campus are required to purchase a minimum meal plan of ten meals per week. This is ridiculous in light of the fact that some of the residences (the apartments and New Hall) have kitchens in them. These residences have stoves, refrigerators and sinks. If a full fledged chef were living in one of these places he would still have to purchase a meal plan. He doesn't have to eat it, but he does have to spend at least $450 if he lives in the apartments or $500 in any other residence hall per semester for the thing.

There have been complaints about this fact for years now and housing has said that this "requirement" is incorporated into a "room and board" plan. They are under contract with ARA Food Services to maintain a minimum number of students to keep the rest of the students who want a meal plan from having to pay more.

Hopefully meal plans will be an option for the on-campus residents instead of a requirement. The U.S. allows us, at this age, to choose a leader, and we as a group have been competent enough to choose where we want to attend school we ought to be able to choose where we want to spend our money on our food!

Faculty Should Abide By Their Time

Why do some instructors seem to think they have the right to consistently come late into their lectures, or hold students in their classes until long after it's possible for the students to make it to their next class on time?

Perhaps its because UNCW's administration gave them that right.

Contrary to popular student conception, there is no comprehensive UNCW policy which allows students to leave a classroom after any period of time without penalty. Often students say "leave after ten minutes if it's a lecturer, and fifteen minutes if a Dr." — we hope those students read this and realize that there is no comprehensive University policy which allows this.

And the penalty, if the instructor decides to penalize, is up to his discretion.

Nor is there a policy which states that students should be released from class by a certain time (ten minutes before the hour on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, and fifteen before on Tuesdays and Thursdays). In fact, each class is allowed to be in their designated room until the time the next class is scheduled to begin.

Surely this is a University oversight.

If the University allows teachers to set their own individual attendance policies, they should see that the student's rights, specifically the right to have enough time to get to the next class comfortably, are protected by creating a policy which prevents teachers from running over their lecture time. And if students are not allowed to be tardy, neither should instructors.

Republican Dream All Too Real

Rick Cairns,
Seahawk columnist

Nixon has always been my hero, and that Reagan was God. They fell for it.

I had the most vivid dream last night. I was so relieved when I realized that it wasn't real, and I wasn't a young republican.

In my dream, I was paid big bucks to go undercover and infiltrate the campus republicans. I don't know who paid me or how much I got, but it must have been quite a wad, for me to get a short haircut and wear polyester.

I don't know where they hang out, but in my dream I did. I had to watch every episode of "Family Ties" until I could do a respectable Alex Keaton imitation.

I needed some republican paraphernalia, but all I had were Nixon and Reagan masks which I used to scare kids with. I didn't think that the republicans would take too kindly to me wearing one to their meetings.

The best I could do was to come up with a Robertson button; I coned a Jehovah's Witness out of it. I told him that I would never accept a blood transfusion, if he gave me his button. He jumped on that idea like a yard dog. He figured that he had saved another soul.

First I had buddy-buddy with guys named Chas, Wentworth and Worthington. I told them that If these guys knew that I was wearing black bikini underwear, I would have been alienated immediately. Their club has a white, Fruit-Of-The-Loom only rule. I don't know why.

This dream was so weird; they actually made tombstones for all the countries that have fallen to communism. Then they get this—put them on the front lawn of the student union. I know it sounds absurd, but you know how dreams are.

I wanted to put a damper on their fun, so I waited until three in the morning and put some babies tombstones beside theirs. The epitaph read something like, "Born 1987 Died 1988, Burned to death by a contra freedom fighter's flamethrower, which was made in America."

I was so excited about seeing their reaction, that I couldn't fall asleep. It didn't matter though, because I was already sleeping. Dreams are weird, huh?

I was so disappointed when there was no reaction. I went to the front of the union (it was located on the beach) and their tombstones were still standing, but so were mine. I took a closer look and saw that they added to each of my tombstones, "this baby was a communist." Chas and Buttworth were standing around admiring their handy work.

I hadn't accomplished anything as a spy, but my big chance was to be that evening, at the meeting. I had to think of a proposal which would make me a legend with the republicans. I was extremely nervous when I entered the polyester pub. (It was on the eighth floor of the union.) Everyone was excited about some big shot named, Reagan Millhouse Bush, who was supposed to make an appearance. He finally arrived to a standing ovation. (He oozed under the door.) He was introduced to the new guy—me. My alias was Elsworth D. Beezlebob. (Beezlebob?)

got down to business. A long discussion about adding Perrier to the soda machines on campus was followed by a pep rally. They were cheering the invasion of U.S. troops in Nicaragua, and the Perrier was flowing. Those guys know how to party. (The Bush guy was now wearing the Wall Street Journal, and wiping his fat face with money.)

I finally got to take the floor. I was all gung-ho, and pledged my allegiance to Ronnie baby. Then I hit them with my great proposal. I started telling them that we weren't doing enough in support of the President. Meetings, tombstones and rally's were too frivolous; we needed to join the army, and help to fight off those commie bastards!

Dead silence filled the room. Finally a rosy cheeked, young repub, with the thickest glasses that I've ever seen, blurted, "I'm gonna tell my Dad that you said that."

It's all hazy after that. I barley recall that a few of them disguised themselves as plumbers and broke into my house. (Old habits never die.) They confiscated an old John Anderson poster, and the next thing I knew, my personal tombstone was erected on the union lawn.

Why can't I dream about huge human eating bats from hell, or werewolves, like everyone else?

Center Your Life In God's Love

Once again the incredible events behind Good Friday and Easter reach out with the pain and doubt shattering affirmation that Holy Love triumphs over Death. How reassuring a conviction it is that there is no power on earth that can overcome a person whose life is centered in the Love of God.

Such is the witness of Jesus. Such is the witness of former Archbishop Oscar Romero of El Salvador, assassinated three years ago on March 24th, 1980. He, too, was a man like Jesus who sought to live in the strength of the Love of God and live out the implications of that Love in the social, political and economic realities of his people. He loved God and served His people. It cost him his life, but he died victoriously. In an interview fifteen days before his death he said, "I have frequently been threatened with death. I must tell you that as a Christian, I do not believe in death without resurrection: if I am killed, I will rise again in the Salvadorian people. I say that to you without arrogance, with the greatest humility. As pastor, I am obliged, by divine command, to give my life for those whom I love — and that is all Salvadorians — even those who may assassinate me. If the threat should come to pass, I offer God, from this very moment, my blood for the redemption and for the resurrection of El Salvador."

We all feel threatened, whether by graduation without a job, nuclear holocaust, relationships or marriages that are dying or friends run down by a drunken driver. Such threats or struggles tend to leave us weakened and feeling powerless. I would have you take heart in the witness of Jesus of Nazareth and Romero of El Salvador who being grounded in God allowed neither the threat of death nor the reality of death to overcome them.

Heavy thoughts! Yet, we all deal with endings in our lives and need to be aware that we have or can have power to live through pain and loss and transition into a new life on the other side of whatever experience of death comes our way. To live with the kind of victoriousness demonstrated by Jesus of Nazareth and Romero of El Salvador comes only to lives rooted deeply in the power and presence of God's love. To me, the issue of faith is not belief or unbelief but the search for the power to live and die and live again.

Azalea Festival !!!

by Rick Cairns & Heidi Berge Entertainment staff writers

Neil Sedaka

Tom Jones

Kim Morgan Greene

Stars and much more in store for the crowd

Pink Floyd, U2, Bruce Springsteen, and Gay Bikers On Acid are all going to be at the Azalea Festival this year... (April Fools!)

Now that we have your attention, allow us to tell you who will be at Azalea Festival XLI (41 for you non-Romans). Entertainment stars whose careers have both flourished and weathered the past few decades (as sure as the blooming azaleas) will descend on Wilmington this year. You'll recognize the excitement in your parents' eyes as next week draws near - and you shouldn't miss these performers. You might simultaneously experience their timeless quality and bridge the generation gap for the weekend. Remember... everything old is new again!

Tom Jones, known well by the sensuality of his voice and undulating hips that rivaled "Big E" (Elvis) in the 60's, will be crooning April 7th at Trask Coliseum. Jones is an international star who is well remembered for hits such as "What's New Pussycat?", "She's a Lady", and "It's Not Unusual."

David Ward, president of the Azalea Festival, says Jones has received nothing but excellent reports on his performances. He is still considered a sex symbol by many women.

The following evening will feature a variety show at Legion Stadium headlining Bobby Bare. Bare's musical career spans 25 years and shows no signs of slowing down. He'll sing hits such as "Five Hundred Miles Away meet my folks

From Home" and "Detroit City." The show also includes a wide range of local music and entertainment.

Queen Azalea XLI, Kim Morgan Greene of "The Colby's" will make an appearance. The show begins at 6:30 pm and closes about 9:30. A fireworks display will end the show. Admission is free.

The Azalea Festival parade takes place Saturday morning. Bleacher seats are available for $4.00, but standing room along Third Street is free.

Celebrities Khirstyne Haje, the 18 year old poetry-loving Simone from Head of the Class; actor Larry Drake - the retarded Benny Sulwicz from L.A. Law; and Actress Kassie Wesley of The Guiding Light will all be at the parade, making guest appearances, and generally enjoying the party.

Spencer Christian, the weather man of Good Morning America will be on the WWAY TV-3 float, and will do his weather reports live from Wilmington for the ABC morning show.

The climactic event will feature Neil Sedaka at Trask Coliseum Saturday, April 9th at 8:00 pm. Sedaka has been performing since the 50's. He is author of over 1,000 songs - such as "Laughter in the Rain", "Bad Blood", and "Love Will Keep Us Together."

Sedaka's segment will follow the crowning of Kim Morgan Greene in Trask Coliseum as Queen Azalea.

Saturday and Sunday will feature a variety of music and performers, many of whom are local favorites in just about every genre of entertainment. See Strolling Down The River on this page for a detailed schedule.

And...don't forget about our Beautiful Azaleas which always put on a bloomin' good show. They'll be appearing all over town!

For ticket information or a list of events, contact The Azalea Festival office in Long Leaf Mall, or call them at 763-0905.

Margolin appears at Kingfish's

by Carla Garrison

Rock 'n' Roll greats such as Led Zeppelin, the Rolling Stones, Eric Clapton, and Johnny Winter (to name a few) received their musical influence from early blues tunes. Many of the songs made his by those mentioned (and by later groups such as Stevie Ray Vaughan and the Fabulous Thunderbirds) are remakes of old blues tunes or strongly influenced by that sound and style.

Many people from the younger generation get the blues confused with gospel or even a jazz sound but it's much more. There's a hellacious guitarist on the North Carolina touring circuit who knows the significance of the blues. His music is a combination of Top Forty hits from the fifties and the low-down, dirty blues of the sixties. His reputation as a hot blues guitarist precedes him, and has made his name synonymous with kick ass music.

That name is Bob Margolin, referred to as "steady roll, no control" Bob Margolin. He is one of few carrying on a dying tradition that of playing true soul searching blues.

Bob Margolin started playing the guitar at the ripe old age of 15 back in Brookline, Mass. It was in those early years that he developed a strong affinity for the Blues. In 1973 he got lucky and joined Muddy Waters, one of the all time great blues men, and joined his band as lead guitarist. He played with Muddy until 1980, when the legendary blues man retired. It was those years of playing with Muddy Waters and all the exposure to other blues heroes that inspired Bob Margolin to keep on rolling along with the blues tradition.

See Steady Rollin Bob Margolin and his band at Kingfish's Oarhouse on Saturday, April 2 and Sunday, April 3, Easter Weekend. The Oarhouse is located at 18 S Front St. and admission is only $4.

Battleship offers tours, sound and light show

One of the highlights of Wilmington's 1988 Azalea Festival will be two special presentations of the USS NORTH CAROLINA Battleship Memorial's famed Sound and Light Spectacular, "The Immortal Showboat."

This 70 minute drama which tells the Battleship's history through voice, music, sound effects and lights will be presented on Friday and Saturday nights, April 8 and 9, at 9:00 p.m. "The Immortal Showboat's" story begins with her construction at New York Navy Yard in 1937 and continues through her participation in all 12 major naval campaigns in the Pacific Ocean during World War II. The principal characters in this outdoor drama are two sailors from North Carolina and one from Texas. Through the voices of Walter Abel, Alexander Scourby, 18 actors and such world leaders as President Franklin D. Roosevelt, President Harry S. Truman, Winston Churchill and Adolf Hitler, realism is brought to this exciting presentation.

Spectators sit in a 1,000 seat grandstand just across from the ship's port bow. During the show, over 400 lights of varying color and intensity create the USS NORTH CAROLINA's many moods. Special effects include light 20mm and 40mm antiaircraft gunfire, the blast and flame of large 5" and 16" guns and a simulated torpedo explosion.

The following schedule will be in effect at the USS NORTH CAROLINA Battleship Memorial during the 1988 Azalea Festival on Thursday, April 7 - Sunday, April 10 the ship opens at 8:00 a.m. and closes at 8:00 p.m. Friday and Saturday there is a Sound and Light Show at 9:00 p.m. Admission fees to the Battleship are $4.00 for adults (age 12 and over) and $2.00 for children (ages 6-11). Admission fees to the Sound and Light Show are $3.00 for adults and $1.50 for children. Groups of 20 or more persons will receive a 10% discount on admission fees.

Steamboat debuts this week

HENRIETTA is coming! Wilmington's newest attraction, an historic sternwheel riverboat named HENRIETTA II, is on her way to Wilmington. She departed from her construction site, Superior Boatworks in Greenville, Mississippi on Friday, March 11, and will arrive at her new home (Riverfront Park) this Saturday at 2pm.

For Cape Fear Riverboats, Inc., her owner, this launching marks the culmination of three long years. "We are very happy to be bringing HENRIETTA II home. She is just beautiful. We have a long trip ahead of us, but it is one we have been looking forward to for a long time. I just hope all of Wilmington will come and be a part of our Wilmington debut on Saturday, April 2 at 2:00 p.m. at Riverfront Park," said Carl Marshburn, President of Cape Fear Riverboats, Inc.

HENRIETTA II will be towed down the Mississippi River, across the Gulf of Mexico to the Caloosahatchee River in Florida. She will move east to Lake Okechobee and through the St. Lucie Canal to Stuart, Florida. From Stuart, Captain Marshburn plans to pilot her up the Intercoastal Waterway to Wilmington.

"We are planning a spectacular Wilmington debut," said Jean Rice, HENRIETTA II's Promotions Director. "We are so fortunate to have so many factions of our community joining us for the festivities. The enthusiasm and anticipation are so rewarding. We are hoping for a big turn out to welcome HENRIETTA II," Mrs. Rice continued.

The April 2 Wilmington debut will begin promptly at 2:00 p.m. with a floatilla featuring a vessel from the United States Coast Guard Oak Island Station at Caswell Beach. The City of Wilmington fire boat, and private boats whose captains will be marshalled by Captain Dick Pindell of the Pisces. Docking honors at Riverfront Park will go to members of the Submarine Battery Service, Torpedo Division, Confederate States Navy, Inc. Greeters at the traditional "riverboat landing" will be the jazz band, "River Rats" with Duke Ladd on keyboard, Dick Gable on trumpet, Norman Tyson on bass, Bill Cooper on drums and Dick Conrad on clarinet; students from Cape Fear Academy Art Department with "welcome" banners, horse and buggy rides furnished by Springbrook Farms, Inc., an antique automobile exhibition compliments of the Cape Fear Chapter of the Antique Automobile Club of America and photographers from the Cape Fear Camera Club who are participating in a photography contest, the results of which will be on display at the New Hanover County Library in May.

Master of Ceremonies, Don Holmes of WMFD Radio, will announce disembarking passengers. The passenger list will include area dignitaries, area queens, friends and family of Cape Fear Riverboats, Inc., and steamboat/riverboat/era characters. Actor and musician participants include the Cape Fear Garden Club Azalea Belles (the official hostesses in the gardens of the Cape Fear Garden Club Garden Tour sponsored by the North Carolina Azalea Festival), Cape Fear Living History Society (noted for its Civil War encampment reenactments), the Submarine Battery Service, Torpedo Division of the Confederate States Navy, Inc., Opera House Productions, Inc., Cape Fear Community College's Visiting Artist Steven Henegar, and Cape Fear Musicians' Association members John Golden and Stephen Kovach.

HENRIETTA II is named for HENRIETTA, a trail blazer for steamboats on the Cape Fear River, which enjoyed a long and financially successful life. She was built in 1817-1818 by James Seawell at his plantation at what is now Fayetteville, North Carolina.

Seawell named the boat for his daughter, Henrietta. HENRIETTA was launched April 30, 1818 and made her first run from Fayetteville to Wilmington in July 1818. She ran the river between Wilmington and Fayetteville for forty years. HENRIETTA II's debut into Wilmington on April 2 is 170 years after HENRIETTA debut into Wilmington.

HENRIETTA II looks forward to the return of the riverboat on the Cape Fear River and hopes to serve the citizens of Wilmington well as a valued historical re-enactment of our proud heritage. She is 86 1/2 feet in length and 28 feet in width. She has two decks. The lower deck is heated and air conditioned with a seating capacity of 100 for dinner, a 10 foot by 12 foot dance floor, and a full-service bar with all ABC permits. The canopy covered upper deck will house tables and chairs for cocktails and sightseeing. It is a true paddle wheel-on propeller. With a crew of three, it can carry 149 passengers.

Initially only one narrated nighttime cruise will run daily, Tuesday through Sunday, at 2:30 p.m. This one and one half hour cruise, with concessions available, is offered for $5.50 for adults and $3.00 for children. (Group rates are available.) Dinner cruises, offering buffet dining, entertainment and cocktails will run Thursday, Friday and Saturday evening from 7:00-9:00 p.m. (Boarding time is 6:30 p.m.) Special private charters for parties, weddings, group functions, business functions, etc. will be by reservations only. For reservations call (919) 392-1140.

Update from St. John's Museum

There are four basic ingredients which are essential to the development of the visual arts in any region: artists, exhibition spaces, patrons, and critics. In North Carolina, we are fortunate to have a growing number of artists, exhibition spaces, and patrons, but we fall short in the area of criticism.

On April 15, St. John's Museum of Art will host a symposium, Criticism, Friend or Foe, to discuss the role of the critic in development of art since 1940. The symposium is in conjunction with the exhibition The 40's to the 80's: American Art from the Weathered Art Gallery, University of North Carolina at Greensboro, which is on view from March 18 - May 28, 1988. Noted New York art critic John Perreault will present a historical perspective of criticism in his lecture "Critiquing the Critics: Art Criticism Since 1945" at 11:00 a.m. in the Museum's Hughes Gallery. The afternoon session will be a panel discussion by noted artists, exhibition curator, art dealer, and critic. Included among the panel guests will be Ann Shengold, former Visual Arts Director at Knight Gallery, Spirit Square; John Perreault, critic and Director of the Newhouse Center for Contemporary Art; and Dr. Edward Levine, sculptor and Dean of the School of Art at East Carolina University.

Reservations for the symposium may be made by calling the Museum at 763-0281. There is a fee for the symposium of $5.00 for non-members and $4.00 for Museum members. Box lunches will be available for $5.00.

SPORTS

Matt Shanklin, Sports Editor
D. Curtis Nichols, Assistant Sports Editor

MARCH 31, 1988

From the Press Boxwith
Matt ShanklinLefty Would Bring Respect

Lefty Drisell, the former Head Coach of the Maryland Terrapins has interviewed for and was reported set to sign on as the Head Coach of the James Madison Dukes of the Colonial Athletic Association.

A press conference was set for 3:00 p.m. Wednesday, but for some mysterious reason, no news came out of Harrisonburg, VA about the signing of Lefty.

Lefty, once a shoe-in for the job may have had second thoughts or a better job offer. If Drisell does finally take the helm of the troubled James Madison program, it could be a big plus for the Colonial.

Some people associated with the conference and other CAA member school have given full approval of the having Drisell stomping the sidelines of the CAA. Others seem to be threatened and think he doesn't have the best of reputations.

With the University of Richmond fresh off upsetting Indiana and Georgia Tech, the conference is in a position to grab instant respectability among basketball's hierarchy. It is the same respectability, despite the great David Robinson-led Navy teams, that the conference showed it didn't have when 20-game winner George Mason was left out of both the NCAA and NIT Tournaments.

Lefty would help the conference in several ways.

First he would increase the CAA's national exposure and help the conference stay among the big-boy conferences like the Big East, ACC and Southeastern. With this exposure, the conference would be able to expand its television package outside of Home Team Sports 10-game regular season pact and on to more national outlets like ESPN.

Secondly, Lefty would bring in some top recruits to play. Most coaches would feel threatened by a coach gobbling up all the talent, but most of the CAA coaches wouldn't recruit the same people as Drisell would. One other thing the CAA coaches could expect is if Lefty brings in better players at JMU, then the other CAA coaches could ride his coattails and nab some players that they otherwise would have no chance at getting.

The drawbacks are also present. With the Len Bias tragedy still lingering about Drisell, what kind of response would he get nationally about reentering the coaching ranks; Lefty has been known to break a rule or two.

The other drawback is that if Lefty came to JMU and the CAA, would probably wouldn't stay that long. If he really wants to get back into coaching, a better and bigger job will always loom out there for Drisell.

In any case, Lefty Drisell would be a positive addition to a growing conference in need of as much national exposure as possible. I may be short-lived, but having one of the best would help make the CAA be its best.

Speaking of the Richmond Spiders and the NCAA Tournament, their two wins netted $692,000.

Of that money, 20 percent goes to the ECAC as part of the final buyout payment for the eight CAA schools leaving the ECAC-South and forming the Colonial Athletic Association. That amounts to $138,400 that the ECAC receives, with the remainder, $553,600, split between the conference and Richmond.

Richmond keeps 51 percent or $282,336. The other 49 percent or $271,264 getting split between the other seven member institutions. In rough terms, UNC Wilmington will get a share of $38,572 for the job that Richmond did in the tournament.

The Wilmington Star-News reported Tuesday that the CAA athletic directors were contemplating the possible move of the conference tournament from Hampton, VA to a campus site.

With one year remaining on the contract with the Hampton Coliseum, the conference would be making a serious mistake if they left the neutral site for a campus setting. The CAA is just now carving its niche with fans and Hampton and now importance could destroy a nice setup.

Many in the conference and Commissioner Tom Yeager have expressed an interest to hold as many conference events in the Cape Fear area because of the surroundings and the climate. Moving the CAA men's basketball journey to Trask Coliseum would be a big mistake.

Keep the tournament in Hampton. If not for the teams, keep their for the fans who have enjoyed the two years of the journey there.

Three-hitter Propels
Campbell over UNCWby Matt Shanklin
Sports Editor

Campbell's Cory Satterfield limited UNC Wilmington to just three hits while striking out a season-high 14 Seahawks batters as the Camels ended UNCW's two-game winning streak, 4-0.

Satterfield (7-1) gave up hits to Ed Stoudenmire, Tim Langmeyer and Mike Byers, but got every UNCW batter except Randy Fennell, Tim Hooks and Al Frank Caucchi on strikes. Satterfield issued just one walk.

UNCW starter David Morrison went four innings, allowing just two hits. He struck out five, but walked six Camels. Keith Jarmen relieved in the fifth and Campbell scored twice off the right-hander in the sixth, once in the seventh and once in the eighth.

Jarmen (0-2) gave up just one hit in his three innings of work, but Campbell took advantage of three walks and four Seahawk errors.

Mark Bass and E.H. Kennedy finished up for the Seahawks. Bass got just one out in the eighth in relief of Jarmen, giving up two hits, before the lefthanded Kennedy pitched a flawless final 1 2/3 innings.

The win, the second in a row for the Camels over UNCW this season, raises Campbell's record to 18-9. UNCW, which hosts UNC Charlotte tonight, drops to 9-19.

Following the UNCW game today, the Seahawks will host Colonial Athletic Association foe George Mason in a three-game series over the Easter weekend.

UNCW, currently 3-2 in the CAA and fresh off a conference split with Richmond, will play GMU in a doubleheader Saturday night and a single game in Sunday afternoon.

UNC Drops
Lady Hawks

The UNC Wilmington women's softball team faced UNC-Chapel Hill in a double-header. The Lady Seahawks dropped the two games by the scores of 15-0 and 6-3.

In the second contest the Lady Hawks were able to get on track by scoring three runs. Kathy Cochran and Karen Rogers led UNCW with two hits apiece.

UNC was still able to hold off the Lady Seahawks by pushing across six runs in the fifth inning. The sweep by the Lady Tarheels over UNCW dropped the Lady Hawks season record to 6-27.

Netters Lose

The UNCW men's and women's tennis were both unsuccessful in their attempts to better their records. The men's tennis team was only able to capture one match against Atlantic Christian College as they fell, 7-1.

In women's action the Lady Hawks just fell short against rival Campbell University, 5-4.

The Hype Of Sports Is a Con

Howard Cosell
On Sports

corrupt as it is.

But such was not the case in Tokyo. Tokyo was a prime example of what too much of sport has become. A con game.

And the con game is everywhere in sports. Look at college basketball, look at the NCAA. All of the con last week was on the big beasts of the Big East. Now, except for Villanova, they're all eliminated. And Villanova is alive only because Illinois could sink only one foul shot in the last 10.

But teams are not the only thing to be hyped in sports. The coaches are hyped, too, especially the college coaches. They're as big a con as Tyson-Tubbs, these coaches who care only about winning, who behave like ranting raving thwarted toddlers on the court or on the bench. The media portrays them as endearing, dedicated characters, with charming quirks. Charming? Endearing? Quirky? John Chaney, the coach of Temple, openly sought to intimidate an official in the Georgetown game. This is appropriate behavior? This is the example a coach is supposed to set? This is what young people are supposed to watch and applaud? Chaney is the man who wants Lloyd Daniels to play college basketball: Daniels, who has been busted on drug charges and who couldn't get past his second year of high school. Lloyd Daniels, who was admitted to UNLV. Chaney says he'd love to have him at Temple University. What a con college basketball is, because college has nothing to do with it.

And everytime I watch Coach Gene Keady and his behavior on the bench, I cringe. One would think the sun rises and sets over a Purdue basketball victory when in truth there is very little importance in Purdue basketball, win or lose, or in anybody else's basketball.

But watch NCAA basketball -- or Mike Tyson fight Tony Tubbs -- and you'd think the outcome of both are critical to the functioning of the republic. Right up there with nuclear arms reduction, peace in the Middle East and shelter for the homeless. Watch these events, listen to the hype -- which Webster's defines as "put-on" and "deception" -- and you walk away with the notion that you've participated in something crucial.

But you haven't. You've been conned, that's all.

After 30 years of covering sports, it still astonishes me, this reaction of the public, this willingness to be conned and to enjoy one's own victimization. "Boxing is exposed time and time again, and yet I walk down the street and people yell, 'Howie!' Can Tubbs beat Tyson?" I get into cabs and drivers ask me how St. John's and Louie Carnesecca are going to do in the tournament. My question is, what were they doing in the tournament to begin with when they never belonged there?

The con game of sports has made me turn slowly to watching golf. Golf, which is quiet and dignified. Which isn't plagued by screaming announcers whose role has been diminished to nothing more than the shilling for the commens. Golf, which spectators can watch without being told constantly that everyone and everything about the sport is perfect, terrific, wonderful, just great. The appeal of golf increases for me every weekend. It's a wonderful respite from tasteless con games.

Isn't it interesting that in the whole mess surrounding the Tony Tubbs "camp," the one who was really advising Tubbs is one Harold "Wells Fargo" Smith (aka Ross Fields)? Smith has been giving Tubbs advice from a California jail. So, when George Will, one of the distinguished minds in America, questions whether the country is ready for self-government, perhaps he should look, not just at the Super Bowl hype, but at all sports.

Annual Staff For '89 Needed

The UNCW annual: The Fledgling is seeking individuals interested in being on the 1989 Fledgling staff. If you are interested, there will be a very short organizational meeting April 26th at 6 p.m. in room 205-A of the University Union. If you are interested, but cannot attend the meeting there will be a sign up sheet on the door during the week.

Angus McDonald of the department of English will have his poem, "The Real Truth About Weather," published in the 1988 issue of The Crucible.

Cameron Hall Named

(UNCW News) At its regular quarterly meeting, the Board of Trustees at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington today named the new $6 million, 60,000-square-foot business building Cameron Hall. The building was named Cameron Hall in honor of Bruce B. and Daniel D. Cameron.

This action came on the recommendation of Chancellor William H. Wagoner in "recognition of the extensive and continuing contributions of Dan and Bruce Cameron to the university."

The Camerons, both Wilmington businessmen, most recently contributed matching funds to establish the $500,000 Cameron Professorship in Accounting. The Cameron's gift of $333,000 matched a $167,000 challenge grant established by appropriations from the N.C. General Assembly to fund permanent professorships at UNC system universities.

Earlier generosity of the Cameron family led to the business school's being named the Cameron School of Business Administration in January 1983.

Chancellor Wagoner expressed the university's thanks for the Cameron's "many contributions to Wilmington, Southeastern North Carolina, and in particular to the university. The university is indebted to Bruce and Dan Cameron for their continued high level of support," Wagoner said.

Cameron Hall will be open to students at the beginning of fall semester, 1988, with most faculty expected to move into their offices in early August. The Cameron School of Business Administration estimates that 1,200 UNCW undergraduates either are enrolled in the school or plan to major in business. Another 100 graduate students are enrolled in the Master of Business Administration program.

The School of Business is currently organized into three departments -- accountancy, economics and finance, and management and marketing. With the new building providing space to accommodate it, Dean Norman R. Kaylor announces today the formation of a fourth department effective July 1, the department of production and decision sciences.

This will move some functions from the present management and marketing department, and will involve production management, operations research, computers, business statistics and information sciences.

Cameron Hall was designed by Bill Faris of Jefferies and Faris Architects of Wilmington, in the modified Georgian style of architecture. General contractor was Clancy & Theys; electrical, Cape Fear Electric; plumbing, Electron; and heating and air conditioning, Sneed, Inc.

The largest classroom building on campus, the two-story structure, is designed in a roughly "H" shape.

The building contains 16 lecture and seminar rooms, office space for 70 faculty and administrators, a lecture hall that seats 308, and two computer labs with 24 stations each. Two-thirds of the classrooms are equipped with semi-circular fixed seating with approximately one-half of those being tiered. Tiering fosters maximum student-teacher eye contact as well as maximum audio abilities of the rooms themselves.

A special feature of the large lecture hall is the result of a large lobby which permits the lecture hall to be isolated from the general classroom traffic flow. It is also conveniently located to the parking lot to accommodate evening or public functions.

A feature of considerable pride to Dr. Denis Carter, associate dean of the Cameron School of Business Administration who was closely involved in day-to-day construction of the facility, is that Cameron Hall will house the university's first attempt at installing a Local Area Network (LAN) system throughout the building.

UNCW Retreat Has Major Implications

By Mary Coulbert
Staff Writer

The UNCW Board of Trustees held their first ever retreat in conjunction with their quarterly meeting this past Tuesday and Wednesday, April 12-13 at Shell Island Resort located at Wrightsville Beach.

Dr. William W. Hall, associate professor of economics for the Cameron School of Business Administration and the Center of Business and Economics Services at UNCW, was the guest speaker for the Tuesday evening session. Hall spoke on "Southeastern North Carolina at the Turn of the Next Century."

Southeastern North Carolina is a rapidly growing area. He predicted that at an expected growth rate of approximately nine percent per year, the local economy should double by the year 2000. Already considered by some to be one of the ten fastest growing areas in the country, it is possible Southeastern North Carolina could be one of the top five fastest growing areas in the country by the turn on the century.

UNC WILMINGTON

IN STATE -- OUT OF STATE

What does this mean to New Hanover County? In New Hanover County and especially the area adjacent to the university, there will be increased competition for land. Land prices will rise, which will create an increased demand for public services, and effective property tax rates will probably rise. At the same time, as students have probably already noticed, traffic congestion will rise creating more problems of access to and from the university. Hall, however, sees this growth as an opportunity for the university because it will result in demands for more flexible and additional university program offerings.

Dr. Charles L. Cahill, provost and vice-chancellor for academic affairs, Mr. R. O. Walton, vice chancellor for business affairs, Dr. William A. Bryan, vice chancellor for student affairs, and Dr. F.

Douglas Moore, vice chancellor for university advancement were the speakers at the Wednesday morning session of the retreat. Each gave a presentation on the progress that had been made and what goals lie ahead for each of their areas of responsibility.

Cahill began the program by speaking on the academic affairs for the university. Academic affairs deals with admissions, improving the diversity and quality of UNCW. The College Board reports that UNCW is one of the top five campuses in the state for distribution of SAT scores from high school seniors. Growing at a faster rate than any other campus in the UNC system, UNCW statistics show that the total number of students enrolled at UNCW has increased 44 percent from 3619 in 1977, to 6501 in 1987, by 1992 nearly 7400 students are expected to enroll.

Power Of The SGA President

By Alise Ellis and Carla Garrison
Staff Writers

The Student Government Association, as the representative body for the students of UNCW, was allocated $235,000 from student activity fees during the 1987/88 school term. These funds were intended to financially support clubs, organizations, and various projects to benefit students.

While the SGA has modeled itself after state and federal governments with Executive and Legislative branches, most of the power is wielded by the position of President.

Lee King was elected President for the 1987/88 term, and was vested the executive authority as stated in Article VI of the Constitution. This position gave him the power to strongly influence the allocation of the SGA budget.

"The UNCW administration chooses not to be involved in the SGA budgeting process," said King, which results in an absolute power over budgeting decisions by the Executive and Legislative branches.

According to Jeff Steinmiller,

Assistant Director of Student Activities, SGA is a learning experience. The administration gives the SGA approximately $200,000, which is their responsibility to use properly.

The budget is divided into separate accounts, the largest being the General Fund and the Executive Account. The General Fund covers activities from freshman orientation to tuxedo rentals for the attendance of the Ms. North Carolina Pageant.

The Executive Account consisted of approximately $64,000 for the 1987/88 year, to be utilized at the discretion of the President.

"Our purpose is not to say how to spend the funds, but recommend the best way while staying within the guidelines," said Vice Chancellor William Bryan. Meetings are held weekly between the administration and SGA officials.

Some of King's expenditures included $41,000 in salaries for SGA state employees, entertainment, and travel expenses. Several conferences were attended by senate members to gain new insights on student government.

A Leadership Conference attended in Texas by four senate members evoked controversy within the SGA, due to King's selection process. The reasons being that two of the participants were underclassmen, no women representatives attended, all members belonged to King's fraternity, Delta Tau Delta, and no formal report was given to the senators detailing the conference events.

"I looked at the kind of people I wanted to reach, myself and Lee Barnhill were veteran senators, while Wally Newman and Bryan Holter were underclassmen, they were very involved in SGA," said King. He also claimed a formal report was not given due to time constraints connected with the upcoming elections.

During the 1987/88 year Lee King was given scholarships to be awarded to 7 individuals. This was an area also touched by controversy, as some members felt the selection process was biased.

"I thought it went to his friends," stated former senator Fran Slater. Other senators expressed concern that the SGA Treasurer received a scholarship, as well as a salary.

"Those scholarships are given out to those members that the President sees fit. It is totally up to my discretion who receives a scholarship," said King.

Although the past administration has been involved in controversial issues, no governmental body is flawless and without its share of problems, as expressed by veteran senator Jeff Silverman.

"People have a tendency to remember the bad things, but Lee really tried to do a good job for UNCW," said senator Gina Mathis.

In holding the position of President, King experienced a sense of disillusionment because he felt he was always made out to be the bad guy.

Overall, the administration allocates student fees and the Constitution provides the power for the President to utilize at his discretion. King took full advantage of the power vested in his position, through the use of the veto, which was rarely used in the past, and his ability to accomplish what he thought important.

SUMMER AT SAN JOSE

Come to California for summer session at San Jose State University in 1988, with sessions beginning May 31 and continuing through August 19 in most academic areas of the university. Non-credit short courses are offered, too, as well as Continuing Education computer and speed reading courses, special photography field sessions, travel tours in California and around the world, and Field Studies in Natural History credit science field sessions.

San Jose State University is open to all adults during summer—you do not have to be formally admitted to the university to enroll in summer courses. You don't even have to be a college student to enroll. High school students, with counselor approval must be 16 years of age.

San Jose State University is located 50 miles south of San Francisco, in a major urban setting. The campus offers summer housing. Call (408) 924-6160 for housing information.

For a free schedule of summer session courses, call (408) 924-2600, or write: Summer Session 1988, Office of Continuing Education, ATT: Judy, San Jose State University, San Jose, CA 95192-0135.

EUROPE FOR A MONTH

Tradedwell Travellers Club is launching a European travel program this summer for as little as $29.50 to $33 a day.

While other comparably priced student travel programs feature either transportation or lodging, TTC's packages offer both motorcoach travel and tent accommodations throughout Europe, giving young people a true bargain for their dollar.

Students traveling on the two-, three- and four-week packages will visit five or seven countries. They will overnight in security-patrolled campgrounds located in or near major cities such as Amsterdam, Paris and Zurich, and in such scenic areas as Lermoos in the Tyrolean Alps, Rudesheim on the Rhine River, and the Lido di Isola in Venice.

During two to six-day stays in each locale, travelers will be on their own to pursue personal interests. At each camp, free maps will be available to assist individuals planning sightseeing, outdoor recreation and other activities.

Students, accompanied by an English-speaking guide, will travel by motorcoach from campground to campground. Group excursions will include a sightseeing trip to Brussels and a Rhine River cruise.

The program runs from June through August, with 58 scheduled itineraries that begin and end in Amsterdam.

Land-only prices per person are $498 for the 15-day package; $698 for the 21-day package; and $855 for the 29-day package.

The price includes two-person tents and mattresses, confirmed reservations at the campgrounds, motorcoach transportation between camps, barbecue grills, eating utensils and recreation equipment. Single tents cost an extra $2.50 per night.

Travelers may fly on any airline to Amsterdam. Tradedwell Travellers Club, however, offers a number of low-cost seats on charter flights from 12 U.S. cities that can be used in conjunction with the packages.

For more information, brochures or bookings, contact your travel agent or Tradedwell Travellers Club, Suite 1602, 40 East 49th Street, New York, NY 10017, telephone (212) 832-9072, (800) 223-0567.

IN ITALY FOR CREDIT

Join the University of New Orleans for an exciting summer program in northern Italy! From May 26 to June 26, 1988, take advantage of this unique opportunity to live and learn in the beautiful alpine village of Dorf Tirol on the frontier between Italy and Austria. Earn 3 semester credit hours in English literature while living in a renovated Tyrolean farm house. You will take your noon meal in the nearby Brunnenburg Castle and work in the agricultural museum that is part of the castle grounds.

The owner of Brunnenburg Castle is Dr. Siegfried von Rachevitz, the grandson of Ezra Pound. His castle houses an extensive museum of ceremonial and agricultural artifacts from the Tyrolean area as well as an extensive collection from Africa. You will participate in working not only in the museum but in the surrounding village and countryside.

At the head of the Merano Valley is the lovely city of Merano, Italy. Rail service makes Florence, Siena, Verona, Venice, Innsbruck and many other wonderful and exciting destinations easily accessible. Remember to make check of the course of study we are planning a trip to Florence, Verona, and the area of Lake Garda. Hiking, local festivals, folk dancing, even learning to bake bread in the traditional ways are included on our agenda. Both Italian and German are spoken in this valley and we will provide some Italian or German tutoring if you so desire.

Dr. Victor Santi, professor of Foreign Languages, will direct this program. He was born in Italy and has traveled extensively through Italy and Europe. As an Italian scholar he has done extensive research abroad and believes in an international approach to the study of literature and that living in and with a vital culture is an exciting way to spend part of the summer.

NOT INCLUDED IN COST OF PROGRAM:

Roundtrip transportation to and from Europe. (UNO has an arrangement with Peter McLean, Ltd. for air transportation. He has reserved spaces on TWA from New Orleans and New York for this program. All students applying should call his office at the following numbers to reserve flight: in New Orleans—5810128; in Louisiana—800-662-1937; outside of Louisiana—800-535-1869). Meals on weekends. And any expenses of a personal nature such as laundry, passport, tutoring in Italian or German or any weekend travel on free weekends.

RESERVATIONS, PAYMENTS AND CANCELLATIONS:

Complete the preliminary application on this flyer and return together with the $100.00 deposit and reason for participation. Remember to make check payable to UNO. Once this is received a full application form will be mailed to you. Final payment will be due April 15, 1988. If you decide to cancel before April 15, 1988 there will be a $50.00 cancellation fee. After April 15, 1988 the cancellation fee will be $200.00 plus any expenditures made on your behalf that cannot be recovered by the University of New Orleans. Cancellations will be effective the date written notice is received by the Office of International Study Programs at UNO.

WHAT YOU SHOULD KNOW:

The credits earned through this program are transferable to other universities according to the usual rules. You must sign up for ENGL 2398.2 THE MEDIEVAL CASTLE IN ITALIAN LITERATURE (3 hours credit). Students may elect to join the UNO-INNSBRUCK-1988 program at the end of our study, travel through Europe or return home.

PIONEER ADVENTURE

In 1988, as Outward Bound begins its twenty-sixth year as this country's pioneer adventure based education organization, it will serve over 17,000 men and women who will select from over 500 courses.

Included among this broad spectrum of course offerings are experiences ranging in diversity from sailing, cycling, climbing, skiing and even dog sledding. "All told our courses this year will use the vast majestic wilderness and urban areas of twenty-two states," notes John F. Reynolds, president of Outward Bound.

Outward Bound's five schools have been established in geographically diverse locations, giving each a unique personality and character that is ultimately reflected in the courses offered. The five schools are Colorado Outward Bound, Hurricane Island Outward Bound School (located in Maine), North Carolina Outward Bound School, Pacific Crest Outward Bound School (located in Oregon) and the Voyageur Outward Bound School (located in Minnesota).

"Regardless of which course is selected, students are almost certain to discover new things about themselves," explains Mr. Reynolds. "They expect more of themselves, become confident where before they were hesitant. They learn to share, to lead and to follow, and to work together as a group. In safeguarding each other, they form bonds of mutual trust. They discover that many problems can be solved only with the cooperation of all members of a group."

Traveling miles across mountains, lakes or ocean may mean aching muscles, cold feet and wet bodies, but it also brings mutual respect, shared jokes, beautiful sunrises and the pride of shared achievement.

John F. Reynolds, Outward Bound president said "We are better than we know. If we can be made to see it, perhaps for the rest of our lives we will be unwilling to settle for less."

For more information, students are invited to write to Outward Bound USA, 384 Field Point Road, Greenwich, Connecticut 06830 or call toll-free (800) 243-8520 (outside of Connecticut) or (203) 661-0797. The 32-page catalogue gives detailed descriptions, rates and costs for all courses given at each school.

Outward Bound is a non-profit, tax-exempt education organization.

CREDITS IN AUSTRIA

The University of New Orleans will sponsor its 13th annual European Summer School Program in Innsbruck, Austria during the summer of 1988. This educational/travel/learning experience, entitled UNO-INNSBRUCK-1988, will involve over 250 college and university students as well as some 30 faculty/staff members.

Applicants are already signing up for the 1988 summer session. Part of the reason why over the last 12 years some 3,000 students from all across the United States representing over 150 different colleges and universities have participated in this unique summer program is that over 60 courses in many different academic subject areas are offered in this magnificent Alpine setting in the "Heart of Central Europe." While participants can earn up to ten semester hours of credit, their classrooms are surrounded by the towering Tyrolean Alps, whose peaks are always snowcapped.

Naturally, courses offered with UNO-INNSBRUCK focus on the cultural, historical, social and political issues of Europe. However, during the 1988 summer session courses in business and science will also be taught. All instruction is in English and faculty from the University of New Orleans, guest professors from the University of Florida and the University of Innsbruck, as well as distinguished political figures from the U.S. and Austria will be teaching in Innsbruck this summer.

During the summer, students will be housed in the Studentenhaus at the 300 year old University of Innsbruck. The school is just a ten-minute walk from the many inns, cafes, and beer gardens in the "Old Town" of Innsbruck. And, three-day weekends offer ample time for students to travel to many different destinations in Europe, to hike in the Alps and even to ski the nearby glaciers.

UNO-INNSBRUCK-1988 will convene with gala opening ceremonies on July 3 and end on August 13, 1988. Several optional pre-study tours are being organized for those students who want to spend extra month living and learning in a different and stimulating European environment. Pre-study programs are offered in Belgium, Italy, and a travel program through Western Europe.

Enrollment in UNO-INNSBRUCK-1988 is limited, so interested students should apply as soon as possible. For information and a full color brochure, write to: UNO-INNSBRUCK-1988, c/o International Study Programs, Box 1315P-UNO, New Orleans, LA 70148. Or you can call the Office of International Study Programs at UNO: (504) 286-7116.

U.S. SUMMER CYCLING

Bike-Aid '88 can provide a rare opportunity for you to participate in both This is the third annual summer cycling excursion across the United States sponsored by the Overseas Development Network (ODN). In 1987, 162 enthusiastic riders, ranging in age from 15 to 66, accepted the challenge and raised $250,000 for ODN projects and student internships in developing areas here and abroad. ODN is a non-profit organization whose objective is to educate themselves and others about issues of global poverty and hunger and to use this knowledge in supporting self-help projects in underdeveloped areas of the world. This objective is realized daily by Bike-Aid riders as they participate in community projects and events, learning about the people and their communities across the country, and on a larger scale as they raise money for people all over the world.

For information please contact the Bike-Aid office: Moira McCaughey, Recruitment Coordinator P.O. Box 2306 Stanford, CA 94309 (415) 723-0802

JAPANESE LANGUAGE

Japanese is the foreign language rising fastest in popularity among college students today, and for good reason. Japan offers great riches to young Americans: fascinating history, elegant traditions, booming economic frontiers, and a culture unique in its blend of oriental and western ways.

From July 28 to August 19, Susquehanna University, at Selingsgrove, PA, will offer an intensive program in Japanese language and culture. Nineteen hours of instruction will consist of five hours of language class daily, taught by native Japanese instructors, using progressive, dynamic methods and materials. Students will earn four transferable semester hours.

Language learning will be complemented by presentations on the culture behind the language. In addition, weekend trips to New York City and Washington, D.C. will help students discover Japanese culture in the United States.

American students will share a residence hall with twenty four Japanese students from Tokyo's Soshu University, who will be studying English language and American culture. Contact with Japanese students will provide unlimited opportunities to make friends for a lifetime.

A fee of $1400 includes 90 hours of instruction, lodging in a dormitory, three meals a day and two overnight trips. Contact Dr. Susan Johnson, Susquehanna University, Selingsgrove, PA 17870, Tel. (717) 374-0101 for application forms and information. Applications are due by July 1, 1988.

STUDIES IN HAWAII

You can earn university degree credit in Natural Science in July with San Jose State University's Field Studies in Natural History program in Hawaii. See animal, plant, bird, and geologic topics come alive while you explore the natural sights and habitats on four islands.

SJSU faculty accompany the trip, which includes roundtrip transportation and lodging, all transfers and other incidental expenses for a fee of $295 per person, including tuition for 3 semester units. Meals and other expenses are the responsibility of each individual.

Depart San Francisco July 10 and return there July 28 (optional return may be arranged if you wish to remain in Hawaii longer).

For a free brochure outlining the itinerary and providing complete information, call (408) 924-2625 or write: Field Studies in Natural History, Hawaii 1988, Office of Continuing Education, San Jose State University, San Jose, CA 95192-0135. Any adult may participate. You do not have to be an SJSU student, nor do you have to formally apply for admission for the regular university to participate.

Other summer programs for credit are available too, including Trinity Alps, Grand Canyon River Rafting, and—in 1989—Alaska!

PUBLISHING CAREER

"Book Publishing as a Career," an eight-day intensive-study program featuring speakers from the most prestigious firms in the industry, will be offered for the first time at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill June 11-18. Sponsored by the School of Journalism and the University of North Carolina Press, the course will provide detailed exposure to all facets of book publishing from evaluating and editing manuscripts to finances, production, marketing, publicity and sales.

Rhoda A. Weyr, president of the Rhoda Weyr Literary Agency in Chapel Hill, will direct the program. Weyr has 20 years of professional experience, most in New York City.

"Book publishing offers myriad opportunities for careers," she said. "Most people think of it as limited to editors and authors, but it includes opportunities in publicity, public relations, sales, copywriting, design and interaction with radio, TV, film, magazines and foreign publications."

The course is open to college juniors, seniors and graduate students.

"We hope to have students from all over the country," Weyr said.

Lecturers already scheduled include senior editors and directors of publicity, subsidiary rights and marketing from Alfred A. Knopf, Viking-Penguin, Crown, Publishers, Farrar Straus and Giroux, St. Martin's Press and Doubleday and Co.

Students will work on actual manuscripts on submission or in production at participating publishing houses. Visiting lecturers will discuss publication from the role of the agent, contract negotiation, exploitation of subsidiary rights, positioning within the house and presentation to the public.

A director of a personnel agency that serves the publishing industry will discuss entry-level opportunities, while publishing professionals will talk about their career routes as a guide to participants beginning or switching careers.

Course fee, which includes tuition and fees, materials, housing and all meals, is $1,095 to in-state residents and $4,495 to out-of-state participants. Students will be housed in air-conditioned Carmichael Residence Hall. Fee for off-campus students is $975 for in-state residents and $3,775 for out-of-state.

The course offers three hours of credit to undergraduates and two hours to graduate students. For an application, write Book Publishing Course, School of Journalism, CB# 3365, Howell Hall, UNC, Chapel Hill, N.C. 27599-3365;

In the event of rain the concert will be held in Kenan Hall.

School Of Nursing Holds First Conference

The UNCW School of Nursing will hold its first Conference on Nursing Education and Practice on Monday, April 18, for nursing faculty, students and invited guests. Dr. Ingeborg G. Mauksch, international lecturer and consultant in nursing and health care, is the invited speaker and will share her views on the state of nursing education and practice.

Her keynote address, "Nursing, Today, and Tomorrow," will be presented from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. in University Union room 100 and is open to the university community and the public.

Among her professional activities, Mauksch is a visiting professor at the University of Miami School of Nursing in the doctoral program. Long involved in nursing practice and education, she has received numerous honors including membership in the National Academy of Sciences, Institute of Medicine, the American Nurses' Association Honorary Membership Award and the establishment of the Ingeborg G. Mauksch Award at Vanderbilt University to reward excellence in mentorship.

Mauksch received her bachelor of science degree in nursing at Teachers College, Columbia University, and the master's degree in nursing education and a Ph.D. in educational administration from the University of Chicago. She has held teaching positions at several nursing programs including Vanderbilt University and Troy State University. She was professor and family nurse practitioner at the University of Missouri and served as senior program consultant for the Robert Wood Johnson Nurse Faculty Fellowships in Primary Care Program.

She has published extensively and delivered major addresses on critical issues in the nursing profession and health care delivery systems. Mauksch has also been actively involved in community services and has conducted workshops for general audiences on topics such as aging, death and dying and hospice care.

"There is much concern among health professionals and health consumers about the state of health care today, particularly the nursing shortage, rising health care and insurance costs, Medicare and types of health care delivery systems," said program organizers. Mauksch is expected to address these concerns, as well as specific nursing professional issues in her presentation.

The UNCW School of Nursing invites and encourages members of the health care profession, the university, and the community to hear Mauksch's keynote address.

Pi Kappa Phi Holds Week Long Fund Raiser For Push

By Kim Kopka
Staff Writer

Pi Kappa Phi fraternity has dedicated a week in April to Push (play units for the severely handicapped). Push is the fraternities' national philanthropy.

The fraternity sponsors fund raisers for Push throughout the year, but with the spring weather warming things up most of the activities are held outside for everyone to see and participate in.

A pie throwing contest was held in front of the Union on Wednesday April 6th. A few volunteers from other fraternities and sororities as well as brothers from Pi Kappa Phi stood waiting with their eyes closed as students bought pies to throw at them. For $5.00 you could throw one pie and for $1.00 you could throw three. All money raised from the pie throwing was contributed to Push.

Pushing a wheelchair around campus was another fund raiser held. "We will push a wheelchair around campus for 60 hours," says Todd Bush, President of Pi Kappa Phi. This event took place

Tuesday April 5th through Thursday April 7th. All donations were taken inside the University Union. A car wash the weekend before Easter raised $200.00 for Push. "So far we have raised around $450," says Bush. Whatever the fraternity raises after Push Week will be added to that total.

Plans for a future fund raiser are already under way. Mark Bacon, a brother in Pi Kappa Phi fraternity, was recently chosen as one of 20 cyclists picked from the entire national Pi Kappa Phi organization to join together in June to ride from California to Washington D.C.

The play units bought for the severely handicapped are educational game centers. "The units involve senses like touch, smell and sight," explains Bush, "the money we raise is the only way Push is able to buy these units." The Push Organization is an on going concern and service project to the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity. Donations may also be mailed in to:

Dukakis Nominated In Mock Convention

(CPS) — Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis was nominated as the Democratic presidential candidate, and Tennessee Sen. Albert Gore was his running mate.

The Democratic national convention won't be held until July, of course, but if history repeats itself, Dukakis will get the nod. Dukakis, after all was nominated as the presidential candidate at the Washington and Lee University Mock Democratic Convention March 25 and 26.

The student-run convention has a knack for picking winners. Since its inception in 1908, "delegates" have correctly predicted the eventual nominee for the party that's out of the White House 13 out of 18 times. That run includes selecting 8 of the last 9 candidates since 1948.

Convention treasurer Brad Watkins, a Washington and Lee senior, attributes the convention's success to its "emphasis on solid political research."

"It's one of the greatest political research efforts in the country," he said. "It gets people interested in the political process, and helps them appreciate the pros and be more tolerant of the cons."

"We talk to grassroots party organizers at county and local levels to formulate a well-thought platform," said Watkins.

More than 80 percent of Washington and Lee's student body participates in the convention, and students from other Virginia colleges and high schools participate as well. Blocks of delegates are assigned regions of the nation to research to determine which candidate appeals to voters there.

Jesse Jackson, said Watkins, ran a strong second at the convention, but most felt he was not electable and won't be nominated by the Democrats in July. He will be, Watkins predicted, "a powerbroker for the poor and disadvantaged," and will have a significant influence on the party's platform, however.

"Despite his success, in most states Jackson is only receiving 10 percent of the white vote," said Watkins. "You need more to be elected president. The Democrats have not performed well in the last 2 elections, so they'll do everything they can this time to have an attractive candidate."

Although Dukakis did not run especially impressively in the South, said Watkins, naming Gore as his running mate "will help."

Missouri Congressman Richard Gephardt, Watkins said, "should seriously consider dropping out" of the race because of financial problems and a perception among local and county officials that he "flip-flops" on issues.

Gephardt and Illinois Sen. Paul Simon each received a handful of delegates at the mock convention, but threw their support to Dukakis.

Dukakis, said Watkins, runs very close to Vice President George Bush, the likely Republican candidate, in national polls, which may be the factor that gives him the real nomination in July. "Dukakis is truly a national candidate," said Watkins. "He will be the nominee."

RA Selections Made For 88-89 Year

By Scott Wheeler
Staff Writer

The selections have been made by the Residents Life Staff for the upcoming year. The applicants have been tentatively placed in their positions for the 1988/1989 school year. The selection process began in February and was finally completed on Friday, April 8.

These last two months have seen a field of thirty-one applicants selectively narrowed down to a final number of thirteen positions that were offered. These thirteen surviving applicants underwent a series of three interviews that started out with a simple group discussion about a given problem; then, turning into a more private question and answer session.

The applicants for the position of Resident Assistant were to be completed and turned in by February 19, before the close of the business day.

On February 22, all applicants were required to attend a group informational meeting. The purpose of this meeting was to better inform the prospective Resident Assistants of the various roles that accompany the job; such as administrator, policy enforcer, helper, and most important friend. The group participated in a rather enjoyable activity that enabled them to get to know one another. This activity had each of the hopeful R.A.'s split up into preassigned groups. Each person grabbed a handful of candy. For every piece of candy that each individual had taken, he, or she, had to tell one bit of information about himself, or herself.

The first phase of the interviews began on February 23, and ended on February 28. This interview consisted of a small group of prospective R.A.'s, approximately five or six, and three Residence Life Staff members. The applicants were given two "dilemmas" with which they as a group had twenty minutes to work on each problem to arrive at a "solution." The applicants were not graded on the accuracy with which they solved the problem.

They were examined to see how the individual members worked with the other members in their own groups. The Office of Residence Life realizes that not everyone works well in a group situation, so they do not usually cut any of the prospective applicants before the second phase of the interviews.

The second phase of the interviews found two staff members and one student asking questions to three hopeful R.A.'s. These questions were of a more general nature, usually dealing with a given situation, seeking the best possible combination of qualities, from the applicants, to move on to the next phase of the interviews. The second phase of interviews took place from March 2, through March 20, and narrowed the field of thirty-one to the final number of twenty-three applicants who were vying for the thirteen positions that became available, because some of the R.A.'s from last year graduated or did not wish to return.

These surviving twenty-three hopefuls were to go on to the third phase of the interviews, which had two staff members asking questions to only one of the R.A.'s-to-be. These particular interviews were designed to give the staff members a more complete understanding of whom the individual applicants really were. The phase three interviews took place between March 23, and April 1.

The remaining twenty-three applicants received their notice as to placement, if they did receive a job offer. However, if they did not receive a job offer they were either placed on a waiting list or asked to submit another application the next time that an R.A.'s job becomes open. The applicants that were offered jobs were given until April 13, to accept or deny their assigned locations.

The Office of Residence Life employs thirty-five students in its Resident Director and Resident Assistant programs. These people are not employed to ensure that they, the resident, do not have the chance to enjoy your college experience. They are here to assist the resident in any way that they can.

He, Too Spoke For Democracy Published By McGuire

By Nancy Hill
Staff Writer

Dr. Phillip McGuire, history professor at UNCW, announces publication of his latest book He, Too Spoke for Democracy by Greenwood Press, Inc., P.O. Box 5007, Westport, Connecticut 06881. Released in early April, the book is available by mail from the publishers at $35.95.

McGuire

Called "a landmark contribution to the history of race relations in the United States," his work examines Judge William H. Hastie's impact on the War Department's policy regarding treatment and usage of black soldiers during and after World War II.

Hastie was the first black civilian aide to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson. Speaking of his appointment in 1940 to this position, Hastie said, "I have always been constantly opposed to any policy of discrimination and segregation in the Armed Forces of this country. I am assuming this post in the hope that I will be able to work effectively toward the integration of the Negro into the Army and to facilitate his placement, training and promotion."

The book focuses on Hastie's success at ending or modifying many discriminatory U.S. armed services policies, culminating in Truman's Executive Order 9811 to officially desegregate the military. Hastie also persuaded Stimson to issue a memo to the commanding generals and base commanders prohibiting abusive language and racial epithets.

McGuire has taught at UNCW since 1978 and received permanent tenure in 1983. His teaching and research specialties are Afro-American social history and the U.S. Constitution. He is the author of numerous published articles, and the book Taps for a Jim Crow Army: Letters From Black Soldiers in World War II.

Students Opting To Spend More Time Overseas

(CPS) — More U.S. students are opting to spend a year of college overseas, the Institute for International Education (IIE) reported March 1.

It found that more than half the nation's colleges — 1,898 — had students earning academic credit abroad in 1985-86, the year the IIE's study covered.

In all, 48,483 students were enrolled in classes overseas, a 79 percent increase from the 27,145 students in foreign study programs during 1982-83, when the institute — which coordinates academic exchange programs for hundreds of U.S. campuses — did its last census.

While the study did not ask why more students were spending time abroad, the IIE's Edrice Howard speculated it was because of a growing sense of "world citizenship" and because, at least until the U.S. dollar's recent slide in value, foreign tuition was cheaper than tuition at many schools at home.

Most of the students — 63.8 percent — studying abroad were female.

Western Europe, in turn, was the most popular place to study, attracting 76.8 percent of the students in foreign programs.

Only 7 percent of the college migrants enrolled in Latin American colleges.

Among individual countries, Great Britain was the students' favorite. More than 29 percent of the students who went overseas studied at campuses in the British isles, the IIE found.

Grants Awarded To Three Faculty Members

By Ray Cockrell
Staff Writer

Grants totaling $19,366 have been awarded to three UNCW professors to conduct research on artificial reefs in the Wilmington area. Dr. David Lindquist, professor of biology, Dr. Lawrence Cahoon, associate professor of biology, and Ileana Clavijo, assistant professor of biology, received $10,943 from the State of North Carolina and $8,423 from the federal government for their research sponsored by UNC Sea Grant.

Lindquist

"Sources of Primary Productivity Supporting North Carolina's Inshore Reef Fish Communities" is the topic of their project. Their research will examine the question, "Do fish around the artificial reef feed on the reef or move to the soft bottoms around the reef for their food?" The scientists will observe the way fish use the food from the reefs and soft bottoms.

The purpose of this research is to test important hypotheses concerning the primary source of food production — whether it is on the reef or the soft bottoms. The scientist will measure the amount of food production of the reef and adjacent to the reef. They will relate this to the foods being eaten to determine if there is enough food production to support the energy requirements of the reef fishes.

After completing a competitive review process, two of seven Sea Grant proposals submitted from UNCW received Sea Grant funding. Also funded was a study on fecal pollution directed by UNCW associate professor of biology, Ronald K. Sizemore.

UNCW Black Student Union Holds Ceremonial Ball

By Ray Cockrell
Staff Writer

"Hearts in Understanding, Becoming Hands in Achievement" will be the theme of this year's annual Ceremonial Ball for the UNCW Black Student Union. The ball will take place at 7:30 p.m., Saturday, April 16, at the L.L.A. (International Longshoremen's Association) Hall located at Fifth and Kidder streets, downtown Wilmington.

Sponsored by the UNCW BSU and the UNCW chapter of the NAACP, this event was established to provide its guests with a historical and current view of the efforts and achievements of the university, the community, and black oriented campus organizations in their work concerning racial harmony.

Featured at the ball will be a presentation of awards, presentation of new student organization officers and recognition of outgoing officers, and entertainment by R.T. Productions, a disc jockey from the UNCW campus. Paul Eaglin, special assistant to the chancellor for legal affairs at UNCW, will be the keynote address speaker.

The public is invited and tickets are $7 each for students, $13 for student couples; $10 each for alumni; and $13 each for community guests. Tickets may be obtained from the information center of the UNCW University Union and must be purchased by April 15. Dress will be black tie.

COMMENTARY

AIDS Testing Leaves Questions

By Penelope Whitley
Special to The Seahawk

When people live in a house they talk about a lot of communal stuff: painting murals on walls, feeding the neighbor's dog, cleaning the living room. A lot of talk, not so much action. So when we agreed to take the AIDS test together, I kind of doubted we'd follow through, even though it was 1 of our more important decisions.

None of us are heroin addicts but we haven't exactly led colostereid lifestyles either. And hell, someone once said Santa Cruz is so incestuous, if you've slept with one mountain biker, you've slept with them all.

The next thing I know the 10 of us are wandering around the county parking lot at the ridiculous hour of 8 a.m., looking for 1080 Emeline St. We found 1050, 1060, 1079 in the Mental Health Services Office. But where was 1080?

"I think this is a scam. I think the FBI just made up this place to see who'd show up to take the AIDS test," Ben said.

"Yeah," laughed Didi, "they're probably in the bushes snapping photos right now."

We finally find it: "WAITING ROOM -- FREE AND ANONYMOUS HIV ANTIBODY TESTING." We enter, go to the desk and get information sheets with fake names to guarantee anonymity.

Mine is Bob.

Then we sit down on the blue cushy plastic benches to read the papers they gave us, and things aren't so funny anymore. "It's not who you are, it's what you do. Individuals known to be at risk are..." and it lists IV drug users who share needles, hemophiliacs and others who have had blood transfusions, gay and bisexual men and everyone else and their mother who doesn't practice safe sex and have had multiple sexual partners of either sex. And the real heart-stopper for me: sexual partners of any of the above individuals.

It goes on to explain what test results mean. "Positive" indicates you've been infected with the AIDS virus and your body produced antibodies. In most people, this means an active virus is in the body and can be passed on to others. But positive doesn't necessarily mean you have or will get AIDS or AIDS Related Complex, or that you're immune to it.

"Negative" means no antibodies to the AIDS virus were found in your body at the time of testing. The obvious conclusion is you're not infected, right? But you're not home free yet. It could mean you've had contact with the virus but haven't become infected and haven't produced antibodies. Or it could mean you have been infected but haven't made any antibodies. It takes most people 2 to 8 weeks to produce them after infection.

I'm mulling over this dreary information when I hear a voice calling "Bob." My friends nudge me, "Hey that's you." I rise, go with the nice young man. Didi is sitting with Ben, face hidden in his hands. She looks like I feel.

Down corridors, past closed doors, open doors, into a small sterile room just for family planning. As he tells me about AIDS, goes over everything in the sheet, the anxiety deepens.

Then the questions start: "Have you ever used intravenous drugs or shared needles?"

"Have you had more than 1 partner in the last 5 years?"

"Ha!" I laugh too loud. "Yes." The man doesn't smile. His hand moves over the small rectangle of paper that says "BOB" at the top. Check. "Were any of them bisexual or intravenous drug users?"

I stall as images run past like movie credits. One screeching hawk, focus. A 6-foot-5 skinned man from Paris, telling me afterwards "I never get tired of sex. There are so many things you can do with 2 bodies..." Other blur-stop-clip memories. And I thought I was having such a good time.

I suck in air. "Probably," He doesn't look up. Scratch-scratch. Another crack.

"Have you ever had a blood transfusion?"

Stare at his hand, forget to breathe. "Yes." One more mark. Three strikes, you're out, right?

The man looks up, tells me the blood is tested in Santa Clara. Tells me if it tests positive they send it to Berkeley to retest. Tells me, either way, it'll take 2 weeks. I schedule an appointment to get the results. He goes to get the nurse. "Have a good one!", he says as he leaves.

Yeah, right. I don't move. The nurse enters, friendly, asks how I'm doing. I tell her I hate blood tests, how a couple of times nurses haven't been able to find my vein and went rooting around with the needle, jabbing, and turned my arms black and blue.

I don't tell her I hate this particular test, hate what it means, how the epidemic is far from over. Hell, the generation before me slept around and got herpes and cold sores. We screw around, get AIDS and die.

I shut my eyes, still clenching my fist when she tells me it's over. I see 2 vials of dark stuff on the table.

"Two teaspoons," she says.

Two weeks.

I feel faint.

Rise In Student Parking Fees For '88 Not So Bad

Parking stickers for the 1988-89 school year will be $4 more than they have been. This seems to be a continuing trend for the school as it has happened almost every year since the school became a university. The new price of a parking decal will be $50 for one year. This new policy came about as a result of the UNCW Board of Trustees retreat this past weekend at Shell Island Resort in Wrightsville Beach.

At first glance this may seem a bit outrageous and the obvious question is, "How do they justify this price just for the right to park on campus?" This is a fair question and one that deserves answers.

At the universities under state funding an Office of Auxiliary Services is responsible for the purchase of all road signs on its campus and the building and maintenance of its parking lots.

This money is generated through the parking decal fees and money collected through parking offences, those infamous tickets that we receive.

Consider how fast the school is currently expanding and try to imagine how much money is needed to build these new parking lots, pay salaries, and repair the lots and roads around campus. This is quite a bit of money and it is being spent on the students, none getting rich.

The office of Auxiliary Services receives no money from the state, they are completely student supported. The parking fee is in essence the schools equivalent to road tax.

In short, the rise is a bit of a problem because college students aren't usually the wealthiest lot of people around, but the cost is well justified in light of the fact that we in essence own the parking lots that we park in.

UPB Programs, Your Money Without You

"The Bermuda Triangle Band" performed yesterday in room 100 of the University Union, there were two six foot sub sandwiches and the concert was free to the students of UNCW. The band was good and the room had room for at least 150 people, the only problem was that only twenty showed up!

Barry Drake also performed in room 100 earlier in the spring and his act was worthy of seeing as well. Again about twenty people showed up.

These programs offer sound entertainment cheap! Not only is there entertainment, but there is also free food. It beats the hell out of spending three bucks at Hardee's, they don't entertain too much out there.

UPB screens these groups, they aren't chosen at random. They also pay these groups good money to come and perform for the students out of our student fees, our money. It's pretty pathetic that the student body doesn't take more of an interest in where this money is being spent, despite the fact that it is spent on them.

People complain so much about what doesn't happen at UNCW that they tend to forget that there are events worth going to being held every week.

Barry Sobel performed to a packed house in Kenan Auditorium in February, the promotional for him was great. That, however, was not the main reason for the good turnout. He was a "known" personality, students tend to go to see things they trust (his routine was almost identical to the one that UPB showed of him in the Union before the concert).

There are a lot of good programs held by UPB and it is paid for by "our" money, so why not give these not so well known acts a chance. It doesn't do any good to complain, it waste a lot of time that could be spent being entertained. Try it, most of the time they're pretty good.

The Other Side With Rick Cairns

Caffeine-Aholics: A Way Of Life

Most people sleep one-third of their lives and the remaining two-thirds are spent wishing they were sleeping. Is that any way to enjoy life?

You're probably asking yourselves, "what is this wierdo spewing about now". Allow me to explain.

Some nights we don't get eight hours of sleep. (Sometimes, no where near it). We usually make up for it on the weekends though. In actuality, we spend a third of our lives in la la land.

How many times a week do you hear, "I am so tired"? How many times a week do you see students dragging their asses across campus? The answer is 3.4 million, or a lot.

Don't you hate getting up early? Getting up late isn't exactly a picnic either. You yawn all day from not enough sleep. You yawn all day when you get too much sleep. Every class is a struggle to stay awake. You're tired in the evening, unless you're partying. If you're drinking, you can't stop at one because you'll get tired.

You can see yourself in some of these situations. Admit it. College students are supposedly in their prime, yet most are sleep walking. Has it always been this way, or has the Wicked Witch of the West dropped "poppies" all over America?

It's no wonder speed freaks and coke heads exist. They simply want to feel "not tired".

The rest of the population relies on another drug -- King Caffeine! Many thrive on coffee. They say that they can't wake up without a few cups under their belts. Many continue throughout the day, until it's time for almighty sleep. They're only fooling themselves. All they really get is bad breath and diarrhea.

I think that the majority of students at UNCW don't drink coffee. (I've tasted the coffee at the union, and I could see why.) Coke, Snodrop and other sodas are consumed by the millions though. Many students grab a soda before class to hopefully stay awake. I don't think that the caffeine keeps them awake, because the content is too minute. The psychological lift and the act of drinking something does the trick.

Experts say that the key to feeling lively is exercise. That's easier said than done. What are we suppose to do? Cartwheel our way from class to class? Somebody would get seriously hurt sooner or later.

It looks as though all we have is caffeine, but you must be careful -- it could be habit forming. At least, that's what the coffee industry is hoping for. They've been concerned the last ten years because young people have turned their back on coffee. Don't let them make you a coffee achiever. Just say No! When you think about it, if you need coffee after a night's sleep -- you've got a problem.

There are many addicts out there. I know a guy who has a thirty cup a day habit, and his employer supports it! Fresh brew is always on hand to keep the employees wired.

Can you imagine if caffeine was outlawed? The U.S. might come to a standstill. Former Java drinkers would be sleeping everywhere. Office personnel would be dazed and not worth a damn. The armed forces would have no leaders; a life without coffee is a dead man. The Russians would take over with no problem. They'd literally catch us sleeping.

The saddest sight would be a balding, wired man standing outside of a church, whispering "hey buddy, want to stay awake? I've got some good old brew, Colombian, mountain grown".

He'd give away an ounce to a poor schmuck. A week later the schmuck would be looking for him and be willing to pay exorbitant prices. The next thing he knows, he's got a fifty dollar a day habit, and begins living a lie. He finds himself sneaking a quick brew in the basement and in the garage. He'll be going to work with a thermos stuffed into his pants.

Finally a surprise urine drug test would reveal him for what he really is, and it's all over. His family will leave and his happy home goes up for sale. His only hope would be caffeine-aholics anonymous or the Mrs. Folger's clinic.

I know it sounds wild, but it can happen. You have a choice, plenty of sleep, a balanced diet and exercise. Or you can turn to caffeine.

I'll see you at the Coke machines.

Dear Rick,

I think your column is fabulous and just keeps getting better. When The Seahawk comes out it's the very first thing I turn to and gets my day started with a great laugh, and I can't think of a better way to start a day.

Keep up the good work and don't knuckle under.

"Knowing Someone" And Sex In The Eighties

I want to talk about sex! I try my very best to hang in with changing values of our society, particularly as they are reflected in this university setting. But I find myself troubled once more about our current sexual values which seem to assume and bless casual sexual relationships as the norm of young adult relationships. And now with the advent of AIDS we have backed into a new level of approval of casual sex as long as we engage in "safe sex."

It would be easy to lift up the negative aspects of being sexually active, not only because of AIDS, but also because I have worked with so many whose sexual activity has wound up causing them to deal with an unwanted pregnancy.

But, scare tactics are not effective means of dealing with any problem over the long haul. My real, bottom line, concern is one step deeper than the problems associated with casual sexual activity. It seems to me that we are losing sight of the incredible positive potential that our sexuality is designed for. There is too much surface sexual stimulation and sexual stimulation and sexual noise to be able to perceive the depth of promise our sexuality holds for us.

A phrase in Genesis reads, "Now Adam knew Eve his wife, and she conceived and bore Cain." Clearly, by design, intercourse connotes conception and knowledge.

A fundamental dimension of our sexuality is procreation. We are designed for marriage and family and in that context children are to be born, nurtured and, hopefully, blossom. But our sexuality also connotes a deep knowing of another person when we are committed to them. We do not know a person until we have plumbed their depth and met their spirit and the phrase from Genesis connects intercourse with that kind of deep knowing.

Our sexuality, at its very best, contains a sense of deep union, not only body to body but spirit to spirit, center to center. It is a possibility almost never realized in casual sex, and often not realized in many marriages. Still, such knowing of the other is possible. The best context for the realization of this possibility is in a marriage characterized by commitment, exclusiveness, trust, deep communication, and deep friendship. Our sexuality in its fullest moments occasions a letting go of Self and a mutual caring between two people that is experienced nowhere else except, perhaps, in the deepest dimensions of contemplative prayer.

The commercial use of sex and the sex of casual relationships for immediate gratification trivializes sex in such a way that there is no possibility of two persons "knowing" one another.

For such "knowing" we are designed and in such "knowing" we can find some of our deepest joy and fulfillment. There is so much more possible than short-term pleasure.

Such knowing takes time and slowly develops in a carefully developed context of trust and intimacy. I hope that the day will come when you will truly "know" a life partner.

Silverman Elected Attorney General

The Office of Minority Affairs at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will hold its third Annual Awards Program for Minority Students at 8 p.m., Tuesday, April 19, in room 100 of the University Union.

Speaker for the occasion will be Wilmington attorney Ernest B. Fullwood, a 1966 UNCW graduate. Fullwood is the first black to graduate from UNCW. Presenting special musical selections will be Rudy and Cynthia Tyson, a local husband and wife jazz duo who are also graduates of UNCW.

Some 60 students are expected to receive certificates of recognition for accomplishments in academics.

Academic achievement will be recognized with a special award for all full time black students who have attained at least a 3.0 grade point average for spring and fall semester in 1987.

Fifteen students will be recognized for achievements in campus leadership roles. In addition to these awards, a special award will be given to minority student of the year, symbolizing high leadership standards and academic achievement. Also on the program will be Wilmington pastor the Rev. Charles Davis, a 1982 graduate of UNCW, who will bring Scripture readings and the invocation.

The awards program was organized by Ralph Parker, director of minority affairs at UNCW. "Our intention with this program is to compliment and to give recognition to those students who have excelled," he said.

"In addition, an activity of this nature will inspire other minority students to pursue a higher level of achievement in all aspects of their lives as students and as citizens of the university community."

Parker invited all interested persons on campus as well as members of the off-campus community.

Jeffrey M. Silverman, a junior majoring in psychology at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, was elected attorney general at the 51st annual session of the N.C. Student Legislature on Saturday, March 26, in Raleigh. He is the son of Sanford and Phyllis Silverman, of 350 Tara Drive, Pleasant Hills, PA 15236.

NCSL is the oldest organization of its type in the United States and observed its 50th anniversary in 1986. Representatives from more than 20 colleges and universities participate in the legislature. Nearly 40 percent of legislation enacted by the group has been passed into N.C. law by the State General Assembly.

Silverman's role as attorney general is to advise the NCSC governor on parliamentary law, provide delegations with copies of by-laws, and serve as chairman of the constitution committee.

However, Silverman said, "I intend to do much more than that. I plan to develop a packet of information to aid in teaching parliamentary procedure to many of the participating schools. My plans include workshops, fund-raising and anything else that is needed to help the delegations."

The first interim council of the NCSC's 52nd year will be held April 15-17 in Bryan Auditorium on the campus of UNCW. Topics on the agenda include state lottery, three-month notice before an industrial plant is closed, and birth control advertisements on radio and television. State Senator Frank Block will speak to the group at 10:30 a.m., Saturday, April 16, in Bryan Auditorium.

Cancer Often Disregarded By All

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

Cancer concerns for both Men and Women

Cancer is a health concern often disregarded, but it can occur in many forms. This month the Health and Wellness Center would like to promote Self-Maintenance for breast, cervical, and testicular cancers. Both sexes should be very aware of their bodies at all ages, according to health official Katie Gilbert. The American Cancer Society heavily stresses examination for these cancers at the recommended periodic times for each. Early detection is the only way to improve chances for fighting these cancers, and the methods are rather simple.

Testicular cancer is one of the most common in men ages 15 to 34. Of all cancer deaths in men 12% fall into this group. Through early detection the most common form (Seminoma) has close to a 100% survival rate. The way to detect the early signs of testicular cancer is through a simple monthly self-exam. The best time for this examination is after a warm shower. Exact steps for the examination are explained in detail in a pamphlet called "For Men Only," and which can be obtained in the Wellness Center.

Breast cancer occurs in about 1 out of every 11 women sometime during their lifetime. Those with a high fat intake and extra body fat are more at risk than others. "How to Examine Your Breast" is a pamphlet which describes just what the title says. The description is plain and simple, and three methods of examination are described and illustrated. Katie Gilbert, along with many other health officials including the ACS, recommend a monthly self-exam, preferably after the menstrual cycle. Past cases show that most breast cancer is discovered first by women themselves. This self-exam could lead to early detection which raises the chance for successful treatment.

Contact the Health and Wellness Center for explicit information on these cancers and others. The pamphlets are available simply by walking in and picking them up. The number for the Health and Wellness center is 395-3280.

New ACS Guideline Recommendations For the Detection of Cervical Cancer In Asymptomatic Women

That all women who are, or who have been, sexually active, or have reached age 18 years, have an annual Pap test and pelvic examination. After a woman has had three or more consecutive satisfactory normal annual examinations, the Pap test may be performed less frequently at the discretion of her physician.

Another area which is receiving large amounts of research is Cervical cancer. It is strongly suggested by the ACS, as well as most physicians, that women have an annual pap test and pelvic exam if sexually active or over 18 years of age. Those at highest risk for cervical cancer are women who had intercourse at an early age, have multiple sex partners, and those who suffer from genital herpes.

The 1988 estimate is that 13,000 cases of cervical cancer will be detected and that 7,000 deaths will occur in America. The death rate has dropped drastically over the past 40 years. Many still die, and the majority of those women are in the 15 to 20% who do not have annual pap test.

All women who plan to obtain oral contraception must receive the pap test which is merely a procedure where cells are removed from the cervix and then examined under a microscope. The physical exam also requires a routine blood pressure test, breast exam, blood

Gridiron To Increase Enrollments In Small Universities

(CPS) To boost their public profiles and shrinking enrollments, several small Midwest colleges in recent weeks have adopted an unusual strategy: they've decided to field football teams.

A California junior college, moreover, announced it may go to court to keep its nationally-ranked football squad for the same reasons.

Officials at Trinity College, a church-affiliated Illinois school that enrolls about 600 students, announced in early March they will field a football team in 1989.

"I think people will see it as another sign that Trinity is healthy and doing well after a period of trouble"

Bob Moeller

It will be the first time Trinity has had a team in its 91-year history.

The reason, Trinity spokesman Bob Moeller says, will be to win students as much as to win football games.

"We have to do what we can to be competitive with the other small, church-affiliated, liberal arts colleges in the area," Moeller explained. "We're all competing for a shrinking pool of students."

Another Illinois school, Greenville College, started a team last fall after 94 years without a gridiron squad. The team did well on the field its first season, and according to school officials, helped attract dozens of new students by giving the school a larger public profile.

Greenville's success, said Moeller, encouraged Trinity, which suffered through financial hard times in recent years but has since rebounded.

"I think people will see it as another sign that Trinity is healthy and doing well after a period of some trouble," he said. A 1984 University of Kentucky study indicated a strong correlation between winning sports programs and athletic donations, but no significant relation between sports and academic gifts.

And when Wichita State University dropped its debt-ridden football program in 1988, applications, enrollment and donations actually increased.

Still, Robert Hartsook, Wichita State's vice-president for development and alumni affairs, years for the visibility a good football team can bring to a school.

"Right now I miss not being able to have a chance at good visibility in the fall," he said. "I'd like to have had Sunday headlines that said 'Wichita State Wins' this fall."

In California, Taft College may go to court to keep such headlines, and its football team, alive.

States Cutting Two And 4-Year College Budgets In Many States

Some students at Black Hills State College in Spearfish, S.D., may not get to graduate on time because Black Hills is trying to save money by offering a less-than-full summer school schedule this year.

And University of Arizona students may not get to study on time. Campus libraries are closing earlier on weeknights and weekends.

The reason is the same as in South Dakota: the state isn't giving the campus as much money as it did last year, and college officials are trying to find ways to cut back.

Two-and 4-year colleges in many states, in fact, are swearing they'll have to cut back on student services, freeze faculty salaries and - in one case - even fire a beauty queen to cope with lower funding in bills now being weighed in state legislatures around the country.

Students in Illinois, Maryland and Kentucky, for example, are conducting aggressive lobbying campaigns to convince their state lawmakers to appropriate more money for higher education, and thus avoid the steep tuition increases, class cuts and student service decreases they've been warned are coming.

The state legislatures -- most of which will be passing their annual or biannual higher ed appropriation bills in April -- provide public colleges with the bulk of the money they have to spend this year.

Various observers note some states are having trouble coming up with cash to give to colleges.

"Oklahoma, Texas and Louisiana are having devastatingly difficult times," reports Jerry Roschwalb of the National Association of State Colleges and Land-Grant Universities, a Washington, D.C., coalition that lobbies on public college issues. Alaska, North Dakota, South Dakota and West Virginia also cut the amount of money they're giving to their state campuses.

They "cut back on everything, spending less on higher education than they did the year before," said Brenda Erickson of the National Conference on State Legislatures (NCSL), which tracks the activities of state governments.

Erickson calculated that, nationwide, state funding on higher education increased a relatively paltry 7.4 percent since the 1986-87 fiscal year.

Illinois State University, which monitors state higher ed funding in 2-year periods, figured the appropriations are up 11 percent, the smallest increase since the recession year of 1982-83.

Gwen Prune, who edits ISU's "Grapevine," which monitors the funding, added "the (funding) trend is always up," but that "each year a different state or group of states does well."

"They cut back on everything, spending less on higher education than the year before"

Brenda Erickson

This year northeastern states, which in the early 80s were slashing their public college budgets, are doing well. "The oil states," Prune reported, "are struggling" now.

When a state's economy is overly dependent on 1 product or crop, Roschwalb pointed out, its health can evaporate "overnight" as businesses totter and pay less in taxes to their state governments which, in turn, have less money to give to their various departments, including higher education.

The impact on students can be immediate.

At the universities of Utah and Texas, for example, libraries are scrimping by cancelling subscriptions to newspapers and scholarly journals.

Black Hills State students, campus finance officer Shirley Sipe said, will have to pay higher fees next school year to pay for things the state used to provide for them.

Galvanized by the prospect of paying higher tuitions for fewer services, frozen faculty salaries and a cutback in the number of course sections offered next year, 2 waves of Kentucky students and faculty members -- 1 numbering 7,000 people, the second numbering 3,000 -- marched on the state capitol earlier in March to call for a bigger state college budget.

Michigan State University managed to save $1.3 million by halting campus equipment purchases for the next school year, refusing to hire more staff or faculty members and putting the necessities it has to buy on installment plans.

But MSU still may have to close its Humanities school, and students will pay more in tuition next year.

Governors State University in Illinois said it will have to raise tuition a whopping 20 percent to raise money to compensate for state funding cuts.

Despite the hike, Governors State will offer 10 percent fewer course sections next year to save money.

The unkindest cut of all may have been made at Wyoming's Casper College, where the student government, needing to save $4,000, voted to drop its Miss Casper College beauty contest.

Even where things are good, the schools don't enjoy lavish budgets.

In "miraculous" Massachusetts, critics charge prosperity is reaching campuses slowly.

Fitchburg State College, for example, "may have to trim the budget a little," said Mike Shanley, public relations director.

State funding has risen dramatically in terms of scholarships - "500 percent in the last 5 years," Shanley said.

But a billion dollar capital outlay bill for new construction at state colleges and physical plant rehabilitation, which Shanley termed unprecedented in size and scope, died in committee after its introduction last session. Reintroduced in January, the bill's fate is uncertain.

Passage of the bill will mean a new athletic complex and the renovation of aging laboratory and classroom buildings at Fitchburg.

MOVE UP IN NURSING. AND IN THE WORLD. BE A NAVY OFFICER.

If you want to make the most of your potential, look into a career as an officer in the Navy Nurse Corps.

You can move ahead fast because Navy promotions emphasize merit. And the opportunities for specialization are just as diverse as in civilian nursing. Nurse anesthetist, operating room, and obstetrics are just a few of the excellent assignments available.

You also get the added responsibility and leadership opportunity that are yours as a Navy officer—advantages that will move your career along even faster.

But that's not all. You'll be earning a top salary with superb benefits. And there's worldwide travel should you choose an overseas assignment after your first tour of duty. You'll earn 30 days' paid vacation annually and enjoy job security that can't be beat.

It's Spring Week!!!

Comedy, music, and more in store.

Join the fun!!!

The University Program Board on campus has scheduled a number of events during Spring Week April 11-17. The theme of the 1988 Spring Week is "7 days, 6 nights ... Almost all expenses paid."

Below is a list of the remaining events and scheduling details. Except where noted, events are open to the public.

Thursday: COMEDY ON CAMPUS!

Jedda Jones and Rondell Sheridan
University Union Room 100, 8:00 p.m.
Refreshments Served

Jedda Jones started out as a class clown and has been on the rise ever since. She has appeared in the feature films Avenging Force and Angel Heart, the TV movie Dead Man on the Run and wrote and directed the After Hours Comedy Revue on CBS affiliate station. Personally we feel Jedda is a delight to know—this translates onto the stage in her warm, personal delivery. Keep your eye on this performer, she's going places.

Jedda Jones

RONDELL SHERIDAN

Rondell Sheridan

Rondell Sheridan is funny. His humor is universal—about parents, being a kid, or going to church. He's clean and refreshing. Bill Cosby had a heavy influence on him, and he tells stories like Cosby, but he's his own kind of comic. Sheridan who was once a recruiter for Marquette University, jokes about problems of college life, including physics instructors who don't speak English, party raids, and resident assistants. Rondell is a regular at New York City's Improvisation, and the Comedy Cellar. Not only a comedienne, Rondell is a very talented actor, who's credits include appearances on Search for Tomorrow, and several national television and radio commercials. Most recently he has included a brief tour with the Buss Boys. As if that wasn't enough he plays the lead in Stevie Wonder's hot new video "Part Time Lover." This summer marked a first with his appearance in the August issue of Gentlemen's Quarterly. And in the true tradition of saving the best for last Rondell will be starring in a four minute film short to be shown on nation television during the Super Bowl pre-game show on Super Bowl Sunday. The film is entitled "Forever Young," and was produced by Bob ("Beat it", "Say, Say, Say..", and "All Night Long") Giraldi. Working clubs and colleges all over the country Rondell Sheridan is definitely one of those acts you simply must see.

Friday: *ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
University Union Room 100, 12:00
Midnight. 99c with UNCW ID, $3.00 guests.

Need we say more?

Spring Week happens only once a year. Don't let it pass you by.

Sunday: *SEASIDE JAM IX Featuring Innovation and Freedom of Expression, University Union Lawn, 2:00 p.m.-7:00 p.m.

Seaside Jam is a blast!

The Nashville-based Freedom of Expression band will appear at this year's Seaside Jam.

We hope to see you out on the lawn!

Nashville-based FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION is the epitome of the "hard working band." The five piece group averages five performances per week, mostly one-nighters for New Orleans to Boston and from Chicago to Key West, FL. A mean feat indeed for a band that does mostly original material in a medium thus far perceived as "non-commercial." FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION makes no bones about wanting to be the band that breaks reggae and ska in America.

In the fall of 1985 FOE released "For Lack Of A Better Word," a six song EP which made CASHBOX's "Records To Watch" listing. "I know it's a little strange that these dudes from the home of country music play the music of the islands," writes THE COLUMBIA STATE AND RECORD (Columbia, S.C.) "but the real kicker is that they do it well. Extremely well... (While being authentic, FOE is highly accessible to Americans." And THE HUSTLER from Nashville's own Vanderbilt University says FOE is "headed for certain glory... (a) band to keep watching." As one of the above quotes suggests, the band's success is largely due to it's ability to be accessible to those uninitiated to reggae, while at the same time being authentic enough to have done shows with The Wallers, Albert Griffins and The Gladiators, Don Carlos, The Killer Bees, and The Ethiopian and The Meditations.

The group consists of Skin Bethune (guitar, vocals,) Tim Brooks (bass, vocals,) Rob Hoskins (keyboards, vocals,) Kevin McGinty (guitar, vocals,) and David Bollinger (drums, vocals.)

*Open to UNCW Students and their guests ONLY.

Editor's Note:

We apologize to our readers, since our publication date means advance notice about only a few of the Spring Week activities. Performances by Mark Twain, Bermuda Triangle, and Cornelius & Crawford all took place earlier in the week. Regardless, please get out there and enjoy the rest!!!

Update from St. John's Museum

There are four basic ingredients which are essential to the development of the visual arts in any region: artists, exhibition spaces, patrons, and critics. In North Carolina, we are fortunate to have a growing number of artists, exhibition spaces, and patrons, but we fall short in the area of criticism.

On April 15, St. John's Museum of Art will host a symposium, Criticism: Friend or Foe, to discuss the role of the critic in development of art since 1940. The symposium is in conjunction with the exhibition The 40s to the 80s: American Art from the Waterspoon Art Gallery. University of North Carolina at Greensboro, which is on view from March 18 - May 28, 1988. Noted New York art critic John Perreault will present a historical perspective of criticism in his lecture "Critiquing the Critics: Art Criticism Since 1945" at 11:00 a.m. in the Museum's Hughes Gallery. The afternoon session will be a panel discussion by noted artists, exhibition curator, art dealer, and critic. Included among the panel guests will be Ann Shengold, former Visual Arts Director at Knight Gallery, Spirit Square; John Perreault, critic and Director of Newhouse Center for Contemporary Art; and Dr. Edward Levine, sculptor and Dean of the School of Art at East Carolina University.

Reservations for the symposium may be made by calling the Museum at 763-0281. There is a fee for the symposium of $5.00 for non-members and $4.00 for Museum members. Box lunches will be available for $5.00.

Registration is now being accepted at St. John's Museum of Art for a Calligraphy Workshop with noted British calligrapher Peter Thornton for the weekend of April 29-30. Mr. Thornton, who has taught extensively in England and the United States, will be teaching Italic and variations for both the newly developing calligrapher and the more practiced hand. March 15 is the deadline for pre-registration. For further information, call the Museum's Education Department at 763-0281.

Attention Chocaholics!!!

On Saturday, April 16th, the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear presents the First Annual Chocolate Festival as a fundraiser for arts support... "INDULGE: A Chocolate Affair" will be held from 10 am to 9 pm in the center court of Independence Mall.

All you can eat tickets are $5, carry out bags & boxes are available. Indulge, and taste the arts. For tickets or information, call the Arts Council at 763-2787 or 762-9312.

Artsy awards given out at Front Street News gala

by Heidi Berge
Staff Writer

Front Street News was busting at the seams with artsy folks the evening of March 31st as they celebrated their one year anniversary party and roasted local artists with "Newsy Awards." Perry Fisher, the owner of Front Street News, says this ceremony will be an annual event.

The UNCW Brass Quintet serenaded celebrants from blocks away, and greeted guests at the door. Inside there were balloons - black, silver and pink, bouncing playfully around the floor with others hung as a sort of proscenium arch for the acceptants. The tables were fitted with white tablecloths and then elegantly littered with shiny black confetti...

A poster in the window said, "The Newsy Awards... wear something black." Not your typical Tux or little black dress, but a combination of Tux jackets, Tee-shirts, black sequined tube-tops, shorts, high-top tennis shoes, and jeans epitomized the prestigious, yet casual guests.

The emcee of the evening, Ray Bright, member of the Directors Guild and currently working on his spoof of Blue Velvet called Black Velvet, provided this definition for Front Street, "A watering hole for gender confusion and imported beer. (Re: Awards night) We are gathered here in a sort of orgy of self congratulations to recognize those (artists) who contributed more than good intentions to the Wilmington cultural community."

Local artists were nominated by the proprietors of Front Street and voted for by frequenters. Each was provided one ballot... the artist with the most votes won.

The coveted Newsy Award itself is a tall silver beer can with pink and black streamers topped with a tiny black top hat that pops out of the can like champagne bubbles.

More than 40 Newsy Awards served as an impressive backdrop for the speaker's stand. As each artist accepted their award they gladly gave an acceptance speech, usually witty and humorous. Everyone thanked Donna and Perry for bringing such talented people together.

Here are the 1988 winners of The Front Street Newsy Awards:

Best Publication - Charles Fort for The Wilmington Review
Poetry - Charles Fort
Visual Arts - Ellis Eford
Photography - Jim Bridges

'A Happy Haven' opens Wednesday on campus

The University Theatre of the Creative Arts Department on campus will present John Arden's devilishly funny comedy "The Happy Haven" in the S.R.O. Theatre on campus on April 20-24.

"The Happy Haven" is about life in an old folk's home, and about the experiments performed by the doctor in charge, using the inmates as involuntary guinea-pigs, to produce a scientific rejuvenator. The situation would appear to produce sympathy for the old since the idea of manipulating honored senior citizens as unsuspecting subjects would be, in most cases, distasteful. Yet Arden works against the normal sympathy and produces through broad grotesque comedy a pantomime in which he leans over backwards to show us the doctor's side as well as that of his patients. His old people are anything but sugar-coated sentiment-traps: They are permitted to be as good or as bad as people of any age or group may be. They are in fact less "old folks", as special case, than just people who happen all to be over sixty.

This is a rich play: A lot of it is funny, and some of it is beautiful. The tough, unsentimental characterizations give the play humanity, to make it in any sense that matters a more sympathetic picture of the old than any rose-tinted fantasy, which in most cases strips its people of their real dignity and individuality. It forbids the audience to insult them with easy pity but forces an honest reflection of the unique beauty of all people at any age.

The production is under the direction of W. Terry Rogers with Tom Macie serving as Scenic Designer/Technical Director. The costumes are designed by Caroline Dekkers. Bonnie Rogers has created masks for the old people. The lighting design is under the control of Hillary Russel with Karla Stith stage-managing the production.

Reservations can be made by calling the Creative Arts Department: 395-3440 between the house of 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. during the week of production April 18-22. The ticket price is $4.00 for all non-university students. Special rates are offered for groups. Please call for reservations since the seating capacity for the S.R.O. Theatre is limited.

As the number of students attending UNCW has increased, so the quality of the average student has risen. The scores of the Scholastic Achievement Test (SAT) have risen in the past decade and that trend is expected to continue. The average SAT score for entering freshmen in 1977 was 859. The average score for freshmen in 1988 is 920 and the projected score for 1992 is 950. With these figures rising, Cahill's report to the trustees noted that there must be a considerable expansion of authorized enrollment during the next five years or an increasingly larger number of qualified students will be denied access to the university.

Cahill said the biggest problem on the UNCW campus is the lack of space. With the increasing number of students, UNCW needs more classroom and laboratory space, library accommodations and room for the office of special programs to hold their non-academic courses. William Madison Randall Library has adequate space for approximately nine years.

UNCW is also adding new graduate programs. These students need more space for their research so they can obtain the best education possible from UNCW. Cahill also explained that Trask Coliseum seats 6600 people and the expected enrollment for next fall is approximately 7000. If members of the community cannot get into the ball games there will not be much community support, morally or financially. Priorities need to be set to acquire for the necessary space and steps need to be taken one at a time to handle these improvements to the UNCW campus.

In the area of business affairs, Lr. R. O. Walton discussed the way the land of the UNCW campus is being used, some of the future plans for the campus, and the financing of these projects. Better than one half of UNCW land is in use. Of the 630 original acres, roughly 300 acres are not in use. Walton said that UNCW is known as one of the best planned campuses in the South. UNCW has a long range plan for the development of the campus through the year 2000. Planned for the university's campus in coming years is additional student housing, improved lighting, bike paths, and additional exit from the campus.

Financially, UNCW has grown steadily in the amount of state appropriated funds received. This is partly due to the increased number of faculty and students and also the biggest jump in appropriations occurred in 1984-85 when UNCW became a Comprehensive Level One institution.

Bryan, vice chancellor for student affairs, said the student affairs staff is committed to a philosophy of student development. Goals of his division are to teach the student use of personal, institutional, community, and other resources towards the goals of individual development, self-fulfillment and responsible citizenship. The primary responsibilities of each department are to provide services, programs, consultation, and advocacy.

Specifically student affairs organization includes the Office of Vice Chancellor, Office of the Dean of Students, the Student Development Center, Career Planning and Placement Center, Student Health and Wellness Center, the University Union, Financial Aid, and Residence Life. As UNCW grows more diverse, the challenges of the student affairs division grow exponentially. Bryan said the challenge for this division is to maintain its commitment to the philosophy of student development, that is, "accepting students where they are and helping them to grow and develop intellectually as well as interpersonally and to create an environment that is stimulating, secure, and allows for freedom but offers control and order."

Bryan said, "We want to use our potentials and identify problems that are present and seek solutions to those problems. We want to keep the individual student as our focus."

The final presentation was by Dr. Doug Moore, vice chancellor for university advancement. Moore said the advancement office was in the business of educating and getting information to special constituency groups such as alumni, foundation, ambassadors, and governmental boards. Also part of their job is development of the university, special events, and "to build the best university we possibly can." Moore said that this campus is great because of the good leadership. "They are dedicated to upholding the charge to the institution by the state of North Carolina which is, 'Education-Research-Community Involvement.'"

UNCW is facing many new changes and many new challenges. It is important that trustees, administrators, faculty, staff and students understand the university's possibilities and limits and be involved in this pursuit of excellence at UNC-Wilmington.

McLaurin Lectures On 17th

On Sunday, April 17, 1988, at 2:30 PM, Dr. Melton A. McLaurin will lecture on his most recent book, Separate Paths. Growing up White in a Segregated South, at New Hanover County Museum of the Lower Cape Fear.

Dr. McLaurin will reflect on his youth as a white male growing up in a small rural segregated North Carolina town in the 1940's and 1950's. He will examine how the prejudices and taboos about blacks often conflicted with personal friendships and experiences. Dr. McLaurin will be available for questions at the conclusion of his lecture.

Dr. McLaurin holds a Ph.D. in History from the University of South Carolina. He is chairman of the History Department at UNCW and is the author of four other books on southern history -- Paternalism in Protest. Knights of Labor in the South. Mobile: History of a Southern Seaport. and Image of Progress: Alabama Photographs, 1877-1917.

The program is free.

Alternatives Day Fair

The LiveWell/Alternatives Center at UNC-Wilmington will hold its first ALTERNATIVES! Day Fair between 11 a.m. and 6 p.m. Wednesday, April 20, in front of the University Union. The Fair is designed to provide a variety of healthy and positive experiences without the use of psychoactive chemicals.

Events scheduled include a fun run, ropes course, hot air balloon rides, water aerobic instructions, community and campus resource booths, music, food, and stress management activities. Most events will go on all day, and with the exception of water aerobics which will be held in the pool, the events will be in front of the Union.

Set up and tethering of the hot air balloon begins at 7 a.m., and this will be a beacon to attract people to the event. The fun run begins at 2:15 p.m. and requires a $1 entry fee. Everything else is free and the public is invited to attend.

"The entire building will be networked," Carter explained. "We will have the latest computer capability in this building with every office and most classrooms connected."

Carter noted that such networking is not being done anywhere else on the UNCW campus and in very few other places in the country. After visiting a number of colleges and universities up and down the East Coast, Carter said "I've only seen a system such as ours attempted at one other place and that was Duke, and they're just getting started."

The computer networking will allow communication throughout the building, from office to office, and from office to classroom. Carter explained that it should result in a significant reduction in paperwork, among other benefits.

"It will allow student assignments to be electronically filed, transmitted and graded. And it also allows faculty to design models and other materials which will later be projected in their classrooms," Carter said. "Faculty members can set up a diagram in their office, store it on the network, then call it up and project it on a screen in the classroom. This will be particularly beneficial for such things as accounting problems, which require quite a bit of time to put on a chalk board."

"With this system, the professor can put the problem on the computer, then project the problem right in front of the classroom. Number changes can be made with instantaneous results to show students exactly what it means when you talk about equity ratio and profit lines," Carter said.

Another interesting physical design feature of the building is an 1,100-square-foot executive management facility on the first floor. This "mini-conference" style center will allow the Cameron School of Business to hold special management workshops with area business people. It is equipped with specialized audio visual and computer hook-ups and will also accommodate catered food functions. It is designed in such a way that programming can take place in privacy during a regular class day.

Throughout the process of designing and building the facility, Carter said that the students' best interests were foremost. "The atmosphere is built around the student. When we started drawing lines, we asked 'how could we make the space best designed and so desirable that a student really wants to come here to learn.'"

The School of Business was also concerned about accessibility to students. "In accordance with our management philosophy in the dean's office," Carter said, "we are right at the heart of the building, right in the middle on the first floor so students can have access to the place where they can have their questions answered or directed. We are not tucked away in some dark corner on the top floor so nobody can get to you."

Hawks Look To Tourney

It hasn't been a very successful season for UNCW baseball coach Bobby Guthrie. His Seahawks, rebuilding after winning the Colonial Athletic Association regular season championship in 1987, are currently 9-27 on the season.

UNCW wasn't playing all that badly until a current nine-game losing streak dashed any hopes of the Seahawks turning the campaign around.

Guthrie had his Seahawks playing very competitive baseball in late March, taking two of three games from conference foe Richmond and beat Old Dominion 6-1 before starting the current slide.

The latest disaster was a three-game sweep by James Madison last weekend by a cumulative score of 40-7.

If you are looking for causes, there are plenty of places to point, but Guthrie has pointed to one in specific.

"We have struggled from an offensive standpoint," said Guthrie. "We need to improve in a lot of areas, but our offense has hurt us in a lot of ball games."

The stats back Guthrie up. The Seahawks have a team batting average of .235 and have scored three runs or less in 21 of 36 games.

Besides senior Tim Langmeyer, who leads the team with a .304 average, Mike Byers (.286), and Scott Brady (.282), the Seahawks are pathetic at the plate.

The pitching has also been below par. UNCW pitchers have a combined 6.11 earned run average. The biggest problem has been the multitude of free passes issued to first base, as one of six batters faced is issued a walk. The pitchers have walked 219 batters (6.1 per game) and given up 29 home runs, while striking out 185 batters.

Yet all is not lost. UNCW still has plenty of games remaining on the schedule and have many goals to work towards as they try and rebuild themselves into a contender. The Seahawks also still hold a shot at a NCAA tournament bid because of the conference format that send the tournament chap to the NCAA regionals.

"We are trying to find the right combination to turn things around offensively," said Guthrie. "We are going to continue to work hard and hope something good comes out of the season, especially with the conference tournament."

If the ball can bounce the right way for the Seahawks in the conference tournament the way it did for the underdog and cinderella East Carolina Pirates in 1987, the Seahawks know there is still hope for 1988.

Speaking of baseball, the major leagues are going into their second week of the season with a few surprises and a few expected occurrences.

In the National League, the Chicago Cubs are in first place, while the defending National League champs, the St. Louis Cardinals are struggling at the bottom of the Eastern Division.

The Cubs are off to a quick start, but don't expect them to stay there for long. The Cards are also not likely to stay in the basement. St. Louis has one of the best pitching staffs in baseball will once again challenge for the top spot. The New York Mets have played average baseball, but are showing too many rookie mistakes for a veteran ball club. The Mets problems are age and weakness in the middle infield.

In the West, Cincinnati may be ready to win the division after so many years in second. They took two from San Francisco this week and looked prime to upset the "Hum Bats."

Coming out of spring training, NL West followers said the Giants were acting like they had the division locked up. Confidence is great, but the Giants have to remember that little matter of the 162 game schedule.

As for those lowly Atlanta Braves, they have one consolation, they won't go 0-162.

In the American League, the Baltimore Orioles have the same consolation as the Braves. Boston, with the addition of stopper Lee Smith, may be a real surprise. Toronto and New York are also solid as the East will once again be a toss up. Cleveland, getting pitching for the first time may also stun a few people.

In the West, Oakland, Kansas City and Minnesota have the best squads, with Seattle charging. Pitching will be the key and KC has the deepest squad to help them towards another title.

My picks for the year. In the NL East, Philadelphia and in the NL West, Cincinnati.

The American League should have the New York Yankees in the AL East and Kansas City in the West.

Lady Linksters Capture Azalea Invitational

UNC Wilmington established school records for 18 and 54-hole totals in successfully defending its championship in the recent Seahawk/Azalea Invitational.

UNCW finished with a three-round total of 935 at Echo Farms Golf and Country Club, a whopping 25 shots ahead of runnerup Longwood College at 960. James Madison was third (966) followed by Methodist (984), Mississippi (1,001), Jacksonville (1,014), Penn State (1,019), William & Mary (1,044), Winthrop (1,165) and Coastal Carolina (1,294).

The Lady Seahawks set a new 18-hole mark with a final-round score of 302, bettering the previous record of 303 set last October at the Beacon Woods Invitational. UNCW's 54-hole record eclipsed the old mark of 938 set at last year's Seahawk/Azalea Invitational.

Longwood's Tina Barrett captured medalist honors, shooting a three-day total of 223, including a final round 74. UNCW's Paige Cribb, last year's medalist, posted the final day's lowest round, 73, in placing second, five shots behind Barrett at 228. Claudia Cardinale of Jacksonville finished third with a 231.

Five UNCW golfers finished in the top 10 individually. Nina Van Drumpt rebounded from a second-round 85 to shoot 75 on the final day to finish tied for fourth at 236.

Mary Thomas and Sandy Chester posted 238 totals, while freshman Laura Covington was one shot back at 239. Freshmen Christina Jaskolski (250) and Michele Kammerer (269) were the other UNCW linksters.

Strokin' Along

UNCW golfer Sandy Chester takes a divot as she plays in a tournament last year. Chester, a senior, helped lead UNCW to a first place finish in the Seahawk/Azalea Invitational last weekend at Echo Farms Country Club. Teammate Paige Cribb finished second individually.

College Sports Don't Make That Much

Give credit where credit is due. This year's NCAA basketball tournament was a great one. Full of excitement, near upsets, upsets and the phenomenal coaching of Larry Brown. It was college basketball at its best.

It was so good, in fact, it only served to reinforce how thoroughly unnecessary all the hype surrounding the tournament is. The games spoke for themselves. We did not need the elaborate machinations of the media to draw them to our attention.

Yet the hype was inescapable, and once again, it served as an intense and painful reminder of all that is wrong with big-time college sports in America.

The commercialization of college sports -- sports meant to be amateur in nature -- has been a long and slow process. It began decades ago. But the advent of television -- and the invasion of television into the world of education via sports -- has commercialized and corrupted college sports beyond recognition, beyond what anyone could have conceived 40 years ago.

I don't think anyone speaks more eloquently on the subject of big-time college sports and its place in the university structure than Dr. A. Barlett Giamatti, president of the National League and former president of Yale University.

Dr. Giamatti doesn't waste much time with grandiose philosophical generalizations. He gets right to the heart of the matter: money. And he gets right to the heart of the myths about the money surrounding big-time college sports. Myths the colleges and universities use to justify the big-time college sports system.

The public, says D. Giamatti, thinks big-time college sports generates huge revenues for the school. The public hears multimillion-dollar figures and thinks, as the public is meant to, that sports is generating lots of money that comes back into the school, that can be used for all sorts of things, including scholarships (academic as well as athletic), housing, the libraries, construction of new buildings, whatever the university might need.

Not true, Dr. Giamatti says. Not a penny of revenue from big-time sports goes anywhere but back into the sports department, for whatever the sports department cares to do with it.

But what makes Dr. Giamatti laugh, albeit ruefully, is the idea that the sports revenues, these millions of dollars the public hears about, are a lot of money. Big bucks. It's not big money at all. Not compared with the kind of money universities get from the federal government in the form of research grants. Any big-time college sports school that dabbles in research, or is deeply involved in research, gets federal money that positively dwarf any revenue from basketball or football. So great are the sums coming in for research that the sports dollars are almost meaningless in comparison.

This is how it works. Universities compete for, and win, federal contracts for a variety of projects and research. If a university wins one grant for cancer research, a $1 million grant, the university also is entitled to something called the indirect recovery rate. That rate is extra money, anywhere from 68 percent to 72 percent of the total federal grant. For the $1 million for cancer, the school also would get about $700,000 to cover the costs of administering the grant; the heat, the light, the power used while doing research on the university premises; even for any extra janitorial services needed, to clean up at the end of a very long, late day.

One million-dollar grant, plus the indirect cost recovery rate. A million-dollar grant is a small one. Most are much larger. Start multiplying these grants, hundreds upon hundreds of them, at millions upon millions of dollars each, plus the indirect recovery rate for each grant, and you get some idea of the staggering amount of money pouring into American universities from the government. Billions of dollars. It is this money that universities depend on. Survive on. Thrive on. Not the dollars from sports.

And what happens when this money comes in? It goes to graduate and post-graduate members of the university. It is carefully monitored. There are controls so that the money is not misused. And if the money comes from a private source, such as a pharmaceutical company, the controls and monitoring of the grant and work is even more intense. Why? To protect the university and to protect the students. To protect them from commercialization.

But there are no such controls in college sports. There is no such protection for the undergraduates, for the athletes. Protection that is given to the graduate students. This is what angers Dr. Giamatti, and others, so much.

When you watch a tournament as good as the recent one, you watch with a feeling of sadness or regret somewhere underneath the excitement and enjoyment. Sadness or regret because you know, in your heart, that the system that has produced such extraordinary talents as a Danny Manning, such terrific coaches as Larry Brown and Tom Penders, who did such a spectacular job with little Rhode Island, and who now is moving to coach at the University of Texas, need not be as commercialized, as corrupt, and as ugly as it is. That the excesses of recruitment practices, the corruption of coaches under too much pressure to win at any cost, the interference of alumni, aren't even necessary to produce good, exciting, competitive college basketball.

And perhaps the most sorry fact of all is that the universities themselves try to justify what they do in the name of sports, to their undergraduates, and to our education, for financial reasons. They use a revenue argument, based on paltry sums, to excuse their absence of leadership. Bart Giamatti calls their arguments as palsy as the monies involved. He's so right about that. He is often so right, about so many things, involving sports and education in America.

Seahawks Rained Out

Wednesday's baseball game between UNCW and Campbell at Brooks Field was postponed due to rain. The contest has been rescheduled for Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m.

The Seahawks, 9-27 on the year overall and 7-13 at home, play today at Coastal Carolina in a 3:00 p.m. contest. UNCW will then take to the road for a key three-game series at William & Mary. Head Coach Bobby Guthrie's squad is 3-8 in the Colonial Athletic Association.

JMU Hires Driesell

James Madison University, a fellow member with UNCW in the Colonial Athletic Association, announced the hiring of former Maryland Coach Lefty Driesell to a five-year contract.

Activities Fair for New Freshmen

It is time again to be thinking about the future. In June, Summer Orientation will have almost nine hundred new freshmen on campus. That's nine hundred potential new members to your organizations! And the good news is you can have the opportunity to talk to them. On June 13, 17, and 20, there will be an Activities Fair from 10:35 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. in room 100 at the Union.

I encourage every group to have a table set up for recruiting these future leaders. Space is limited, so you must sign up your organization with the Student Activities Office before May 10, 1988.

Good Luck and have a great summer!!

Traffic Patterns To Be Discussed

The executive committee of the UNC-Wilmington Board of Trustees will meet at 2:15 p.m., Monday, May 2 in room 215 of Alderman Hall in a special called meeting.

The purpose of the meeting is to discuss the effect of the City of Wilmington's thoroughfare plan on campus traffic patterns.

The discussion will take place in open session.

Purchasing Rules Change

Effective May 1, purchasing will enforce that local orders under $25 be processed with petty cash. If an order is not local but is under $25 and has sufficient back up descriptive pricing information, you are asked to process a check request. In the event of a question, submit a requisition and purchasing will determine the appropriate channel of processing.

Three Plays To Be Presented

Three original one-act plays will be presented by the Playwrights Producing Company on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, May 12-14, at the newly air-conditioned St. Thomas Preservation Hall, 208 Dock Street, at 8:00 p.m. each evening. The three plays are White Doves, Harvard Street, and Whatever Happened to Marriage?

Tickets will be on sale at the door, $4 general admission, and $3 for students and senior citizens.

"Love 'Em and Lead 'Em"

Dr. Paul B. Malone III, assistant dean for graduate programs in the School of Government and Business Administration at George Washington University in Washington, D.C., will present a supervisors' seminar on leadership titled "Love 'Em and Lead 'Em" May 6 from 9-11 a.m. in UU-100. For more details call Brenda Dineen at 3712.

Children's Day Camp Offered

Stimulate your child's sense of discovery! If you haven't already registered your child in a Wilmington Parks and Recreation Day Camp, come by the Community Arts Center, located on 2nd and Orange, Friday, May 13 between noon and 7:00 p.m.

Camps being offered include Arts Camp, Outdoor Adventure Camp, Lifetime Sports Camp, and Summer Enrichment. For more information on the Wilmington Parks and Recreation Day Camps, call the Community Arts Center at 341-7860.

Used Book Sale

Great book values is what you'll find at the used book sale on May 7, 10:00 a.m. until 9:00 p.m., center court of Independence Mall. First editions, almost new novels, children's books, and much more - thousands of volumes are available. Proceeds from the sale go to the scholarship fund of the American Association of University Women.

Educational Loans for Summer

Educational loans from College Foundation Inc., (CFI) are available for summer school attendance as well as for the academic year.

CFI's loans are for North Carolina residents attending colleges, universities, technical and vocational schools in or out of state and for non-residents attending postsecondary institutions in North Carolina. The loans are for both undergraduate and graduate students. Parents of dependent students may qualify for one of the three types of educational loans.

For more information, contact College Foundation Inc., P.O. Box 12100, Raleigh, NC 27605 or call (919) 821-4771.

Wilmington Mayor to Speak

Wilmington Mayor Don Bezz will be the featured speaker at "Top Management Night" of the Association of Production and Inventory Control Specialists on May 5. The meeting begins with a social at 6:30 p.m. at the Wrightsville Beach Holiday Inn. All interested professionals are invited. For reservations call Randy Kinsey, 791-8510.

Health and Wellness Threat

Anyone with possession of a PARTNERS AND HEALTH book must return it to the Student Health and Wellness no later than MAY 6. Failure to do so could result in a fine!

SGA Approves Proposed Budgets

By Celeste Butley & Chad Adams
Seahawk Editors

The last SGA meeting for the 1987-88 school year was held Monday evening with its primary purpose being to finalize the allocations of SGA funds for clubs and organizations as determined by the Senate finance committee.

The SGA had a total of $235,000 to distribute, of which they allocated $223,640 to UNCW's various clubs and organizations.

The meeting began at 6:09 p.m. as Robert Smith, the newly elected SGA Vice President, called the meeting to order. After the usual parliamentary procedures, clubs and organizations that wished further defend their proposed budgets were allowed to speak.

The University Publications Board was the only organization to speak, as they wished to ask for their Coffeehouse funds to be re-allocated for the coming year. The finance committee had determined to cut the funds for this area of UPB activity due to the lack of student interest in past Coffeehouse productions.

Their presentation was given in hopes that the SGA would review the finance committee's recommendation to cut the funds.

The only club to appear before the SGA was the club football team, represented by James Earl Jones, the club's former president. He made it clear that should the club not get the amount that they requested, "... there would be no football club next year."

The finance committee had determined to cut the football budget by $5,600.

After the clubs and organizations were given their five minutes to speak, Smith continued with the meeting by hearing Chairman of the finance committee Lee King's report to the Senate on his committee's decisions.

A motion was made to the floor to hear each individual budget request instead of adopting the proposal as a whole and the movement was passed by majority vote.

Seniors Coping with Exams

By Kim Kopka
Staff Writer

The first week in May will be a busy week for the entire campus of UNC-W. The month of May means exams for all students and faculty. Pressure, anxiety and a feeling of accomplishment are just a few of the symptoms felt by many students and faculty.

Final exams, especially for seniors, are the last chance to bring up low grades for the semester. For seniors graduating in May, final exams are just that, final. It won't be the first time they have studied for exams and the experience may be useful for studying habits. "I study for exams a little at a time, taking breaks -- lots of breaks -- so I don't get brain-drained in the end," says Lisa Beekman, a social science major graduating in May.

Another graduating senior is Scott Lusk. Lusk is a communication major, who like most of us would like to study a little at a time, but procrastinates until the night before the exam. "I prepare for my hardest exam first in my spare time and then try to schedule my time so I won't have to cram the night before, but that's what I usually end up doing," says Lusk.

Many students have found they have had to change their studying habits each year. Randy Soare and Amy McCurry are both juniors at UNC-W. For them, exams and studying habits changed after their sophomore year. "I used to split a case of beer with a friend to study, but I've calmed down and have maybe two beers while I study now," says Soare. Other

After approval of funds to be allocated for the Gazebo, which is currently under construction between the on-campus apartments and New Hall, the State Employees of the SGA, the Seahawk Shuttle service, and the Executive account the budget of the Seahawk was to be voted on.

The amount that the finance committee had determined to give the paper was set at $22,500 after a two-day review of the proposed budget. The amount was the highest ever recommended for the paper and many Senate members felt that this amount was far too high.

The debate which ensued lasted nearly three hours, and resulted in two rounds of debate on the proposed Seahawk budget for 1988-89. Two separate motions to give the Seahawk lesser amounts—one to keep the budget at the $12,000 allocation of the previous year, the other to allocate the Seahawk $19,500—were made during the debate. After many senators had given their opinions, the final vote resulted in approval of the finance committee's recommendations, and the Seahawk received $22,500 for the coming school year.

SGA members appeared tired of debate after finally approving the Seahawk budget and the following twenty budgets were approved within two and a half hours.

Clubs that have not been allocated money will be reviewed by the SGA and will receive funds in the fall, with the exception of the Fledgling, which will be undergoing internal audit.

students resort to the affects caffeine gives them. "I drink Jolt Cola and Mountain Dew the whole week of exams to keep myself going," says McCurry.

For students who need some extra help with studying habits and stress control, counseling psychologist Michael Affemann counsels students and offers some guidelines to prepare students for exams. "Do not study any later than ten o'clock the night before an exam, and don't study the morning of or just prior to the exam," says Affemann. Contrary to popular studying habits, Affemann says students should eat nutritionally, get plenty of sleep and concentrate on relaxing by deep breathing and meditating a half hour before the exam instead of reviewing.

While students are finishing exams professors are just starting on them. Randy Harrington, an instructor in the communication department says, "Grades are just as important to professors as they are to students." Harrington prefers to finish his grading at home, doing a bunch of exams at a time. "Grades are competitive," says Harrington, "I compare one paper to the next."

Exams are important, but they aren't everything; there is more to life than exams. "Everything is important, but nothing so much," says Harrington. Anne Joslin, a professor in the education department gives problem solving exams so her students can pull together everything they have learned throughout the semester and apply it. "Once they finish studying and exams are over, students will have a better understanding of how to integrate the information they have learned," says Joslin.

There is nothing quite like the pressure students feel during exams. After May 6, 1988 students and professors will get a break, some longer than others. For those taking the summer off it will be a nice long break for those going to summer school they will have to make the best of two weeks and for graduating seniors a major accomplishment has been achieved and it's off to the real world for them.

Gay Rights Ignored By Administration

By Bruce Foley
Staff Writer

colleges show a strong evidence of a fear of homosexuals, and generally embrace a negative attitude towards the gay population.

A recent questionnaire concerning attitudes towards sexuality conducted by UNCW Professor of Psychology Dr. Johnson, seem to verify these results on the Wilmington campus.

During the fall of 1987, the UNCW Seahawk ran a small ad for interested students to form a support group for homosexuals on campus. The ad, sponsored by Leo Teachout, the programs director for GROW (Gay Residents Of Wilmington), offered a phone number for gay students, in an attempt to educate and assist the homosexual campus, by forming a support group. After several weeks in the Seahawk, the ad was discontinued due to lack of interest, one legitimate caller and several prank-phoned calls.

This negative feedback was indicative of the campus sentiment towards the issue of homosexuality. "Our goal was and still is to form a student support group on campus, like the one they have on the Greensboro, Chapel Hill, and Charlotte campuses, so students could address gay issues. It is very important to establish a campus resource for homosexuals to use, like a support group, so that an awareness can be facilitated to them. Gay students face problems that can best be understood only by other homosexuals. They need the opportunity to talk and develop a sense of security," says Teachout. The main problem the support group suffered from was a lack of visibility. According to Teachout, "In order to create a foundation for a support group, a few gay students would have to be exposed their sexual preference, and no one was willing to take the heat."

Assistant Professor of Psychology Kate Bruce teaches a human sexuality course at UNCW, and she has seen the resentment against the homosexual students through her class.

"The topic that gets students the most worked up is not abortion; it is not sex education, or even relationships. The topic that gets students the hottest is homosexuality," says Bruce.

An incident four years ago, involving a suspected gay student being assaulted on campus, is not necessarily unique. Incidents of this nature usually go unheard.

"Gay students if harassed or assaulted have no where to turn for help. To bring the incident to the campus police is to expose one self to further possible harassment," says Jeff Becker, a soon to be freshman on campus.

"I've heard incidents of roommates forced out of assigned living quarters by students fearing a gay roommate and possible contraction of the AIDS virus. I've also heard of anti-gay sentiment on the part of certain professors on campus," says Becker.

According to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs there was case where a student tried to break his housing contract due to the belief that his roommate was a homosexual. He was denied on the basis that his request seemed only to be allowed to break his housing contract.

Psychologists generally agree that there are several initiating factors that promote the hostility against the homosexual minority in regards to the south.

The fact that UNCW is situated deep in the Bible Belt plays an influential force in the development of attitudes towards the gay community. Strong conservative resentment aimed at the homosexual population is an obvious factor.

Ambassadors Honored By Chancellor

By David Harrell
Staff Writer

Members of the UNCW Ambassadors were honored for their contributions to the university at an informal reception held on April 21 at Kenan House, Chancellor William Wagoner's residence. The Ambassadors are a service organization that give guided tours of the campus, participate in fund drives and host parties attended by trustees, alumni, and donors to the University.

As a group, the 29 Ambassadors volunteered 298 hours of service, gave 4,000 guided tours of the campus, and solicited nearly $10,000 in donations.

"I cannot point a finger at any one, all of them are outstanding. Everyone participates and everyone enjoys that participation. They are a group of doers," said Jean Joyner. Joyner is the office manager of the University Advancement Office and faculty to the Ambassadors.

Recognition was given by several members of the administration for the work done by the Ambassadors. Frank Bowen, Director of UNCW's Alumni &

Parents Program, commended the Ambassadors for being outstanding leaders and students.

Bowen also recognized graduating senior Lou DiCello for soliciting the most pledges during this year's Phone-A-Fund. DiCello alone garnered nearly $5,000 in donations nearly half of all the money pledged during this year's fund drive.

Troy Richards, an admissions counselor, thanked the Ambassadors for the tours given this year. The 39 Ambassadors gave 4,000 guided tours of the campus to prospective students and their parents during the past year.

Chancellor Wagoner praised the Ambassadors for the positive image of the University they presented while giving guided tours to prospective students and their parents. Chancellor Wagoner "blamed" the Ambassadors for the flood of admissions applications. For next year, the Admissions office has received 5,470 applications for 1,400 freshman positions and over 1,085 applications for 400 transfer positions.

"The Ambassadors represent the students in a most positive, dignified, classy way that all students would be proud of. They truly are an asset to the University," said Chancellor Wagoner.

Joyner also announced the officers for next year. They will be Jeff Leech, president; Laurie Pandich, vice-president; Kathy Riley, secretary; Karen Foye, tour coordinator and Rob Lackey, Phone-A-Fund coordinator.

Near the end of the reception, the Ambassadors thanked and bid farewell to graduating seniors Ralph Pandure, Shannon Wooten, and Lou DiCello.

"It's not like work. It was fun to meet people, host parties, and have a chance to see the professors socially," said Shannon Wooten.

Lou DiCello agreed. "Being a UNCW Ambassador is not something you're roped into. It's a fairly prestigious thing, an honor. The nice thing is working with a group of leaders, people with the same ideas, goals and self-discipline," DiCello said.

"You get to meet new people and learn new ideas. It's more fun than work," concluded Ralph Pandure.

French Trends In Literature And Film Studies

Among the hundreds of U.S. sponsored academic study programs in France, only the Critical Studies Program in Paris, in cooperation with the University of Paris III, focuses on current French theoretical trends in literature and film studies.

Established in 1973, the program originally examined film and film theory, including its history, formal structures, and relationship to the other arts. Today, through the sponsorship of a consortium of 22 U.S. universities and colleges, the program has expanded to include all visual arts as well as many social sciences while maintaining its original commitment to film.

The program's goal is twofold: to teach students to understand contemporary French theoretical trends in literature, philosophy, and film analysis; and to sharpen students' analytical skills by transcending the traditional barriers separating these disciplines through inter-disciplinary work such as literature and philosophy, literature and painting, film and textual theory.

At the Paris Center for Critical

Studies, courses are taught by eminent French professors and critics, including Raymond Bellour, Michel Marie, Roger Odin, and Jacques Aumont. Program participants also enroll as regular University of Paris students and as such, may take advantage of as many courses as they like at the Universities of Paris. Program participants have attended seminars given by Gilles Deleuze, Sarah Kofman, Julia Kristeva, and Annie Comolli.

Courses are offered both at the graduate and undergraduate levels, on a fall semester, spring semester, or academic year basis. There is a minimum 2 year college-level French requirement for fall semester and academic year students, 3 years for spring students. Applicants must also have a minimum of two courses in either film studies, literary criticism, or communications.

For a descriptive catalogue, list of consortium institutions, and an application, contact the Council on International Educational Exchange, Academic Programs Department, 205 East 42nd Street, New York, NY 10017.

Grants totaling $20,000 have been awarded to the Math and Science Education Center and the Creative Arts Department - music division at UNCW.

Dr. Charles R. Ward, director of the UNCW Math and Science Education Center, has been awarded $9,998 for a project entitled "SCIS and Family Math Training."

Sponsored by Mathematics and Science Education Network at UNC-Chapel Hill, the project uses two national curriculum projects: Science Curriculum Improvement Study (SCIS) and Family Math.

This project addresses the needs of traditionally under-represented and under-served students through a program designed to train 4-6 grade teachers. Their training will involve the use of an activity-based curriculum that emphasizes the use of concrete materials to show abstract concepts.

Phase one of the two-phase project will provide training to a core of teachers in the use of the SCIS or Family Math program. Expected to start in the fall of 1988, phase two will involve the

An award of $13,000 was also given to the Math and Science Education Center to provide 26 fellowships of $500 each. These fellowships were awarded to middle school teachers for college credit course work during spring semester 1988. The recipients also agreed to teach in a North Carolina public school for one year following the receipt of the fellowship.

Dennis Sporre, chairman of the Creative Arts Department at UNCW, received a $700 grant for the music division. Sponsored by the Presser Foundation, the award will go to rebuild a string bass used in the Bachelor of Arts music curriculum at UNCW.

Brigadier General W. C. Arnold To Visit Friday

Army Brig. Gen. Wallace C. Arnold, who commands the First Region of the Army ROTC Cadet Command, will visit UNC-Wilmington between 8 a.m. and 2:30 p.m., Friday, April 29.

He will arrive by helicopter on the UNCW athletic field at approximately 8 a.m. and will meet with ROTC cadets and leaders, university officials, and some community representatives.

Maj. John Gillette of UNCW's ROTC battalion explained that the purpose of the visit is for Arnold to become acquainted with UNC-Wilmington. "He will tour the campus, have a command briefing, review the ROTC program at UNCW, and get to know university deans and administrators," Gillette said. In the ROTC program at UNCW, there are 120 cadets currently enrolled in the program which is supervised by five full-time officers, three enlisted personnel, and one civilian. The purpose of the ROTC program is to commission Army officers as part of their college education. The U.S. Army First Region ROTC Cadet Command is headquartered at Fort Bragg. Covering most of the East Coast, the First Army Region is the largest producer of officers of any of the country's four ROTC regions.

As commander of this region, Arnold is responsible for commissioning more officers each year than anyone else. Born in Washington, D.C., July 27, 1938, Arnold joined the army in May, 1961. He was assigned to the ROTC command at Fort Bragg June 15, 1987. This will be his first visit to UNC-Wilmington.

Arnold was educated at Hampton Institute where he received the bachelor's degree in industrial education. He earned the master's degree in personnel management and administration from George Washington University.

Prior to his current assignment, he was director for personnel and administration, headquarters United States European Command (USEUCOM) and commander of the Vainghen Military Community, United States Army W. Europe.

UPB Appoints Reilly To WLOZ Station Manager For Coming Year

By Amy Odum
Staff Writer

Campus radio station WLOZ will have an older and perhaps wiser face around the station beginning May 1st. A committee made up of University Program Board members notified Stephen Reilly, a non-traditional UNCW junior, of his acceptance on Tuesday, April 12.

His past experience in radio, and business management skills make him more than qualified for the position," said UPB committee member Cindy Zeizer.

Reilly was active with his college radio station at Fordham University in New York about 20 years ago and admits that a lot has changed in the mass media since then.

"I'm going to do a lot of listening and relearning to start off with, but ultimately I want to provide the necessary management and organizational guidance in order to make WLOZ a known asset to UNCW and the Wilmington community," said Reilly.

Currently, WLOZ can be heard on 90.9 frequency, but only if your stereo is hooked up to vision cable. Although this limits its listenership and support, the station still survives.

"Last year we operated within our $10,000 budget, but it only goes so far," said program director Frank Simpson. "Well over half of the budget is eaten up in the cost of transferring our broadcast signal from the studio to vision cable and then to the listener. It adds up to about $700 per month and that doesn't leave much for the high costs of just keeping our equipment in broadcast condition."

Reilly is already working on a budget for the upcoming year and will have to deal with the SGA and the Board of Trustees as he wants to be allocated more money for the station.

"I would like to see WLOZ with an FM frequency, but the station needs to have a solid business and organizational base first. And that's what I intend to do," said Reilly.

The cost of going "FM" is approximately $32,000 total, but Reilly believes that it would be worth the benefits and FM station would bring for the University and the student life on campus. When WLOZ had an FM frequency some years ago it took 16% of the listening market, but an apparent conflict of business interest with the Board of Trustees ended all that, according to program director Frank Simpson.

"I think that he (Reilly) will be able to improve our standing with the SGA and the Board of Trustees because he is older with experience and will command more respect in what he tries to do for the station," said Simpson.

Some of Reilly's hopes for the station besides going "FM" include developing a functioning news department, and making WLOZ a place where students can get professional experience for their future careers. But he is quick to point out that WLOZ will continue to be an alternative listening station with the progressive music format staying the same.

"I'm anxious to get things going and will be beginning the first day of May with a meeting of interested persons who want to get involved," said Reilly.

But involvement is not the only key for the success of WLOZ. Reilly's challenge will be to gain the necessary financial support from the SGA and the Board of Trustees in order to make his plans work.

Health And Wellness Advisory Committee Formed

A new Student Health and Wellness Center Advisory Committee has been formed to help promote Center services and to serve as a mechanism for input from the University community. The Committee consists of student members, Ms. Amy Byrne, Ms. Lynn Peterson, and Mr. Andrew Garcia, Vice-Chairperson; faculty members, Ms. Annabell Downs (School of Nursing), Dr. David Culkin (HPER), and Dr. Carol Pilgrim, Chairperson (Psychology); Board of Trustees member, Dr. Eugene Wright, Jr. and SHWC Director, Ms. Catherine Vangellow. All committee members are available to hear comments and concerns or to on a fall semester, spring semester, or academic year basis. There is a minimum 2 year college-level French requirement for fall semester and academic year students, 3 years for spring students. Applicants must also have a minimum of two courses in either film studies, literary criticism, or communications.

Fraternity War Escalates

CPS — A running war between 2 fraternities has convinced Indiana University to cancel all dorm social events for the rest of the school year.

IU Dean of Students Michael Gordon last week said scuffles and rumors of planned future fights between members of Kappa Alpha Psi and Omega Psi Phi at some scheduled mixers and dances led him to distribute a memo to dorm advisers saying that "all activities are to be cancelled in order to preserve the safety of others."

Gordon earlier had banned all dorm activities the weekend of March 9 in the wake of a March 6 brawl, and amid rumors that "a truckload" of fraternity brothers from Chicago would soon come to the Bloomington campus to

Neither Indiana chapter has a house, and both hold their functions in the dorms. Rumors that alumni and related members of the 2 chapters will have a "confrontation" at the Little 500 bicycle race on campus in said.

Another fraternity "war" broke out at the State University of New York at Plattsburgh in late February, when about 20 students from Pi Alpha Nu and Alpha Chi Rho battled each other in a violent disagreement.

New SGA Administration Brings Change

By Alise Ellis
& Carla Garrison
Staff Writers

The 1988/89 school year will mark the start of a new Student Government Association with promises of a greater distribution of power and innovative policies.

Karla Alston and Robert Smith were elected to the positions of President and Vice President for the next term.

"We have been allies since last spring," said Smith. Alston agreed, stating that her relationship with Smith is perfect because they are both willing to compromise.

"I feel the position of President should be decreased compared to last year's administration," said Smith. Alston and Smith will be working on amendments to the constitution to better clarify the role of President, as well as other positions, such as the Treasurer.

"We would like to see the Treasurer be more in tune with the accounts and budgets, plus meet with me weekly, and give a detailed report to the senate every Monday," stated Alston.

Both are pleased with the administration's role in the SGA and the amount of checks and balances found in the executive and legislative branches.

Smith feels the SGA should continue as a body which controls the use of student activity fees, with the administration serving as a knowledgeable resource.

"Past presidents have been able to abuse this position because the senators do not realize their power," said Alston.

The president has veto power, yet the legislative branch has the power to override that decision by a two-thirds vote, they also have the ability to freeze the executive budget. These two functions are part of the checks and balances within the senate which are rarely utilized.

According to Smith, the clarification of the Constitution would enable the branches within the SGA to better understand their actual power.

Next year the SGA intends to focus on problems within their grasp of power in order to become a more representative body.

"We want to address issues that we can solve, such as: food service; managerial attitudes; and litter on campus," said Alston and Smith.

The new SGA has hopes for a productive and challenging year as representing each and every member of the UNCW student body.

Inventory Taken By Health and Wellness

the nine dimensions surveyed and explanations on how to interpret the evaluation sheet.

Deborah Haywood commented that she had seen an increase in the awareness of general good health among students this year and that the survey reinforced this. "Though this survey was successful in getting information, the board would like to explore ways to reach more students and insure the validity of result statistics as well," said Haywood.

Earlier in this semester the Health Promotion Advisory Board in cooperation with the Health, Physical, Education, and Recreation departments, designed an inventory which would evaluate the wellness behaviors and attitudes of students. The sample groups selected for this inventory were nine sections of Freshman PE 101.

The reasons for conducting this informal survey were: 1) To gather information on students health maintenance knowledge, 2) Give the students surveyed a chance to compare their lifestyles to those of peers through the results, 3) A means of providing students with information about available resources through the LivWELL center. Each of the 220 students surveyed will receive a results sheet, which will contain a breakdown of dimensions (exercise, nutrition, drug use etc.), an average score of others tested, a 70% range, and their own scores.

"In the future we would like to give students a more individualized compilation of results which could focus on areas the individual needs to improve on," said Deborah Haywood, Chair of the Health Advisory Board.

These students will also receive a newly printed pamphlet outlining what LivWELL is all about and various resources available to all students through this center. (This new pamphlet will be distributed to all incoming freshmen next year as well.) They will also be given a description of

Some of the results of this survey were quite interesting in terms of how students perceive themselves, questions they avoided answering, and probable accuracy that questions were answered with. A few of the results were as follows: 63% of respondents participate in some form of aerobic exercise on a frequent basis while only 16% rarely or never participate. One-quarter of respondents rarely or never obey the speed limit. Nearly 70% always or frequently avoid letting their friends drive after drinking, 71% indicate never using illegal drugs, 13% rarely use drugs, 11% sometimes use drugs, and 5% use them frequently. All respondents feel like that they approach problems rationally at least some of the time.

Most students avoided questions on their sexuality.

During the up coming year the LivWELL Center will continue to initiate programs which aid and inform the student body. The center is designed to help students be aware of their overall health. For more information on the LivWELL Centers functions call: 395-3683.

"North Carolina still has the crimes against nature statue, which is an unpractical law, yet is extremely repressive as far as ideology goes. It reflects the sentiment of the area. Homosexuality is still considered a sin," protests Becker.

Another factor is the belief that the American society tends to teach that to be masculine, is to be negative towards the homosexual. This belief tends to penetrate much of the attitudes towards gay men by heterosexuals.

A specific, and serious problem that threatens the UNCW campus in regards to the gay population is the administrative policy itself. This policy has no provisions to protect students in regards to their sexual orientation. On this basis alone, the gay students are left defenseless to harassment, even violence.

"I've heard nothing about any acts of violence towards homosexuals on campus, though if such a case should arise of this nature, it would be treated just like any other act of violence," says Munroe.

The final problem that plagues the Wilmington campus is the apparent lack of adequate education towards the gay community.

"The concentration of fear generated stems from a need to address many of the gay topics that scare the heterosexual students. There are too many misconceptions floating around in regard to homosexuality and the threat of AIDS," admits Kate Bruce.

The establishment of a gay support group on campus serves an obvious and necessary function.

With these goals in mind, the administration can safely say that they are striving for the equal opportunity for a higher education.

The obvious problem of homosexuality on campus is a complex one, that deserves attention. "The UNCW goal of a commitment to equality, will not be reached until all the campus minorities are accepted and recognized. The solution has to start at the administration level. The Wilmington campus must promote an active interaction between heterosexual and homosexual students alike. Open education involving the exposure of gay topics is essential to alleviate many of the negative attitudes that are present on the campus.

Supreme Court Decision Helping To Muzzle Student Papers

(CPS) — Censorship controversies have arisen at 4 different campuses in recent weeks, leading some observers to worry. A January U.S. Supreme Court decision has moved some administrators to try to gain control over student newspapers.

During the last month, officials at Arizona's Pima Community College, at Western Kentucky University, at Texas's San Jacinto College and at Chapman College in California have tried to alter and even halt student papers and productions.

"It's hard to pinpoint," said Mark Goodman of the Student Press Law Center. "But there is a change in thinking." There is "more direct censorship" on campuses.

"They're stonewalling us," said Barbara Stafford, editor of the Aztec Press at Pima Community College, of her school's top officials' efforts to publish more "positive stories."

In explaining his April 11 decision to stop a campus literary magazine from publishing an article he didn't like, San Jacinto College Chancellor Tom Sewell simply asserted, "I'm the publisher."

The assertion echoes the Supreme Court's January ruling that school newspapers run as part of journalism labs are not protected by the First Amendment.

School officials, the justices said in what has come to be known as the "Hazelwood decision," were "entitled to regulate the content of" for-credit newspapers just as they could regulate what happened in any other classroom activity.

Though the court specifically said its decision applied only to high school — not college — papers, not all campus officials have recognized the limit.

"We'll hear a lot of horror tales of censorship in the next few years," predicted Dr. Louis Ingelhart, author of several student press guides and a journalism professor emeritus at Ball State University in Indiana.

Just weeks after the ruling, for example, Edward Wagner — chairman of Pima's Board of Governors — suggested campus officials edit the Aztec Press more closely to prevent "shoddy reporting."

"In view of the recent Supreme Court decision, we as the board have the right to edit or not to edit," Wagner said during a board meeting.

"They want more fluff for the college," editor Stafford says. "They want more positive news stories about the college, and less investigative stuff."

Although Wagner has dropped his proposal that school administrators exercise greater authority, Stafford says he and other school officials, refuse to grant interviews to Aztec Press staffers. "They're stonewalling us."

In March, Western Kentucky University President Kern Alexander proposed replacing the students who edit WKU's campus newspaper and yearbook with faculty members, and then, perhaps to fit the Supreme Court's definition of a "lab newspaper," giving student reporters academic credit instead of the small stipend they're now paid.

Some critics, said WKU Western Heights advisor Bob Adams, accused Alexander of trying to muzzle the paper's criticism of him by gaining control over its content.

Adams reported outcry from journalism alumni has forced Alexander to retreat from his initial proposal, and WKU spokeswoman Sheila Conway now denies Alexander ever made it.

But Adams, who attended the March 15 meeting where Alexander first introduced the proposal, said "some of the things he proposed sound like some of the things the Supreme Court said."

Goodman of the Student Press Law Center thinks that "especially at 2-year colleges, administrators see Hazelwood as applying to their context. They want to use it as justification for censorship."

"Community colleges are more susceptible to those kind of pressures," added Mary Hines, a professor at New Jersey's County College of Morris and a Community College Journalism Association official.

"Many of the administrators

worked in high schools before, and they bring a high school mentality with them. They don't see students as adults. Also, in some states, such as California, the local school board runs the community college. They feel they have the same control at the college that they do at the high school."

Ingelhart suspects some kinds of college officials try to muzzle campus papers for other reasons. "The Supreme Court said the ruling applied only the high schools, but that doesn't change anything for people with repressive personalities."

At Chapman College in California, administrators in late March refused to allow a student play that included frontal nudity to be performed on campus. Nudity, they said, was inappropriate for the school, which is affiliated with the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ).

Yet Hazelwood, some say, may have provided a boon to college journalism.

Tom Rolnicki, executive director of the Associated College Press, said the decision has created "a greater concern for quality reporting. Students don't want to give administrators a reason to come after them."

"Students have become more responsible," Hines concurred. "The only way to beat this is to be extremely fair, accurate, and most of all, PRINT IT."

Ingelhart, while conceding the pace of censorship cases seems to have picked up, noted the overwhelming majority of campus administrations haven't tried to censor student publications since the decision.

"Thousands of school boards and presidents believe in the free press. They're proud of it, and they're ignoring the Supreme Court ruling. It hasn't been as devastating as it sounds. It's just difficult when there're these little tyrants with power at some of these schools."

Ingelhart says it's comforting, too, that students have not shied away from tackling controversial stories. "There're a lot of tough kids out there. They won't acquiesce."

"Students have become more

Health And Wellness Center Warns Of Summertime Skin Problems

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

As one last note for the year, the Health and Wellness Center would like to offer some Skin Care Tips for the Summer. Sunburn prevention for the beach lover and Poison Ivy, Poison Oak, and tick bite information for campers and those working outdoors.

"Prevention and early detection are key factors in reducing chances of many skin problems encountered during the summer months," commented Katie Gilbert, family practitioner at the Wellness Center.

Sunburn is a major discomfort rarely thought about until it happens. Six different skin types have been identified and each type requires an amount of protection under certain circumstances. Type 1 always burns, and has very fair skin and light hair while Type 6 never burns and has a very heavy pigment. The other types are merely various degrees between the 1 and 6 types.

A sunscreen should be chosen based on skin type, length of time in the sun, and the intensity of the sun's rays in the particular geographic area.

Common sense should be used when out in the sun because its effects can be painful and cause long term damage to the skin. If sunburn does occur the first steps are to take 2 aspirin and cool showers.

Reactions to poison ivy and poison oak result in rashes caused by an allergy to these plants. The juice from these plants, which causes the rash, can reach the skin from direct touch, clothing, petting an animal carrying the juice, or from the air while burning the plants.

The effects of these plants are not immediate, they go through a latent period which can last from several hours to 10 days. To insure prevention, any exposed skin must be cleansed within 15 minutes. If this is not possible, shower or wash areas that might have been infected as soon as possible and thoroughly cleanse all clothes after wearing them.

If accidentally infected, the rashes will eventually clear up by themselves, but they can be painful and there is treatment. Cortisones can be taken by mouth for serious cases and ointments can be applied directly to the skin to relieve itching.

Rocky Mountain spotted fever is rare, yet knowledge of its signs can not hurt. The first signs of spotted fever are moderate to high fever for 2 to 3 weeks, muscle pain, and chills. Most of the symptoms are similar to those of the common flu. But the most distinctive symptom is a rash on the extremities about the 3rd day. Immediate treatment is necessary when these signs arise for the disease can cause death.

The best way to prevent spotted fever is a complete body check immediately after working in wooded areas and repeat the procedure 3 hours later. If a tick is found, remove it carefully making sure to get the entire tick body.

The summer is a great time to be outdoors, so make it enjoyable by avoiding unnecessary skin discomforts through good prevention.

Gay And Lesbian Greek Charters Granted At U.C.L.A.

CPS — They don't have houses or handshakes or slogans or songs or even an intramural team yet, but 2 new Greek houses at the University of California at Los Angeles already have become among the best-known in the country.

The reason is that Delta Lambda Phi, granted its charter on April 4, is only the second homosexual fraternity house in the nation.

Three weeks earlier, UCLA officially recognized Lambda Delta Lambda, which thus become the first lesbian sorority.

There may be more chapters at other campuses soon.

Gays at Temple University and the University of Minnesota expect to secure official charters by the end of the spring, and a group drawing students from Georgetown, American and George Washington universities in Washington, D.C., has been formed already.

"It's something that was designed to work at large campuses in which there is a thoroughly liberal student body," explained Vernon Strickland, chairman of Lambda Delta Phi's board in Washington.

So far, UCLA's newest Greeks are lavish in their enthusiasm.

"To create this bonding experience," said Lambda Delta Lambda member Allison Adler, a 20-year-old junior, "is really exciting. When I graduate, I'll be a rah-rah alumna. I'll have a real connection to the school that I never felt before."

Chris Williamson feels the same way. He lectures at UCLA in urban and regional planning. At 31, he's already survived the initial personal struggle in recognizing his homosexuality. A gay fraternity, he claims, is the ideal support system for today's campus homosexuals.

"That's why this frat can be so helpful," Williamson said. "When you're coming out and admitting your sexuality, you're challenging everything you learned your whole life."

"There are long-range questions that we all need to talk about such as how we can deal with the fact that we'll never be married. These are some real hard issues gay guys have to constantly deal with."

The active gay groups on scores of campuses, Williamson added, often are political and can alienate some students.

"Although GAYLA (UCLA's student Gay and Lesbian Association) helps, students won't join it (it) because they don't want to go to rallies and stuff like that, so a vacuum develops."

Like other Greek groups, Delta Lambda Phi and Lambda Delta Lambda mix volunteer work with social events. DLP works with AIDS groups; Lambda Delta Lambda volunteers assist women's organizations in Los Angeles.

Both groups — along with their counterparts at Temple and Minnesota — apparently met little resistance from administrators.

"Authorities," Strickland said, "have been very understanding, but the larger question is whether other fraternities will cooperate and recognize us."

"I think they will, but it will take time."

Williamson added that he knows gay UCLA students who belong to heterosexual fraternities, but are kept so busy playing the expected "games" that they may not be available to help dissipate their brothers' antipathy to gays.

"They might be active and live in a house, but they keep their distance," he said.

"There's always the pressure of having a date. Some have them just to show they can."

That, Williamson noted, is why gay and lesbian houses are a good idea.

He asserted Delta Lambda Phi will allow members to be themselves and have a sense of belonging. He downplays the sexual aspect, claiming more students are friends than lovers.

"The sex part isn't such a taboo anymore," he said. "It (the fraternity) is for belonging. Some guys, for example, join things like theater arts so they can belong to something with other guys, not because they want to go into theater. Therefore, they make a big mistake."

"There's no question we have a definite behavior pattern around ourselves that's different from when we're around straight guys. We'll be campy and say things we could never say around others. It's the gay subculture."

It's the same thing for Delta Lambda Lambda. The sorority was organized by a half dozen lesbian students who took a gay literature class together last year. Soon, friends brought more friends and a group was formed.

Adler says there was never an intention to establish a precedent.

"We weren't trying to make a political statement, although it does wind up being that," Adler said. "We're just trying to hang out together and have fun, and yet get away from the strictly social alcoholic scene. What better sisterhood is there than a group of lesbians?"

She added that, as expected, there has been some ridicule from others.

"We'll hear people yelling 'dyke' and things like that, but we take it with a grain of salt," she said. "Some have assumed we're a group of freaks, that homosexuality is such a deviant behavior. But if they come see us, we prove we're not freaks."

Currently, both are trying to recruit more members. LDL has about 35 pledges, while DLP has 11 official members.

Retrospect Brings Respect

This year at UNCW has been interesting to say the least. There has been scandal, mudslinging, controversy, growth, pain, loss and the coming graduation of UNCW's largest senior class to date.

The Seahawk, funny the name rings a bell, was in the midst of a massive financial scandal that resulted in the resignation of Jefferson Weaver, former Editor-in-Chief. The scandal evolved, as if the student body didn't know even if you didn't read the paper, around the fact that $43,000 was spent in one semester under the former editor-in-chief's term. This is a better appreciated when one considers that only $12,000 was allocated to the Seahawk by the SGA for the entire year!

In the midst of this scandal stood the mudslinging contest held between Weaver and former SGA President Lee King. One using the power of the president and the other the power of the press. Another well known fact! But that is in the past and there it shall stay.

Controversy is always around, that's the great thing about college, nobody agrees on anything. People have wanted to change the parking situation for years, but it stays the same and everyone seems to get by. ARA has had its share of complaints, but I don't see to many people listening and the complaints against having to purchase a meal plan are soon to be put to rest as Auxiliary Services is currently looking for ways to keep the students from having to pay for a meal plan.

Controversy over the housing of UNCW's students has been another bone for people to chew on and in due fairness the office of residence life is in the process of building space for 400 more students to live on campus. This is a small amount compared to the expected growth of the school, but no step forward can be so small at least something is being done. Sometimes controversy can be good!

One problem that is sad to admit to is that student apathy still ranks strongly on this campus. I really don't think that most students know what the word 'apathy' even means, I also don't think that those who don't know would bother to ever find out.

To see growth on this campus one need only drive through it. The new Cameron Hall is a vivid show of the administrations efforts to influence the growth of the business school. The new Gazebo and apartments also show the amount of growth that the campus is expected to grow in the near future.

One need not just look for growth on the outside for growth is constantly happening on the inside as well. The Panhellenic Council has two new additions to its ranks one a sorority, Gamma Delta Chi, and the other a fraternity, Tau Nu Pi. There is even a movement to form another sorority, but I don't know where they stand right now.

The Greeks are continuing to grow and expand their importance at this University, and doing a commendable job.

UNCW's basketball team gave us an action packed season and their loss in the semi-finals of the CAA tournament were painful for the team as well as the student populace. The good news is that they will return and will surely give us another action packed season as Lefty Driesel joins the CAA at James Madison and will, no doubt, give us a good run for the money.

Mortality is something which we all have to face at one time or another, but not something that we are normally faced with at this age. But the death of Lisa Primovic made us face that mortality as UNCW lost a person of great potential. Her death was the Universities loss and will not be forgotten.

At the close of the year the students can the graduation of the Universities largest senior class to date. They are now faced with the problems of the real world and will retain the memories of this University for decades to come.

I, on the other hand, am facing that year which is coming to a close for those graduates, whom I wish the best of luck to. I am still able to look forward to another year of life here at UNCW. The new controversies, the new joys and pains, the fun and the sun. It's a great place to be, after all where else in this state can you go to class, take a test, pass it with flying colors, go to the beach, forget about your troubles and then return to school only to fail the next test miserably all in the same day.

Why Have A Senate Finance Committee If They Aren't Going To Be Heeded

The SGA appointed a finance committee in the spring of this year to review the budget proposals of clubs and organizations that need SGA funding to forward their purpose in the coming year. This committee is comprised of ten members who are elected by the SGA to determine how much money that each club or organization on campus should be allocated from the SGA after reviewing each budget individually. Once those budgets have been reviewed, the committee's allocation decisions are proposed to the SGA to be approved or declined by vote.

This year the committee went into extreme depth to determine how the SGA's money should be allocated, individual budgets were trimmed and some programs within organizations were cut altogether (UPB's Coffeehouse Committee). The committee spent over four hours alone on the Seahawk budget. In short, they spent an immense amount of time to understand how the money was to be allocated in fairness to each organization.

The actions of the senate at their last meeting on Monday night, however, seemed to indicate that no finance committee even existed. First, it was voted by the senate to review each proposal one at a time for a total of twenty-one individual budgets instead of voting on the committee's decisions as a unified entity.

Time was also ill used by the senate as individual members of the senate, who were not on the finance committee, expressed their own un-educated estimates as to how much money a certain club or organization should get. It was even suggested by some members of the senate that the Seahawk Express's, the campus shuttle service, funding be cut entirely despite the fact that its use has increased on campus by over 100%.

The Seahawk budget again was a point of concern as the budget that the committee had approved for it seemed to stupefy most members of the senate. Most of those on the floor had no idea where the money was going to be spent or why the committee would approve such an apparently outrageous amount for one organization.

There were even senators arguing that the Seahawk should not be given the money because no other clubs were allocated that kind of money. Demeaning as it may sound the Seahawk is not a club, it's an organization.

The finance committee spent four hours determining how much money to allocate the Seahawk and the senate finally approved it after three additional hours of debate on the senate floor. A total of seven hours alone was dedicated to the approval of one budget, the sad part is that the other clubs and organizations are the ones who suffered for they had to wait until the Seahawk budget was done before their budget could be approved.

In short, it seems ridiculous to form and appoint members to a finance committee that is going to spend a lot of time reviewing budgets for clubs and organizations if the senate is going to do the same when the committee makes its report. There is no sense in wasting time reviewing decisions that have already been made by competent people unless there is some educated reason for a change in their rulings. In the three hours of debate over the Seahawk budget, tempers flared, opinions were expressed, people left, got tired and ended up being very personal and unprofessional, yet there was no change in the original proposal.

Columnists Puts Year In Perspective For Readers

I have been writing this column for two full semesters. I feel that it is a success because people either love it or hate it. The best part is that those few that don't like it, still read it.

My theory is that my column is for some people, like a sore in the mouth. You know when you have one and it hurts to touch your tongue against it, but what do you do? Yeah, you constantly touch it because you can't help yourself. They have to read the column despite the fact it offends them.

I have pissed off or pissed on many people and ideas. I have been trying to provoke a response, and it didn't work until this semester. My mistake last semester was to put down geeks who enjoy the radio stations in this town. I now realize that if anyone responded they would have admitted that they were a geek.

I was surprised when a dweeb wrote to the editor and attacked my character (as if I care) because I poked fun at mailmen. He cried about me insulting a female postal worker on campus. I never said anything about mailwomen. Some students have no sense of humor.

A sheltered girl wrote and demanded an apology from me to the entire student body and called for my dismissal. She was sickened by my mention of tampons and feminine sprays. I sure had a lot of nerve to mention those unmentionables. She must never watch television.

I was mildly surprised that no college Republicans complained about my "dream" column. In fact, one of them told me that he loved it. He corrected me on the polyester part. I guess they don't wear polyester. Sorry guys.

Thankfully, I started receiving letters of praise and encouragement from students and professors. I really needed and appreciated them.

I was able to bring my column and gripes to live television, thanks to Randy Harrington, "the man, the legend". He invited me to be on "Live At Five". I had a blast. Some tight wad at the top decided that Jethro Bodene was more important than a local show, and proof "Live At Five" is history. It didn't mean anything that members of the community got to have their say on television and local events were brought to our attention. Many students were able to receive valuable internships also, but NO, the Beverly Hills bitches are cheaper!

Some of my gripes have actually been alleviated. My biggest bitch was that the radio stations sucked in this town. WHSL called the office and complained about what I wrote. They claimed that they don't call themselves a rock station. Boy do I feel like a fool. For some reason, the "WHSL Rocks" bumper stickers gave me that impression. Now that SURF 107 moved to town, I quit bitching. I know that I probably didn't have anything to do with it, but in my mind, I'm taking full credit.

I tore apart the Riverfest. I complained about having to drink beer only in the beer tent, where there was nothing to do. The Azalea Festival was always like that too, but this year they put bands in the tent. What a novel idea. It only took them forty-one years to think of it.

Can you believe that this semester my column is being graded? I'm in a journalism workshop, and have to hand it in each week. How can anybody grade this? It would be like grading an armpit nose contest; it's a matter of opinion.

I try to be totally off the wall at times. I want more than a humorous column; I want the reader to laugh out loud at least once while they read it. That is why I sometimes get outrageous and irrelevant. Hey, I'll take the cheap laugh anytime. (What is an expensive laugh?) I have always had a crush on Betty Rubble of "The Flintstones". I'm a sucker for her big dark eyes and petite body. I've always wanted to see her naked. If I ever have my own magazine, I will have a centerfold of Betty in her glory.

Now that was off the wall, irrelevant, but truthful. It ought to bring my grade down too, but I don't care -- it's the end of the semester.

A few people have asked me if I will write this column in the fall. Do TV evangelists have money and women? I even plan to have more than a column. I plan on being the features editor. I will have half of the paper! Ha ha ha ha.

Tell all the jerks that never even pick up a Seahawk to get their umm act together. I can't imagine not even looking at the paper. It doesn't cost anything, and hey, it's their school paper. I'd read it even if I wasn't in it.

I want to wish all of you seniors a successful career. I don't want to see you working at Wendy's. I'll see the rest of you next fall. Good luck on "the dreaded finals".

One last thing: If you're interested in writing for the paper, or to the paper give us a visit at the office. (Room 205, in the Union).

Extermination Of Six Million Should Never Be Forgotten

Oh, her tears; the eloquence of her tears! We were standing in the University Union courtyard just after noon on April the 14th having a small service to commemorate the Holocaust. There were readings and prayers, all focused on the theme of how important it is not to forget the millions who were exterminated by Nazi Germany.

When one person's time to speak came, she simply began to weep and couldn't read the selection before her. In that moment, for me, my historical recollections were broken open and I was carried into the heart of my memories of the agony of the 6 million. I spoke the words I was given to say but walked away from there, choked up, feeling that the singularly most appropriate way to remember that incredibly evil tragedy is to shed tears.

My concern is that for most of you who may read this column, your historical perspective is based upon learning about events of our past and that there is little or no memories to generate such feelings as those of us who have lived, however young, in the world when those events were actually taking place.

It is possible, if historical study is supported by the use of films or contact with survivors who still live in the Jewish community or even their children, to develop feelings of revulsion, horror and sorrow along with wonder at the courage displayed by the Jewish community and those non-Jewish people who risked and sometimes gave their lives to save Jewish lives. For most of you, the dominate use of the word Holocaust related to the possibility of a nuclear Holocaust. We may have lived with the idea of a nuclear Holocaust so long that it's possibility seems more and more remote except in our deep inner consciousness where the fear of such an event is reflected in our lack of security about our future. But the Nazi Holocaust is a fact of history. And it needs to be less a fact and more of an experience in our lives lest we ever lose sight of the horror of which humankind is capable. The Nazis systematically exterminated over 6 million human lives. Millions of others were complicit in this act by their silence and submission. But, for these facts to have power they must somehow come to be lodged in our guts not our minds. Do whatever you can to learn enough about the Holocaust so that you can feel deeply about it. We must not forget or lose touch with that reality. Such evil has its roots in the human psyche and lurks there still. To know deeply the horrors of which we are capable is to prepare ourselves to be on guard towards the attitudes, both public and private, that we develop towards others in the human community from whom we feel different or who, for whatever reasons, we choose to label as enemies.

I hope there will be a time that you think about the Holocaust and can cry.

Supreme Court Decision Helping To Muzzle Student Papers

(CPS) — Censorship controversies have arisen at 4 different campuses in recent weeks, leading some observers to worry. A January U.S. Supreme Court decision has moved some administrators to try to gain control over student newspapers.

During the last month, officials at Arizona's Pima Community College, at Western Kentucky University, at Texas's San Jacinto College and at Chapman College in California have tried to alter and even halt student papers and productions.

"It's hard to pinpoint," said Mark Goodman of the Student Press Law Center. "But there is a change in thinking." There is "more direct censorship" on campuses.

"They're stonewalling us," said Barbara Stafford, editor of the Aztec Press at Pima Community College, of her school's top officials' efforts to publish more "positive stories."

In explaining his April 11 decision to stop a campus literary magazine from publishing an article he didn't like, San Jacinto College Chancellor Tom Sewell simply asserted, "I'm the publisher."

The assertion echoes the Supreme Court's January ruling that school newspapers run as part of journalism labs are not protected by the First Amendment.

School officials, the justices said in what has come to be known as the "Hazelwood decision," were "entitled to regulate the content of" for-credit newspapers just as they could regulate what happened in any other classroom activity.

Though the court specifically said its decision applied only to high school — not college — papers, not all campus officials have recognized the limit.

"We'll hear a lot of horror tales of censorship in the next few years," predicted Dr. Louis Ingelhart, author of several student press guides and journalism professor emeritus at Ball State University in Indiana.

Just weeks after the ruling, for example, Edward Wagner — chairman of Pima's Board of Governors — suggested campus officials edit the Aztec Press more closely to prevent "shoddy reporting."

"In view of the recent Supreme Court decision, we as the board have the right to edit or not to edit," Wagner said during a board meeting.

"They want more fluff for the college," editor Stafford says. "They want more positive news stories about the college, and less investigative stuff."

Although Wagner has dropped his proposal that school administrators exercise greater authority, Stafford says he and other school officials, refuse to grant interviews to Aztec Press staffers. "They're stonewalling us."

In March, Western Kentucky University President Kern Alexander proposed replacing the students who edit WKU's campus newspaper and yearbook with faculty members, and then, perhaps to fit the Supreme Court's definition of a "lab newspaper," giving student reporters academic credit instead of the small stipend they're now paid.

Some critics, said WKU Western Heights advisor Bob Adams, accused Alexander of trying to muzzle the paper's criticism of him by gaining control over its content.

Adams reported outcry from journalism alumni has forced Alexander to retreat from his initial proposal, and WKU spokeswoman Sheila Conway now denies Alexander ever made it.

But Adams, who attended the March 15 meeting where Alexander first introduced the proposal, said "some of the things he proposed sound like some of the things the Supreme Court said."

Goodman of the Student Press Law Center thinks that "especially at 2-year colleges, administrators see Hazelwood as applying to their context. They want to use it as justification for censorship."

"Community colleges are more susceptible to those kind of pressures," added Mary Hires, a professor at New Jersey's County College of Morris and a Community College Journalism Association official.

"Many of the administrators

worked in high schools before, and they bring a high school mentality with them. They don't see students as adults. Also, in some states, such as California, the local school board runs the community college. They feel they have the same control at the college that they do at the high school."

Ingelhart suspects some kinds of college officials try to muzzle campus papers for other reasons.

"The Supreme Court said the ruling applied only the high schools, but that doesn't change anything for people with repressive personalities."

At Chapman College in California, administrators in late March refused to allow a student play that included frontal nudity to be performed on campus. Nudity, they said, was inappropriate for the school, which is affiliated with the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ).

Yet Hazelwood, some say, may have provided a boon to college journalism.

Tom Rolnicki, executive director of the Associated College Press, said the decision has created "a greater concern for quality reporting. Students don't want to give administrators a reason to come after them."

"Students have become more responsible," Hires concurred. "The only way to beat this is to be extremely fair, accurate, and most of all, PRINT IT."

Ingelhart, while conceding the pace of censorship cases seems to have picked up, noted the overwhelming majority of campus administrations haven't tried to censor student publications since the decision.

"Thousands of school boards and presidents believe in the free press. They're proud of it, and they're ignoring the Supreme Court ruling. It hasn't been as devastating as it sounds. It's just difficult when there're these little tyrants with power at some of these schools."

Ingelhart says it's comforting, too, that students have not shied away from tackling controversial stories. "There're a lot of tough kids out there. They won't acquiesce."

Health And Wellness Center Warns Of Summertime Skin Problems

By Carla Garrison
Staff Writer

As one last note for the year, the Health and Wellness Center would like to offer some Skin Care Tips for the Summer. Sunburn prevention for the beach lover and Poison Ivy, Poison Oak, and tick bite information for campers and those working outdoors.

"Prevention and early detection are key factors in reducing chances of many skin problems encountered during the summer months," commented Katie Gilbert, family practitioner at the Wellness Center.

Sunburn is a major discomfort rarely thought about until it happens. Six different skin types have been identified and each type requires an amount of protection under certain circumstances. Type 1 always burns, and has very fair skin and light hair while Type 6 never burns and has a very heavy pigment. The other types are merely various degrees between the 1 and 6 types.

A sunscreen should be chosen based on skin type, length of time in the sun, and the intensity of the sun's rays in the particular geographic area.

Common sense should be used when out in the sun because its effects can be painful and cause long term damage to the skin. If sunburn does occur the first steps are to take 2 aspirin and cool showers.

Reactions to poison ivy and poison oak result in rashes caused by an allergy to these plants. The juice from these plants, which causes the rash, can reach the skin from direct touch, clothing, petting an animal carrying the juice, or from the air while burning the plants.

The effects of these plants are not immediate, they go through a latent period which can last from several hours to 10 days. To insure prevention, any exposed skin must be cleaned within 15 minutes. If this is not possible, shower or wash areas that might have been infected as soon as possible and thoroughly cleanse all clothes after wearing them.

If accidentally infected, the rashes will eventually clear up by themselves, but they can be painful and there is treatment. Cortisones can be taken by mouth for serious cases and ointments can be applied directly to the skin to relieve itching.

Rocky Mountain spotted fever is rare, yet knowledge of its signs can not hurt. The first signs of spotted fever are moderate to high fever for 2 to 3 weeks, muscle pain, and chills. Most of the symptoms are similar to those of the common flu. But the most distinctive symptom is a rash on the extremities about the 3rd day. Immediate treatment is necessary when these signs arise for the disease can cause death.

The more medical science finds out about curing cancer, the more we people think of better ways to get it.

The best way to prevent spotted fever is a complete body check immediately after working in wooded areas and repeat the procedure 3 hours later. If a tick is found, remove it carefully making sure to get the entire tick body.

The summer is a great time to be outdoors, so make it enjoyable by avoiding unnecessary skin discomforts through good prevention.

Gay And Lesbian Greek Charters Granted At U.C.L.A.

CPS — They don't have houses or handshakes or slogans or songs or even an intramural team yet, but 2 new Greek houses at the University of California at Los Angeles already have become among the best-known in the country.

The reason is that Delta Lambda Phi, granted its charter on April 4, is only the second homosexual fraternity house in the nation.

Three weeks earlier, UCLA officially recognized Lambda Delta Lambda, which thus become the first lesbian sorority.

There may be more chapters at other campuses soon.

Gays at Temple University and the University of Minnesota expect to secure official charters by the end of the spring, and a group drawing students from Georgetown, American and George Washington universities in Washington, D.C., has been formed already.

"It's something that was designed to work at large campuses in which there is a thoroughly liberal student body," explained Vernon Strickland, chairman of Lambda Delta Phi's board in Washington.

So far, UCLA's newest Greeks are lavish in their enthusiasm.

"To create this bonding experience," said Lambda Delta Lambda member Allison Adler, a 20-year-old junior, "is really exciting. When I graduate, I'll be a rah-rah alumnus. I'll have a real connection to the school that I never felt before."

Chris Williamson feels the same way. He lectures at UCLA in urban and regional planning. At 31, he's already survived the initial personal struggle in recognizing his homosexuality. A gay fraternity, he claims, is the ideal support system for today's campus homosexuals.

"That's why this frat can be so helpful," Williamson said. "When you're coming out and admitting your sexuality, you're challenging everything you learned your whole life."

"There are long-range questions that we all need to talk about such as how we can deal with the fact that we'll never be married. These are some real hard issues gay guys have to constantly deal with."

The active gay groups on scores of campuses, Williamson added, often are political and can alienate some students.

"Although GAYLA (UCLA's student Gay and Lesbian Association) helps, students won't join (it) because they don't want to go to rallies and stuff like that, so a vacuum develops."

Like other Greek groups, Delta Lambda Phi and Lambda Delta Lambda mix volunteer work with social events. DLP works with AIDS groups; Lambda Delta Lambda volunteers assist women's organizations in Los Angeles.

Both groups — along with their counterparts at Temple and Minnesota — apparently met little resistance from administrators.

"Authorities," Strickland said, "have been very understanding, but the larger question is whether other fraternities will cooperate and recognize us."

"I think they will, but it will take time."

Williamson added that he knows gay UCLA students who belong to heterosexual fraternities, but are kept so busy playing the expected "games" that they may not be available to help dissipate their brothers' antipathy to gays.

"They might be active and live in a house, but they keep their distance," he said.

"There's always the pressure of having a date. Some have them just to show they can."

That, Williamson noted, is why gay and lesbian houses are a good idea.

He asserted Delta Lambda Phi will allow members to be themselves and have a sense of belonging. He downplays the sexual aspect, claiming more students are friends than lovers.

"The sex part isn't such a taboo anymore," he said. "It (the fraternity) is for belonging. Some guys, for example, join things like theater arts so they can belong to something with other guys, not because they want to go into theater. Therefore, they make a big mistake."

"There's no question we have a definite behavior pattern around ourselves that's different from when we're around straight guys. We'll be campy and say things we could never say around others. It's the gay subculture."

It's the same thing for Delta Lambda Lambda. The sorority was organized by a half dozen lesbian students who took a gay literature class together last year. Soon, friends brought more friends and a group was formed.

Adler says there was never an intention to establish a precedent.

"We weren't trying to make a political statement, although it does wind up being that," Adler said. "We're just trying to hang out together and have fun, and yet get away from the strictly social alcoholic scene. What better sisterhood is there than a group of lesbians?"

She added that, as expected, there has been some ridicule from others.

"We'll hear people yelling 'dyke' and things like that, but we take it with a grain of salt," she said. "Some have assumed we're a group of freaks, that homosexuality is such a deviant behavior. But if they come see us, we prove we're not freaks."

Currently, both are trying to recruit more members. LDL has about 35 pledges, while DLP has 11 official members.

COMMENTARY

By Chad Adams, Managing Editor

Retrospect Brings Respect

This year at UNCW has been interesting to say the least. There has been scandal, mudslinging, controversy, growth, pain, loss and the coming graduation of UNCW's largest senior class to date.

The Seahawk, funny the name rings a bell, was in the midst of a massive financial scandal that resulted in the resignation of Jefferson Weaver, former Editor-in-Chief. The scandal evolved, as if the student body didn't know even if you didn't read the paper, around the fact that $43,000 was spent in one semester under the former editor-in-chief's term. This is a better appreciated when one considers that only $12,000 was allocated to the Seahawk by the SGA for the entire year!

In the midst of this scandal stood the mudslinging contest held between Weaver and former SGA President Lee King. One using the power of the president and the other the power of the press. Another well known fact! But that is in the past and there it shall stay.

Controversy is always around, that's the great thing about college, nobody agrees on anything. People have wanted to change the parking situation for years, but it stays the same and everyone seems to get by. ARA has had its share of complaints, but I don't see to many people starving and the complaints against having to purchase a meal plan are soon to be put to rest as Auxiliary Services is currently looking for ways to keep the students from having to pay for a meal plan.

Controversy over the housing of UNCW's students has been another bone for people to chew on and in due fairness the office of residence life is in the process of building space for 400 more students to live on campus. This is a small amount compared to the expected growth of the school, but no step forward can be so small at least sometimes it is being done. Sometimes controversy can be good!

One problem that is sad to admit to is that student apathy still lingers strongly on this campus. I really don't think that most students know what the word 'apathy' even means, I also don't think that those who don't know would bother to ever find out.

To see growth on this campus one need only drive through it. The new Cameron Hall is a vivid show of the administrations efforts to influence the growth of the business school. The new Gazebo and apartments also show the amount of growth that the campus is expected to grow in the near future.

One need not just look for growth on the outside for growth is constantly happening on the inside as well. The Panhellenic Council has two new additions to its ranks one a sorority, Gamma Delta Chi, and the other a fraternity, Tau Nu Pi. There is even a movement to form another sorority, but I don't know where they stand right now.

The Greeks are continuing to grow and expand their importance at this University, and doing a commendable job.

UNCW's basketball team gave us an action packed season and their loss in the semi-finals of the CAA tournament were painful for the team as well as the student populace. The good news is that they will return and will surely give us another action packed season as Lefty Driesel joins the CAA at James Madison and will, no doubt, give us a good run for the money.

Mortality is something which we all have to face at one time or another, but not something that we are normally faced with at this age. But the death of Lisa Primovic made us face that mortality as UNCW lost a person of great potential. Her death was the Universities loss and will not be forgotten.

At the close of the year the students can the graduation of the Universities largest senior class to date. They are now faced with the problems of the real world and will retain the memories of this University for decades to come.

I, on the other hand, am facing that year which is coming to a close for those graduates, whom I wish the best of luck to. I am still able to look forward to another year of life here at UNCW.

The new controversies, the new joys and pains, the fun and the sun. It's a great place to be, after where else in this state can you go to class, take a test, pass it with flying colors, go to the beach, forget about your troubles and then return to school only to fail the next test miserably all in the same day.

Why Have A Senate Finance Committee If They Aren't Going To Be Heeded

The SGA appointed a finance committee in the spring of this year to review the budget proposals of clubs and organizations that need SGA funding to forward their purpose in the coming year. This committee is comprised of ten members who are elected by the SGA to determine how much money that each club or organization on campus should be allocated from the SGA after reviewing each budget individually. Once those budgets have been reviewed, the committee's allocation decisions are proposed to the SGA to be approved or declined by vote.

This year the committee went into extreme depth to determine how the SGA's money should be allocated, individual budgets were trimmed and some programs within organizations were cut altogether (UPB's Coffeehouse Committee). The committee spent over four hours alone on the Seahawk budget. In short, they spent an immense amount of time to understand how the money was to be allocated in fairness to each organization.

The actions of the senate at their last meeting on Monday night, however, seemed to indicate that no finance committee even existed. First, it was voted by the senate to review each proposal one at a time for a total of twenty-one individual budgets instead of voting on the committee's decisions as a unified entity.

Time was also ill used by the senate as individual members of the senate, who were not on the finance committee, expressed their own un-educated estimates as to how much money a certain club or organization should get. It was even suggested by some members of the senate that the Seahawk Express's, the campus shuttle service, funding be cut entirely despite the fact that its use has increased on campus by over 100%.

The Seahawk budget again was a point of concern as the budget that the committee had approved for it seemed to stultify most members of the senate. Most of those on the floor had no idea where the money was going to be spent or why the committee would approve such an apparently outrageous amount for one organization.

There were even senators arguing that the Seahawk should not be given the money because no other clubs were allocated that kind of money. Demeaning as it may sound the Seahawk is not a club, it's an organization.

The finance committee spent four hours determining how much money to allocate the Seahawk and the senate finally approved it after three additional hours of debate on the senate floor. A total of seven hours alone was dedicated to the approval of one budget, the sad part is that the other clubs and organizations are the ones who suffered for they had to wait until the Seahawk budget was done before their budget could be approved.

In short, it seems ridiculous to form and appoint members to a finance committee that is going to spend a lot of time reviewing budgets for clubs and organizations if the senate is going to do the same when the committee makes its report. There is no sense in wasting time reviewing decisions that have already been made by competent people unless there is some educated reason for a change in their rulings. In the three hours of debate over the Seahawk budget, tempers flared, opinions were expressed, people left, got tired and ended up being very personal and unprofessional, yet there was no change in the original proposal.

Columnists Puts Year In Perspective For Readers

I have been writing this column for two full semesters. I feel that it is a success because people either love it or hate it. The best part is that those few that don't like it, still read it.

My theory is that my column is for some people, like a sore in the mouth. You know when you have one and it hurts to touch your tongue against it, but what do you do? Yeah, you constantly touch it because you can't help yourself. They have to read the column despite the fact it offends them.

I have pissed off or pissed on many people and ideas. I have been trying to provoke a response, and it didn't work until this semester. My mistake last semester was to put down geeks who enjoy the radio stations in this town. I now realize that if anyone responded they would have admitted that they were a geek.

I was surprised when a dweeb wrote to the editor and attacked my character (as if I care) because I poked fun at mailmen. He cried about me insulting a female postal worker on campus. I never said anything about mailwomen. Some students have no sense of humor.

A sheltered girl wrote and demanded an apology from me to the entire student body and called for my dismissal. She was sickened by my mention of tampons and feminine sprays. I sure had a lot of nerve to mention those unmentionables. She must never watch television.

I was mildly surprised that no college Republicans complained about my "dream" column. In fact, one of them told me that he loved it. He corrected me on the polyester part. I guess they don't wear polyester. Sorry guys.

Thankfully, I started receiving letters of praise and encouragement from students and professors. I really needed and appreciated them.

I was able to bring my column and gripes to live television, thanks to Randy Harrington, "the man, the legend". He invited me to be on "Live At Five". I had a blast. Some tight wad at the top decided that Jethro Bodene was more important than a local show, and poof "Live At Five" is history. It didn't mean anything that members of the community got to have their say on television and local events were brought to our attention. Many students were able to receive valuable internships also, but NO, the Beverly Hills Reps are cheaper!

Some of my gripes have actually been alleviated. My biggest bitch was that the radio stations sucked in this town. WHSL called the office and complained about what I wrote. They claimed that they don't call themselves a rock station. Boy do I feel like a fool. For some reason, the "WHSL Rocks" bumper stickers gave me that impression. Now that SURF 107 moved to town, I quit bitching. I know that I probably didn't have anything to do with it, but in my mind, I'm taking full credit.

I tore apart the Riverfest. I complained about having to drink beer only in the beer tent, where there was nothing to do. The Azalea Festival was always like that too, but this year they put bands in the tent. What a novel idea. It only took them forty-one years to think of it.

Can you believe that this semester my column is being graded? I'm in a journalism workshop, and have to hand it in each week. How can anybody grade this? It would be like grading an armpit nose contest; it's a matter of opinion.

I try to be totally off the wall at times. I want more than a humorous column; I want the reader to laugh out loud at least once while they read it. That is why I sometimes get outrageous and irrelevant. Hey, I'll take the cheap laugh anytime. (What is an expensive laugh?) I have always had a crush on Betty Rubble of "The Flintstones". I'm a sucker for her big dark eyes and petite body. I've always wanted to see her naked. If I ever have my own magazine, I will have a centerfold of Betty in her glory.

Now that was off the wall, irrelevant, but truthful. It ought to bring my grade down too, but I don't care -- it's the end of the semester.

A few people have asked me if I will write this column in the fall. Do TV evangelists have money and women? I even plan to have more than a column. I plan on being the features editor. I will have half of the paper! Ha ha ha ha.

Tell all the jerks that never even pick up a Seahawk to get their umm act together. I can't imagine not even looking at the paper. It doesn't cost anything, and hey, it's their school paper. I'd read it even if I wasn't in it.

I want to wish all of you seniors a successful career. I don't want to see you working at Wendy's. I'll see the rest of you next fall. Good luck on "the dreaded finals".

One last thing: If you're interested in writing for the paper, or to the paper give us a visit at the office. (Room 205, in the Union).

Extermination Of Six Million Should Never Be Forgotten

Oh, her tears; the eloquence of her tears! We were standing in the University Union courtyard just after noon on April 14th having a small service to commemorate the Holocaust. There were readings and prayers, all focused on the theme of how important it is not to forget the millions who were exterminated by Nazi Germany.

When one person's time to speak came, she simply began to weep and couldn't read the selection before her. In that moment, for me, my historical recollections were broken open and I was carried into the heart of my memories of the agony of the 6 million. I spoke the words I was given to say but walked away from there, choked up, feeling that the singularly most appropriate way to remember that incredibly evil tragedy is to shed tears.

My concern is that for most of you who may read this column, your historical perspective is based upon learning about events of our past and that there is little or no memories to generate such feelings as those of us who have lived, however young, in the world when those events were actually taking place.

It is possible, if historical study is supported by the use of films or contact with survivors who still live in the Jewish community or even their children, to develop feelings of revulsion, horror and sorrow along with wonder at the courage displayed by the Jewish community and those non-Jewish people who risked and sometimes gave their lives to save Jewish lives. For most of you, the dominant use of the word Holocaust related to the possibility of a nuclear Holocaust. We may have lived with the idea of a nuclear Holocaust so long that it's possibility seems more and more remote except in our deep inner consciousness where the fear of such an event is reflected in our lack of security about our future. But the Nazi Holocaust is a fact of history. And it needs to be less a fact and more of an experience in our lives lest we ever lose sight of the horror of which humankind is capable. The Nazis systematically exterminated over 6 million human lives. Millions of others were complicit in this act by their silence and submission. But, for these facts to have power they must somehow come to be lodged in our guts not our minds. Do whatever you can to learn enough about the Holocaust so that you can feel deeply about it. We must not forget or lose touch with that reality. Such evil has its roots in the human psyche and lurks there still. To know deeply the horrors of which we are capable is to prepare ourselves to be on guard towards the attitudes, both public and private, that we develop towards others in the human community from whom we feel different or who, for whatever reasons, we chose to label as enemies.

I hope there will be a time that you think about the Holocaust and can cry.

Update from the Arts Council

On Friday, April 29th, The Arts Council Of The Lower Cape Fear is proud to present to you visiting Affiliate Artist, Michael Morin. Morin is a gifted actor whose film credits include Prizzi's Honor and Manhattan, among others. His versatility ranges from playwright to performer, from Shakespeare to Soap Opera. Michael's public performance will be held at Jake's of Jacobs Run on Friday evening, the 29th, at 7:30 p.m.

The public is invited and welcomed to attend this occasion, and general admission is $5.00, $3.00 for Senior citizens and students, and free to members of the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear. Please, come and take part in this special program with Affiliate Artists, sponsored by General Electric, and presented to you by the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear.

On Tuesday, May 3rd, Affiliate Artist Actor Michael Morin performs a one-time only grand call performance of his critically acclaimed one act play, "Tallahassee". No, this one is not about Bundy, it is about convicted killer Spindelink.

"Morin's riveting portrayal of the disturbed young killer which he researched with the help of former Attorney General Ramsey Clark and others who tried to save the condemned man, is absolutely convincing... And how risky this one is, Morin brings us a low-life convict and inmate instead of a statesman, Truman or a Twain." (The Daily Local News).

This one-time performance of Spindelink's life on death row will begin at 8:00, Tuesday, May 3rd at Front Street News. The public is invited and welcomed, and $2.00 donations are requested at the door. Come out and experience Michael Morin in "Tallahassee" presented by the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear.

Urban on books: A pair by Koontz

After years of writing pseudo-Gothic romantic thrillers under the pen-name 'Leigh Nicholls', Travis Koontz has finally come into his own as a premier novelist of suspense. His two most recent books are worth taking a closer look at.

The older of the pair is WATCHERS (in hardback from Putnam, $17.95; in paperback from Berkeley, $4.95). Travis Cornell, a war veteran and loner, feels he brings only misfortune to those around him. It's only when he befriends a beautiful stray dog that Cornell is brought out of his shell. There is more to the dog, named Einstein, that meets the eye. He seems possessed of almost super-human intelligence and leads Travis into a veritable "web of intrigue." Einstein guides Travis into a friendship with Nora Devon, a lonely young woman who has experienced almost nothing of the world. Together, the man and woman try to protect Einstein from government agents, from a psychopathic hit-man, and from someone (or something) known as the 'Outsider'.

Technically and thematically, WATCHERS is the more complex and satisfying of the two books. Einstein and the Outsider are, of course, products of covert genetic manipulation experiments. Koontz tries hard to keep the plot-line believable; his characterization of Einstein is well-handled, showing an intellect that is powerful, yet other than human. There are a few weaknesses in the novel: it's never fully explained how Einstein and the Outsider free themselves, and the "hit-man" subplot really doesn't go anywhere. (Vincent Nasco, the hit-man, should have been saved for another book.)

The packaging of Koontz's most recent novel, LIGHTNING (in hardback from Putnam, $18.95, available at Waldenbooks on Oleander Drive in Wilmington), is slightly misleading. Koontz has earned a reputation as a writer of suspense and horror novels - a reputation he doesn't entirely deserve. His roots are in science-fiction, and LIGHTNING is a contemporary treatment of that old science-fiction stand-by, time travel. But time travel is mentioned nowhere in the promotional material; the publisher didn't want to run the risk of scaring off potential "mainstream" readers. As a marketing technique, it's a little underhanded.

Throughout her life, Laura Shane has had her share of troubles. But at the worst moments, there has always appeared a mysterious stranger, a "guardian angel," who rescues Laura and disappears without explanation or even logic. Orphaned young, Laura becomes a successful writer and loving mother, but she always wonders about her ageless "watcher." Finally, on her thirtieth birthday, the stranger shows up on her doorstep, in need of her protection. Laura and her young son, Chris, must travel on a dangerous odyssey, protecting their charge from killers who can step in and out of time at will.

LIGHTNING starts out surprisingly enough, although the main action of the story takes a while getting underway. I was mildly let-down at the "muck" on which the whole plot hinges; I rather expected more from Koontz at this point. The author makes a major blunder in utilizing the old "love-at-first-sight" device; as a motivating force, this hasn't been used in fiction for years and it's not believable here. In the later third of the book, things get unnecessarily confusing, with parallel dimensions, multiple time-lines, and stock characterization. There are, however, a couple nice scenes with Adolf Hitler and Winston Churchill. (Whoops! Did I give the surprise away? If you're disappointed now, you probably wouldn't have enjoyed the book.)

Some other novels by Koontz, none of them very old, provide some worthwhile shudders: TWILIGHT EYES, STRANGERS, and PHANTOMS. I hope his next book reaches and surpasses the intensity of WATCHERS, and drops some of the clumsiness of LIGHTNING.

Playboy Magazine announces its winning writers

Six winners have been announced in the 1987 College Fiction Contest sponsored by Playboy magazine. A 27-year-old University of Alabama student, Valerie Ann Vogrin, receives $3,000 for her first-place entry, "The Hotel-Motel Bar & Grill," the story of a divorced father who turns his southern California apartment into an extravagant hotel theme park for the amusement of his two visiting daughters. "The Hotel-Motel Bar & Grill" will appear in the October 1988 issue of Playboy.

Robin Lewis, 26, a student at the University of Alaska, Fairbanks, won the $500 second prize for his story, "Jet Pilot for the Sandinistas." Lewis was a third-place winner in Playboy's 1986 College Fiction Contest.

Third place was shared by four students. Suzanne Kade, 38, of the University of Southern California, won for the story "Loose Ends"; Maria Franco King, 29, of Chabot College in Livermore, Calif., for "Out of the Blue"; John McNally, 22, of the University of Iowa, for "Pizza Man"; and Rachel Simon, 28, of Sarah Lawrence College, for "Magnet Hill."

The writing competition was open to all registered undergraduate and graduate college students.

Music City Song Festival seeks entrants

Established in 1979, the Music City Song Festival has awarded hundreds of thousands of aspiring songwriters, vocalists and lyricists the opportunity to showcase their material to the music industry professionals who judge the competitions. Over the years, countless entrants have been able to launch successful music careers as a result of entering the MCSF.

The Music City Song Festival has five divisions: Amateur Song, Professional Song, Amateur Vocal Performance, Lyric and Lyric Poem. Except for Lyric Poem, each of these divisions is further broken down into Rock/R&B/Soul, Gospel, Pop/Top 40, Country, MOR/Easy Listening/Jazz and Novelty/Miscellaneous categories, with cash prizes awarded in each.

Music City Song Festival entrants can submit cassette tapes and lyric sheets to be judged by music industry professionals. The upcoming ninth annual MCSF competition will begin in May, and entries will be accepted until Sept. 1, 1988, for Song and Vocal Divisions and until Oct. 15, 1988, for Lyric and Lyric Poem Divisions. An official entry form and entry fee are required.

To request entry information and the free 1988 Sound Makers magazine, write to MCSF, P.O. Box 17999-X, TN 37217 or call (615) 834-0027 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. Central Time. Inquiries will also receive a free copy of the 1987 edition of SoundMakers while the supply lasts.

Blues Society hosts benefit

The Blues Society of the Lower Cape Fear will host a benefit concert for Cape Fear Substance Abuse on the evening of Friday, April 29th that will be held at Church of the Good Shepherd located at 515 Queen Street. The concert will be headlined by The Spragues, one Wilmington's most active, entertaining blues bands and will also feature a jazz poetry session with Charles Fort, author of The Town Clock Burning. Other musicians participating include pianist Rudy Tyson and saxophonist Larry Price. Two bands formed for this event from Blues Society of the Lower Cape Fear membership will round out the show, which is the planned culmination of Drug Awareness Week activities in Wilmington.

Charles Fort

The concert will begin at 7 p.m. Requested entry donations will be $4.00 per individual or $7.00 per couple. All proceeds go to Cape Fear Substance Abuse.

For more information concerning this or other blues-related events in southeastern North Carolina, please contact Arthur Shuey, Acting President, Blues Society of the Lower Cape Fear, 762-2611(w) or 799-8607(h).

'Damn Yankees' opens next week

The country's oldest community theatre, The Thalian Association will present the Broadway hit musical, "Damn Yankees," at Kenan Auditorium on campus at UNCW May 4th through the 8th at 8 p.m. each evening.

The cast features the talents of 35 volunteer performers directed for the Thalias by Doug W. Swink. Music direction is by Duke Ladd with choreography by Linda Runion.

"You've Gotta Have Heart," and "Whatever Lola Wants" are two of the many songs in the play which concerns a middle-aged baseball fan who sells his soul to become a young baseball hero.

Tickets are available by calling the Center Box Office at 763-3398 or 763-9328 Monday through Saturday 10 a.m. until 5:30 p.m. The box office opens for the general public Monday, April 25.

Workshop on Saturday

On Saturday, April 30, 1988, from 10:00 AM to 12:30 PM, a free workshop, "All About the House: Discovering North Carolina's Material Culture" will be held at New Hanover County Museum of the Lower Cape Fear.

Is there any truth to the old saying, "One man's trash is another man's treasure"? Does the trash of one generation really become the treasure of another? Could some of that old stuff actually belong in a museum? "All About the House" will provide some of the answers to these questions.

Dr. Terry Zug, Folklorist, C-Chapel Hill; Keith Strawn, Curator, North Carolina Museum of History; and Janet K. Seapker, Director, New Hanover County Museum comprise the team who will examine the role of material artifacts in telling the story of the past. They will be available for questions throughout the afternoon. The public is invited to bring artifacts for examination.

This workshop, sponsored by the North Carolina Museums Council, is made possible by a grant from the North Carolina Humanities Council.

The program is free.

'Mister Roberts' Scores A Hit

by Heidi Berge

Opera House Theatre Company opened its production of "Mister Roberts" with full guns and a packed house at the Scottish Rite Temple on Friday, April 22. The audience received it with a standing ovation, and it will run at full throttle through this weekend.

The hero of the show, long-time Opera House actor, P. Joe Maggard, plays the role of Mister Roberts, a humanitarian naval officer who wishes he were fighting it out as a hero in the WW II war zone. Instead, he is waiting it out on a battleship in the back areas of the Pacific.

Maggard shows his versatility by sharing the stage and blending with the other actors to create the fraternal camaraderie necessary between men who are "stuck in the same boat." Maggard's skilled acting range also allows him to portray Roberts' more volatile side and take center stage when the tension between he and The Captain mounts in Act II.

Mister Roberts' bunk mate is Ensign Frank Pulver, played by Clifton Daniel. His facial expressions are priceless as he portrays the young naval officer just out of college. Pulver's main concerns seem to be girls and staying as far away from the war zone as possible, but he pulls some very funny foibles as he tries to entertain Mister Roberts.

The Captain is played by Tom McGovern, an accomplished movie/stage actor and director of Wilmington's Actor's Workshop. McGovern plays his role with enough insecurity and can't-see-the-forest-for-the-trees ambition that the audience loves to hate him.

The entire crew of the ship, aside from The Captain, is entertainingly fraternal. Jason Evans, Marc Francis, Nicky Hammerhead, Paul Mixon, Timmy Parker, Tony Pender, and Chuck Tedder project the individuality of their characters with wonderful abandon. They spend hours observing nurses who forgot to put up shower curtains on a Pacific island in telescope range from the ship.

Jennifer Adcock, the only woman in the cast, provides the perfect catalyst for the men's antics. She is sexy at first, then authoritative when she finds out what the men have been up to. The men are forced to resign their 'masculinity' and salute the full Lieutenant as she makes a hasty exit.

Jim Martz, another Opera House regular, is rarely seen after the sets are built and the lights are up. Martz has been the designer for both technical aspects during many productions. In Mister Roberts, he comes out from behind the black curtain. Martz is well received with lots of chuckles as the Shore Patrolman when he animatedly describes the men's night on "liberty from the ship."

When "Mister Roberts" first opened on Broadway in 1942, it won the Perry Award for the season's "outstanding" play. The star, Henry Fonda, won a "Tony" for his performance as Lieutenant Roberts.

Ironically, just before opening night, Opera House won an award of its own, the 1987 Governor's Business Award. These awards recognize noteworthy contributions in the Arts and Humanities to the cultural environment of North Carolina and its communities. Only two arts organizations in the state were recipients of this award.

The award was not the only surprise. Two days before opening night, Dick Olsen had to relinquish his role of Dowdy because of an illness. Director Lou Criscuolo learned up to the 'old adage'... leaved Olsen's lines and gave a fine performance.

"Mister Roberts" is a play to see if you have ever been on a ship, or if you just want to take a closer look at the antics, struggles, and trials on a U.S. battleship during WWII.

The show will run next weekend, April 28 - May 1, at 8 pm at The Scottish Rite Temple on 17th St. Tickets are $6 for students, $10 for adults.

Auditions for the Opera House summer season of "Hello Dolly," "42nd Street," and "West Side Story" will be held Saturday, May 21st and Sunday, May 22nd from 1-5 and on Monday, May 23rd from 7-10 at the Lucile Shuffler Center on Carolina Beach Road. Please bring a prepared song and dress for movement. These are three big musicals, so they need all ages from teenagers to adults - all shapes and sizes - male and female. Besides the singing and dancing roles, there are also non-singing and dancing roles available.

SRO Ends On Upbeat As Students Shine In "Happy Haven"

by Heidi Berge

"The Happy Haven," a play by John Arden, was performed under the direction of Dr. Terry Rogers in the SRO Theater last weekend. Director Terry Rogers makes Arden's otherwise unusual play easy to understand. Arden throws in so many curves and plot tangents (not to mention theatre styles) that one who just wanted to be entertained could have easily been lost... or worse, bored. But with a talented cast and crew, Rogers blends Arden's Theatre of the Absurd, Shakespearean soliloquies, some acapella singing, and illusionary script lines into a life-enjoyable, comedic tale of real life.

"The Happy Haven" marks the termination of a great talent at UNCW. Brad Thomas has portrayed many characters in his scholastic career here. He has a presence, a dedication, a sparkle... it's called... Star quality... Maybe it's just the child in him playing all these characters.

That's what it is in "The Happy Haven." Thomas obviously enjoys every minute of his role as "a Dr. Faustus of the apparent generation" researching the elixir of life and youth. Thomas' wild eyes, the way his hair seems to move... more and more every time he enters, his exaggerated and articulate style, all show the love of his craft. Thomas may be terminating his career here, but he's just a babe in the professional world, and we can't wait to watch him grow. Thomas has plans to go on to Toronto, Canada and continue his career in acting.

There is a very shocking scene when the audience is introduced to the five old people who are the raw material for the doctor's work. Five doors swing open to reveal' people with disfigured masks on which represent the aging patients, and their shattered dreams which create such masks. The sets and sound are wonderfully realistic, we feel as though we're in the room.

Julie Brockman gives a very fine performance as the oldest patient, Mrs. Phineus. Her bird-like neck movements and thin, heavy limbs, are effectively 91 years old. Brockman has a soliloquy in the second act that completely captivates the audience.

April Mathews held an intensity throughout her performance which was evident in her crooked fingers, almost like a claw... very appropriate.

Mr. Crape was played with equal intensity by Steve Boardman. He is enticing as he whirls with rhythmic movements - almost youthful movements, yet we very much believe he's old.

David Gentry is a little muffed as Mr. Golightly, the 60 something gentleman still looking for his true love, but he has some nice singing moments.

Kevin Whitley steals the show as Mr. Harder when his mimed dog barks and growls and begs to be controlled. Whitley is nervous in the first Act, but he gives a wonderful cheer for himself in the second.

Theater this absurd is hard to cack off and make sense to the audience. When it works, it is an ensemble called Art. This one works.

Not To Be Forgotten

As this scribe closes his four years here at UNC Wilmington, an influential chapter in his life also comes to an end.

With graduation from this institution of higher learning, there is a hope that my four years at this university will not be lost as some have in UNCW's past.

In my two years of work at the Seahawk and three years in the university's sports information office, I have been alarmed by the overwhelming number of past results and events that have been lost or overlooked in UNCW's history.

This school is growing to be one of the state's top university's and athletically is breaking into the national spotlight. But there is one thing that is missing from all of UNCW's success...a tradition.

As the athletic department grows, it will need more than just a great location and excellent academic standards. Most of your top athletic programs base their recruiting not around the school, but around the tradition and rich history the program has and offers.

As young as the school is, many would say that the tradition is just now starting. This scribe thinks differently.

As I walked through Trask Coliseum and Hanover Hall today, I noticed all the trophies and plaques that were located in the trophy cases. The first question that hit me was, "What does all this stand for and what do they mean to UNCW?"

They are the history of this university of the athletic field. What they represent is the tradition this university has been wanting for so long and will need in the future.

What will it take to capitalize on this hidden treasure? A little effort to organize and honor those who have contributed so much to this university.

As I pore over the records of UNCW basketball I'm offended to know that individuals like Brian Rowsom, Gwen Austin, and Jay Neary are not honored with even a picture or jersey in the trophy case. To see the rafters bare of banners, with not even Rowsom's jersey hanging from the ceiling hurts. What hurts even worse is to go into McDonald's and see the old #25 on display, but not fit enough for even the UNCW trophy case.

The baseball team is another example of tradition lost. During the junior college days, Bill Brooks led then Wilmington College to a couple of junior college national championships, but you would never know it by the way the university shows it.

It is a shame that UNCW has forgotten so much. When tradition is mentioned, you hear the same story again and again, we are young and we are making it now.

But for the thousands of students that attended this institution prior to 1980, they are left out of what is a fine university that they laid the ground work for.

The things that highlighted their years here at the Big W mean just as much now as they did then. It is the university's duty to restore these memories.

This is an issue that needs immediate attention before father time take away more that cannot be recovered. Athletic Director Bill Brooks is one of the few ties to the past as he has been associated with the university longer than most. He is the link to the past, a past otherwise lost.

As I leave these hallowed halls, I hope that the things that have enlightened my four year here will leave some visible mark on this university when I return in the future.

Maybe the university will realize its error and make the correction before time takes away from us all the things that make up our lives, memories.

I will have many of UNCW. From the Seahawks near ups of Navy in Trask Coliseum in 1987 to the baseball teams regular season conference championship last year, these events helped shape my four years here and will have an everlasting effect on my life.

So when I return to UNC Wilmington 10 years from now, I would like to see Rowsom's number retired and hanging from the rafters and the baseball team will have a pennant at Brooks Field signifying their 1987 success.

What I want most is to have the era that I attended UNCW remembered in a much better way than those that have been nearly forgotten. I want the things that I will remember most honored and know that not only did I attend UNCW from 1984-88, but also contributed in some way to this university as it has contributed to my life so much.

Roy Walker Receives Pizza Hut Award

McDowell Named UNCW's Most Outstanding Athlete

By Curt Nichols
Assistant Sports Editor

For the second straight year the Thomas V. Moseley Outstanding Athletic Award was presented to an athlete from the hardwood floor. Sharon McDowell, this years recipient, was a four year standout for the Lady Hawks.

The senior from Elizabethtown, NC, finished her career with over a thousand points, the second all-time rebounder, and a new Lady Seahawk record for career shooting percentage. McDowell was twice named to the All-Colonial Athletic Association team this year. Last years recipient of the award was basketball star Brian Rowsom.

Roy Walker recieved the Pizza Hit Player-of-the-Year award after turning in a superb second half of the season.

Walker, a junior college transfer from Alabama, played just 40 minutes his junior season, but came on to spark the Seahawks late in the season.

The Chancellor's Cup Award which is given to the athlete top student athlete. Rob Lill, a Political Scienceand a four year member of the soccer team, received the award this year. The award was presented by Chancellor William Wagoner.

The following awards were presented in each individual sport:

Seahawks Sign 6-3 Prep Star

UNC Wilmington has announced the signing of Ohio cage standout Mark Eaton as its second recruit for the 1988-89 basketball season.

The Seahawks, who posted a 15-14 overall record and 9-7 mark in Colonial Athletic Association, landed 6-9 center Matt Fish of Washington, Iowa, in the early signing period last fall.

Eaton averaged 27.8 points, 9.2 rebounds and 5.0 assists during his senior year at Wheelersburg High School in Wheelersburg, Ohio. The 6-3, 180-pound guard/forward was named to the All-Ohio team in the Division III classification and played in the Ohio All-Star Game.

"Mark is a complete player," said UNC Wilmington head basketball coach Robert McPherson. "He can shoot, pass and plays good defense. He's fundamentally sound and I think he'll see considerable playing time as a freshman because he does possess many fine skills."

Eaton led Coach Mike Lovenguth's Pirates to a 24-1 record this past season and 43-6 mark during a two-year period as Wheelersburg captured two consecutive Southern Ohio Conference championships. He was voted Southeast District Player-of-the-Year by the Associated Press and nominated for McDonald's All-American Team.

The versatile performer shot 72 percent at the free throw line and 52 percent from the field, including a 52 percent aim from three-point range. A National Honor Student, Eaton scored 17 or more points in 51 straight varsity games.

Netters Place Sixth in CAA

Freshmen standout Karen Jones posted a perfect 11-0 mark during the spring regular season campaign as UNC Wilmington's women's tennis team concluded its spring season above the .500 mark.

The Lady Seahawks, who placed sixth in the Colonial Athletic Association's tournament at the University of Richmond, won five of their first six matches this spring. The regular campaign ended with four straight losses going into the CAA Tournament.

In the CAA Tournament, two UNCW entries fared well. Tricia Ferrell and Jenni Gray teamed to win the consolation championship at the No. 3 Doubles, while Jenni Gray took fourth place in No. 6 Singles.

There's a swing...

Senior Mike Byers (#24) swings on a pitch against USC Aiken last Saturday. The Seahawks lost the game 4-0 and later dropped a 4-3 count to UNC Chapel Hill that night. The Seahawks are mired in a slump that has seen them lose 15 of their last 16 games. They play host Thursday night to Coastal Carolina before playing May 6-8 at the UNC Charlotte Invitational.

'Pop' More Than Just a Voice

By Leslie Capps
Seahawk Correspondent

As he walks down the hallways of Trask Coliseum, he hears the familiar call of 'hey Pop'. David Warner, or 'Pop' as his students more commonly call him, is a credit to his name.

Many who don't know his face would probably recognize his voice. Warner is the public address announcer for the Seahawks' soccer and baseball programs.

"I don't really remember how I got the nickname. It was given to me back in high school. My dad was a football line coach at Penn State and faculty member at the University of Connecticut. There was also a Coach Warner at Temple University," says Warner.

Warner has played a varied role in the development of UNCW's athletic programs. 'Pop' is a friend of the student and is so willing to help fill in when needed," says William J. Brooks, athletic director at UNCW.

Warner came to UNCW in 1965 as Director of College Relations. In 1968 he began teaching classes. In 1979 he retired, but was asked to return and teach part-time in the health and physical education department.

Warner was destined to love sports. His father was a coach and professor.

"I can't remember doing anything else," says Warner. While growing up in Connecticut during his high school and college days he played football, basketball, track, soccer, swim and played lacrosse.

His first teaching position was head of the Physical Education Department in 1939 at Berry College, located in Rome, Ga.

Then came World War II, interrupting his career for a few years. He served three and a half years in the Coast Guard in several places such as Portland, Maine, Fairhaven, Mass., and Boston.

"I did whatever they wanted me to do," says Warner. "I coached the base athletic teams including basketball, and baseball. I also was responsible for the physical activities of the men," says Warner.

After his stint in the Coast Guard, he returned to teaching in Charleston, S.C. at the Young Men's Christian Association. He then became head of the P. E. Department and coach at Frostburg College in Frostburg, Md., before a stint at Davis and Elkins College in Elkins, W. Va.

"During my tenure at Frostburg I coached soccer, basketball, and baseball. For six years I coached cross-country, swimming, and track at Davis and Elkins," says Warner.

His next career move brought him to North Carolina as an assistant to Dr. William C. Presley, president of Peace College, for 12 year. "I did everything the title implies. I coordinated various school functions," says Warner.

"However, about this time Peace was going through some administrative changes so I felt it would be a good opportunity to move on," says Warner.

Dr. William Randall, then president of Wilmington College, brought Warner to UNCW in 1965 as director of college relations.

Warner has made UNCW his home in more ways than one. His three children are all graduates and he taught some of them along the way. It was difficult at times to separate his role as teacher/parent.

"Most of the other students didn't know," recalls Warner, "until my daughter Cathy blurted out in class one day, 'Daddy that isn't right' in disagreement," says Warner.

While two of his three children competed athletically at UNCW, Warner has always managed to find time to contribute his other skill as announcer.

"I enjoy teaching and I have been announcing games for 20 years," says Warner.

Before the press box was built at Brooks Field he used old lumber to construct a makeshift bench.

"We sat directly behind home plate. Rain or shine we were there. If it rained they just covered us and the equipment with plastic and kept announcing," says Warner.

Warner has been involved with practically all sports at UNCW in one way or another. He currently serves as public address announcer for soccer and baseball.

Even illness can't keep him down. Two years ago Warner suffered a stroke and sat out the fall semester. However, he managed to miss only two soccer games.

"When I had my stroke I learned limitations, and judgemental values," says Warner.

Although it seems Warner devotes his entire time to UNCW, he manages to find time to spend with his wife, Catherine. They are involved together in various civic affairs. They assist with Project Up. Project Up is the awards committee of the Keep America Beautiful Campaign.

"My career would not have been possible without the support of my family," says Warner. "I'm most proud of all my children who have made successes out of their lives."

In his 'spare time' he likes to watch all sports, and dabbles in carpentry. "I enjoy working with a hammer and nail. I feel that people should be well rounded," says Warner.

Warner's impact has been felt on athletes and students alike. Always humble, he refuses to take any credit.

"Students are the ones who do the work. I just put the thoughts in their mind," says Warner. "They do the rest."

AT A GLANCE

Catholic Mass Offered

Catholic mass will be held in the Student Union, room 201 Saturday at 5:30p.m., and on Sunday at 10p.m.

Play Lacrosse!

Players, coaches and fans are needed for the UNC/Wilmington Lacrosse Club. Call Beau at 763-0977.

Need Daycare?

Do you need daycare? Students, Faculty, and staff will want to hear from you! Call Doris Best 343-9827 or Susan Wolfson in SGA Office, and leave your name and phone number.

Ballet Instruction

The School of the Wilmington Civic Ballet is holding registration for its 1988-89 classes. The School offers classical ballet instruction on all levels, ages 4 through adult. Classes begin September. The School of the Wilmington Civic Ballet is located at the Community Arts Center, 120 South Second Street. For more information, call 343-1583

Check for Decals!

Parking decals for 1988-89 may be purchased in the parking office located in the Student Support Center. Decal cost is $50 for the first car and $10 for each additional car. (Only faculty and staff members are eligible for staff decals.) Employees wishing to purchase decals for their own vehicles must bring their NC Registration Cards for each new vehicle to be registered.

Jugglers Meeting

The Wilmington Jugglers Association meets Wednesday nights from 8 to 10 at the Community Arts Center, 120 S. 2nd St. Beginners welcome. For more information contact Jeff Brown, Mathematical Sciences Department, MO 254, 395-3293.

Recycling at UNCW

UNCW is ripe with soda cans, paper, cardboard and other trash. If just each student consumed one soda per day that would be 32,500 cans per week! The local Sierra Club, as well as our own Geology Club, will be mounting a recycling plan(s). If all goes well at our campus, we could send our plan out via SGA, NCSL and/or the Sierra Club to allow duplication at our 15 sister campuses. Keep your eyes open for future articles and trash cans "for soda cans only."

Tennis Tournament

Registrations for the fourth annual UNCW AI Barry Faculty/Staff Tennis Tournament scheduled for September 26 are now being accepted. First place winners will receive a free lunch for two courtesy of Eljiah's Restaurant. Forms are available from the office of special programs in Hoggard 225 and players of all levels are encouraged to enter. Registration deadline is September 9.

UNCW Resumes Fall Lifestyle

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington opened the 1988/89 academic year next week with a projected enrollment of 6,581 students, up from 6,501 in the fall of 1987. Among these are expected to be 1,300 new freshmen, 425 transfers, and 289 graduate students.

Last year's freshmen class numbered 1,650. This year, because of space and budgetary limitations, UNCW is trying to limit freshmen enrollment to no more than 1,400. Controls in the form of a $25 tuition deposit, earlier application deadlines, and increases admission requirements were initiated this year.

However, according to Director of Undergraduate Admissions Diane Zeeman, total undergraduate applications were up more than 1,000 over 1987/88 -- 5,524 freshmen applied, 1,162 transfer students, and 81 unclassified.

Zeeman noted that as of Aug. 1, of the 3,159 freshmen and 553 transfers admitted, 1,401 freshman and 442 transfers had paid tuition deposits. "Although we won't know our final figures until registration is over Aug. 24, it is fairly typical to have about 100 no shows. We are on target with the 1,300 freshmen anticipated."

Minority enrollment projections are not yet available, although Zeeman said that 208 new black students have been admitted to date, up from 196 this time last year.

Classes began Thursday, Aug. 25.

New students will be moving into on-campus housing between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., Saturday, Aug.

20. Returning students may move in between 12 noon and 5 p.m. Sunday, Aug. 21. On-campus housing can accommodate 1,558 students.

With a waiting list of only about 100, Director of Auxiliary Services Margaret Robison said the housing placements are not a big problem this year. The housing office maintains a referral service for apartments and rooms available in the community.

A new residence hall with 400 beds is under construction and is expected to be open by fall 1989. A new cafeteria situated near the student housing area is expected to be under construction within 60 days.

Also under construction are 550 additional parking spaces, scheduled to open during the fall of 1988. Currently, 3,800 parking spaces are available on campus. Students, faculty and staff must pay a $50 annual parking fee, an increase of $4 over last year.

To control congestion and to ease parking for commuters, students who live on campus are issued resident decals and are not permitted to park in the front part of campus between 7 a.m. and 3 p.m. weekdays.

For the first time this year, the residence life surveyed all freshmen planning to live on campus with a personal questionnaire obtaining information about proposed major, preferences, neatness requirements, and activity interests. Using this information, roommates have been matched based on anticipated compatibility and living patterns.

An outgrowth of this survey is a new program in Residence Hall 85 known as the "Women in Business" floor for 18 freshmen women. These women are planning to major in business and have shown leadership potential based on prior activities. Faculty from the Cameron School of Business Administration will be involved throughout the school year to give programs about business and to explain the variety of career opportunities available.

Charles Maimone, assistant dean of students for residence life, said that business related experience will also be provided for the young women. "They will be required to participate in hall government and be involved in a community service project each semester. This is the first time our campus has attempted this kind of residence hall programming," he said.

An economic impact survey by Dr. W. W. Hall, director of the Center for Business and Economics Services of the Cameron School of Business Administration, found that in 1986/87 UNCW was responsible for an infusion of approximately $184.3 million to the area economy. He estimates that the 1988/89 economic impact will be more than $200 million.

Several activities have been planned with a "Welcome Back Seahawk" flavor:

* Wednesday, Sept. 7, between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m., the Activities Fair will be held on the west lawn of the University Union. The Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce is coordinating a Welcome Back booth where N.C. apples and soft drinks will be distributed and chamber members will have the opportunity to participate.

Experiencing Bookstore Woes

Yes, it's that time of year again, when over five thousand people descend on the port city of Wilmington. They come here from places far and wide; from foreign countries, other states, and other parts of North Carolina. They come here to the University of North Carolina in search of their academic dreams. One of the major tools that the student will use in his or her quest for academic excellence is the almighty textbook. The one place on campus for everyone to get their books is the University Bookstore.

The line going into the bookstore remained consistently long throughout the day. Christina Warren, a freshman this year, said of the lines, "I think it's necessary. You can't do anything about it but wait."

Marty Melton, who works the door for the bookstore during the more busy times of the year, when asked about how the students were responding to the length of the lines, said, "About ninety-nine percent of the students expected the lines to be long, of course, there will always be a few people that gripe about the lines here, but they are the type of people who would complain about waiting in line at the drug store." Miss Melton also commented on the smoothness of the whole operation as it progressed throughout the day by saying, "Although the lines have been long all day, the average student has not had to wait in line for more than an hour."

A pair of freshmen students from Hickory, NC, Adrienne Buff and Anna Marie Herman, who called themselves "The Doublemint Twins" said, "We've only had to wait in the lines here at the bookstore for about thirty-five minutes."

Another freshman, Stephen Chriscoe, said of the lines, "The line seems to be going fairly well, but they could be moving a little faster."

See Bookstore p. 3

Lawson

Awarded

The Crime Prevention Program at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has been cited for being the "Most Outstanding Achievers" in crime prevention among North Carolina's colleges and universities. This was one of five such awards in the state and the only one given in the college and university division.

Part of the state's Crime Prevention Division Recognition and Awards Program, the award was presented Aug. 4 in Ahoskie by the North Carolina Department of Crime Control and Public Safety.

Singled out for distinguished work in crime prevention was Lt. Regina Gayle Lawson, a crime prevention officer with the UNCW Office of Public Safety. She was one of 39 individual law enforcement officers, including those in police and sheriff's departments, who were recognized for their contributions.

At UNCW, Lawson has developed a variety of informational brochures and crime prevention programs which she gives in residence halls and on campus. Among the approximately 15 categories of programs she conducts are sessions on sexual assault, acquaintance rape, bicycle safety and bike registration, and fire prevention.

Lawson has been with the UNCW Campus police since 1982, beginning work there when she was a student at UNCW majoring in criminal justice. She graduated from UNCW in December, 1986.

Tuition Soars to New Heights

(CPS) The price students pay to attend college has increased faster than the general inflation rate for the eighth year in a row, the College Board says, and many students say they'll have to scramble to find the money.

"My parents pay for my tuition," University of Virginia senior Susie Bruce said. "My mom is a nurse, and she's working extra shifts until I graduate to pay for my tuition."

"I know it's going to hurt me," said University of Illinois junior David Dumphy, whose tuition rose $306, from $2,092 to $2,398. "I'll be able to make it. A lot of my friends won't. I'll work in a record store or McDonald's."

"I worked 20 hours a week last year. I don't know how I'll be able to work more, but you do what you can to make up the difference."

The average student will pay 7 percent more for tuition and fees this academic year, the College Board found in its annual tuition report released in mid-August. Inflation, as measured by consumer prices, was 4 percent since fall, 1987.

Prices for the average public four-year school increased an average of 4 percent, to $1,483. At private four-year schools, tuition and fees shot up an average of 9 percent, to $6,437.

At two-year colleges, the average charge for tuition and fees rose 5 percent, to $750, at public schools, and 9 percent, to $4,415, at private institutions.

The good news, noted Bob Aaron of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges, is that such jumps are smaller than the double-digit increases of the early 1980s.

"The trend is a decrease in the increase,"

Whatever the trend, it hasn't kept students out of class. While official numbers aren't out yet, many campuses received record number of applications for fall term, indicating that Americans are willing to pay more for college.

"People want to get a college degree and will pay whatever it takes to get it," said Bruce Barnes, deputy undersecretary of education who believes colleges are charging more because they know their consumers -- students -- can simply turn around and borrow more from the federal government. "Under those circumstances, there are no constraints (on price)."

University of Rochester researchers, for example, determined that lowering tuition doesn't necessarily draw more students to campus. "There was no evidence that a tuition drop would improve market position," research consultant Beverly Joyce said.

"The public doesn't view shopping around for colleges like it does for other consumer items," said Rochester Vice President Jim Scannel. "They're looking for quality, and they're not willing to trade that off."

"Investing in a college education for oneself and one's children may well be the second largest consumer purchase, second only to buying a house," said Kathleen Brouder of the College Board.

Tuition increases, of course, varied from school to school. Public schools like the University of Michigan and George Mason University, for instance, increased tuition 12 percent. Penn State and Michigan State raise tuition by 9.7 percent while the University of Virginia raise tuition about 7 percent. The University of Alabama increase out-of-state tuition 16.4 percent, while residents' tuition is 4.5 percent greater than last year.

Orange Coast Community College students will pay 51 percent greater more for tuition this year: the California school raised last year's $100 tuition to $151. Students at Blackfeet Community College in Montana will pay $1,305, $370 more than last year.

California's Loma Linda University, a private school, raise its tuition by almost 6 percent this year.

That increase, however, seems moderate compared to other small private colleges. The college of Idaho raised its tuition 311 percent, from $6,150 last year to $8,032

International Student Scholarship

Washington, D.C.: The seventh annual INTERNATIONAL STUDENT SCHOLARSHIP COMPETITION -- a nationwide essay competition for international students studying in the U.S. -- is now underway, reports Tom St. Denis, Vice-President of International Underwriters/Brokers, Inc., sponsor of the competition. First prize is $1,500 to be used for academic or professional advancement.

International Underwriters/Brokers, Inc., also will award $350 to the International Student office of the first-place winner.

Deadline for the competition is December 1, 1988. International students interested in entering must submit an essay of no more than 1,500 words of the topic --

"Important cross cultural clues are often found in humor."

Compare humor in your country with humor as you find it in America. Include examples of humorous situations resulting from cross cultural misunderstandings, either in the U.S. or on your first visit back to your home country.

Additional scholarships will be awarded to a second-place winner ($1,000); a third-place winner ($500); and five honorable mention recipients ($100 each). The INTERNATIONAL STUDENT SCHOLARSHIP COMPETITION is open to all full-time foreign students enrolled in a prescribed degree- or certificate-granting program at an accredited high school, junior college, college or university within the U.S. Also eligible are students enrolled in an English training program who plan to pursue higher education in the U.S.

Winner of the 1987/88 INTERNATIONAL STUDENT SCHOLARSHIP COMPETITION was Cladia Franco Higueros of Mexico, who is studying at the School of Advanced International Studies, at John Hopkins University.

Groundbreaking For Thalian Renovation

The date of the Official Groundbreaking for the Thalian Hall/City Hall Renovation Project was announced today. "It will be on Thursday, September 1 at 5:00 p.m.," stated Tony Rivenbark, Executive Director of the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts, Inc., "on the corner of Fourth and Princess Streets, under the massive Live Oaks." He added that all citizens of Wilmington and New Hanover County are cordially invited to attend the Groundbreaking Ceremony.

Ninety members of the Hoggard High School Band, under the direction of Jeff Scott, are scheduled to begin playing at 4:40 p.m. Also participating will be students from College Park Elementary School. Ms. Patricia Dorsey, Secretary of the North Carolina Department of Cultural Resources, is the event's special guest.

Demolition of the parking lot and the old rest room wing started on August 15 of this year. Construction of the new lobby and administrative wing is slated to begin after Labor Day.

The Thalian Hall/City Hall Complex is scheduled to reopen in the spring of 1990, in time to be the centerpiece of the celebration of the 250th Anniversary of the City of Wilmington.

Piney Woods Festival Saturday

The Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear, Inc., is sponsoring the ninth annual Piney Woods Festival on Labor Day weekend, Saturday, September 3 from 10 a.m.-6 p.m., and on Sunday, September 4 from 12 p.m.-5 p.m., 1988 at Hugh McRae Park. All gourmet cooks interested in participation in the International food sales please contact the Arts Council for a registration form at 763-ARTS, or P.O. Box 212, Wilmington, N.C., 28402. The objective of the International cuisine section is to generate cultural awareness by providing a chance for the community to experience a diversity of culinary delights. Applicants will be judged on the authenticity to the culture represented and are required to dress and decorate their booths in native character. Prizes will be awarded.

SGA On The Rise

A bit of the boring parliamentary procedure still persists, but the Student Government Association looks like it will be on its feet in the upcoming school term. This year, the senators are not committed to the idea of doing out SGA funds as if money was in endless supply.

Karla Alston, President of the Student Body, and Robert Smith Jr., Vice President, want an SGA that isn't just an organizational name. Both want to see students expand their knowledge of the SGA and make a commitment to become involved.

An informational brochure about the SGA was included in the packet given to all freshmen who came to the summer orientation sessions, and more are available in the SGA office, Room 200 in the University Union.

The freshman class President, Vice-President, Senators and all Representatives-at-Large will be elected this fall. Registration forms for the candidates may be obtained in room 200 until September 7th. Campaigning begins on September 6th and continues through election day, September 12th. Necessary run-offs will be held on the 14th. Students are strongly urged to come out and vote.

this year. Stevens Institute of Technology in New Jersey raise its tuition $1,475 to $12,025.

Some schools didn't raise their prices, or some even reduced them. New York's Sullivan County Community College, for one, reduced its tuition from $1,510 to $1,430. "The University of Mississippi held its tuition at $1,780. Eastern Arizona College kept its tuition at $500.

A few campus observers think such prices have hit a limit.

"There's a feeling out there among the electorate that college costs are going beyond their reach," said Jennifer Afton of the Education Commission for the States.

Afton and others believe states, banks and governments will have to develop pre-payment tuition plans, savings bond programs and other ways to keep students registering in the future.

They think tuition may keep climbing faster than inflation in the near future. "I don't have a crystal ball," Aaron said, "I can't project what costs will be. But I don't see anything on the horizon that will change anything."

This year's increase has not changed Reagan administration criticism that prices are rising mostly because colleges are wasteful, because they need to support bloated bureaucracies, because too much aid is available to students and because high tuition makes them seem prestigious.

"We are, of course, not at all surprised by these increases," Carnes said. "We have stated that, so far as we can see, the price of college is going to go up at this rate forever. We don't see anything in the immediate offing to exert very much restraint on these increases."

"Never once, in anything I've ever seen, have they said maybe schools should look at themselves and tighten up," added Robert Iosue, president of York college and a sharp critic of campus bureaucracies. York raised its tuition .005 percent this year, well under the national average, to $3,716.

College officials argue they need more money to replace aging facilities, increase faculty salaries to stop professors from leaving for higher-paying jobs in private industry and to provide more financial aid for low-income students.

Campuses need to get the money from students, moreover, because state and federal governments generally have cut the amount of money they appropriate to colleges.

"We're responding to the realities that exist," said Georgetown University spokeswoman Anne Klass.

At least one student agrees: "It's still pretty cheap," said Ray Cole, an Alabama junior whose tuition was increased almost 5 percent, or $35. "I don't think it's too much. I think it should be even higher, so they can put money into programs that need it."

Jessiebeth Geddie, who is the Sales Manager for Supplies, Gifts, and Clothing for the UNCW Bookstore, said, "It took some students as long as an hour to get in the door, but I haven't heard any of the students complain." She also stated, "I think the students have been very courteous and nice about the length of the lines."

Perhaps the whole situation could best be summed up in the words of freshman Mark Krenisky when he said, "It's just one of those things that we all have to put up with in this crazy stop and go world. Right now, I'm stopped."

Unique Solution To 'Greenhouse Effect' Offered By West Coast Publisher

It's well known that individual initiative is the key to getting anything big done, and Bridge Publications, a West Coast publisher famous for its bestselling L. Ron Hubbard books, has a unique solution for the 'greenhouse effect' and the ozone depletion crisis facing the world today.

"The idea came from reading L. Ron Hubbard's science fiction series MISSION EARTH," says Scott Welch, Senior Vice President at Bridge. "IN MISSION EARTH, L. Ron Hubbard suggests that it may be possible to produce spores or bacteria that would eat harmful air pollutants, the chief contributors to both the 'greenhouse effect' and ozone depletion. It's quite an ingenious idea."

Pollutants pile up in the air and form a kind of blanket creating the 'greenhouse' situation. The infra-red rays pour in but the heat can't escape easily as the blanket gets thicker. So it gets hotter and hotter. Other pollutants, chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs), are tearing up the ozone, eating away at it. You could reverse the entire crisis by creating a spore that would eat the pollutants instead, demolishing the blanket and eliminating the CFCs. This would restore the sky's natural properties.

Science fiction? Well yes it is. "That's the role of science fiction in civilization," says Welch. "As L. Ron Hubbard pointed out, 'Science fiction does NOT come after the fact of a scientific discovery or development. It is the herald of possibility. It is the plea that someone should work on the future.'"

Welch is currently speaking with concerned scientists to explore the new ideas for viability and implementation. As well, they are searching for avenues for research funding.

Renowned bio-chemist and microbiologist, Dr. Robert Rutman, suggests that the potential crisis facing human life is more serious than the AIDS threat.

"There is $850 million for AIDS research," he points out, "and none for the ozone, 'greenhouse effect' or other serious pollution problems."

Why did Welch and Bridge Publications become involved?

"It's obviously a situation that affects everyone of us on Earth," says Welch. "Back in 1978, when the ban on aerosol cans containing CFCs was ordered, I, like many other people, thought that the problem had been resolved - only to find out years later that I was pipe-dreaming. The spore idea definitely belongs to a future technology that will need extensive research development, but until now, there has been really nothing - no viable idea at all to handle the situation before it becomes uncontrollable."

Welch is definitely not alone in his thinking. Researchers at Utah and Michigan State Universities affirm that the use of spores is not outside the realm of possibility. They are currently working with a natural fungus whose spores detoxify DDT, the deadly chemical dioxin, and other poisons, resulting from modern industrial chemistry.

Recently, U.S. industry was also able to develop a bacteria that lives on ocean oil spills. It may not be long before an airborne pollutant-eating bacterium could be developed. The trick is to design it so that it exclusively eats pollutants, and when done with that, eats itself, and so vanishes.

Welch is optimistic though. "Our scientists are pretty good actually, and taking a cue from L. Ron Hubbard's MISSION EARTH they may come up with something to handle the crisis. It's a good time for everyone to put their shoulders to the same wheel."

Aggressive Recruiting Campaign For Nurses Has Overwhelming Response

The School of Nursing at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is addressing the shortage of nurses through an aggressive recruiting campaign, and responses are exceeding expectations. Dr. Marlene Rosenkoetter, dean of the School of Nursing, explained that since late June, posters about the nursing program at UNCW have been distributed to more than 300 hospitals and health care agencies in North Carolina as well as other eastern states from Florida to New Jersey. Posters featured a business reply card.

"To date, we have received 228 responses," Rosenkoetter said, "including 132 inquiries regarding the RN Access program designed for registered nurses to pursue their baccalaureate degrees and 96 inquiries about the generic nursing program."

Rosenkoetter expressed surprise and pleasure at the large number of responses in such a short time. She thinks the response is due to several factors.

This is a quality, innovative program in a growing university, in an attractive part of the country -- with a beach. This is a winning combination that appeals to young men and women who have just finished their associate degree or diploma programs and who are interested in relocation," she said.

Following accreditation in March by the National League for Nursing, the UNCW School of Nursing was listed in a national directory of accredited programs. As a result, telephone inquiries about the program are coming from all over the country.

When a response card or phone call is received by the UNCW School of Nursing, a brochure about the nursing program is mailed to each inquirer along with a letter signed by Rosenkoetter. University admissions material and applications forms are also sent, followed by information about the area with a letter from the Cape Fear Coast Convention and Visitors Bureau.

Other recruiting activities are planned for the fall, including visits to community colleges and high schools as well as speaking engagements by nursing faculty. Public service announcements are being developed for radio and television designed to show what modern nursing involves and to generate interest in the profession.

One event in particular has been planned to heighten awareness of the UNCW School of Nursing. Internationally known pediatrician and author T. Berry Brazelton will be on campus Nov. 30 for a free public lecture at 2 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium on the topic "What Every Baby Knows," also the title of his latest book. In addition to the public lecture, he will conduct a number of seminars for area health care professionals.

"The School of Nursing at UNCW is committed to helping ease the nursing shortage by offering quality professional education and by encouraging young men and women to consider the benefits of nursing career," Rosenkoetter said.

"We are working to attract RNs to our region who will want to work in local agencies while going on for a baccalaureate degree in nursing. Given the appeal of the area, we think many will choose to remain," she said.

"One of the biggest needs we have right now is for scholarships and emergency loan funds to help more nursing students pay for their education and thus increase the supply."

Individuals interested in obtaining a brochure or learning more about opportunities at the UNCW School of Nursing may call 919/395-3784.

Posture And Beds: Keys To A Healthy Back In The 80's

It's a good thing most of us are young when we go to college; otherwise our bodies couldn't stand the abuse.

Take your back, for example. Everything you do subjects your back to strain and stress--running from one class to another with tons of books in your arms, biking while carrying heavy backpacks and slouching over homework for hours.

No wonder by the time young people are in their late 20s, they join up to 80 percent of the population who suffer from back pain.

Everyone knows the benefit of good posture as we stand or sit, but better posture during the night also can be a big factor in preventing back aches, says Arthur Grehan, executive director of the American Innerspring Manufacturers, an association concerned with back pain prevention.

Better posture is achieved not so much by how you sleep, but on what you sleep.

"Research has shown that the best type of bed for the back is one that maintains the spine in its normal erect position while lying in a supine position," Grehan says.

In other words, while you are lying down, your spine should have a slight "S-curve" to it, just enough that you can slide your hand in the space between your lower back and mattress. Too much space indicates your mattress is too firm. Not enough space means your mattress is too soft.

Other tips you can follow to keep your back and body healthy are:

*Stand tall. Good posture is neither a relaxed, slumped-shoulder stance nor a military, shoulders-back stance. If you stand as tall as you can, the whole weight of your body will be straight up-and-down and squarely centered over your feet.

*Don't sit for long periods at a time. The cramped position you assume working at computer terminal or hunched over books is very taxing on your body. Take short breaks and stretch. Also, as you sit, try resting your feet on a book or two. If your knees are higher than your hips, some of the stress is taken off the back.

*Always stretch and warm up before exercising. Stretching exercises will help keep the body flexible and increase your range-of-motion.

Open The Book That Solves Problems.

You're in school—with a pile of books to plow through every week. So the last thing you need is another book, right?

Wrong. The Student Banking checkbook actually makes your life easier.

Much easier. Student Banking is a no-hassle checking account created expressly for you—at a time when you don't have much time to manage money.

Here's how it works:
No Surprises: You'll know exactly how much money will be deducted from your account in service charges each month. Just $3.00.

For just $3.00 a month, you can make up to 12 withdrawals from your account each month. You can make these withdrawals by check, at a First Citizens Bank "24" ATM or a combination of both.

You won't be hit by any extra charges as long as you make no more than 12 transactions per month.

Free Checks: To get you started, we'll give you 50 free checks, personalized with your name and address. (Hometown and major not included.)

Free ATM Card: With this card, you can withdraw cash anytime you need it. 24 hours a day. Use it for last-minute lab fees or late night pizza runs.

You'll find a First Citizens Bank "24" ATM on—or very near—your campus. You can also use your ATM card at 1,800 Relay™ ATMs in five Southeastern states. Great for road trips!

Keep in mind that you will be charged normal service fees for using ATMs other than First Citizens Bank "24" ATMs.

Free Check Safekeeping: We know you probably don't have a lot of space to spare, so we'll keep your cancelled checks each month so you don't have to store them.

And if you ever need a copy of a check, just come to your nearest First Citizens Bank and we'll provide you a certified copy of your check.

Special Perks: You'll receive a $1,000 life insurance policy—at no charge—when you open your account.

Plus, you'll receive discounts on rental cars at any Avis, Hertz or National car rental offices. Great for spring break!

Come by the First Citizens office near your campus and open a Student Banking account today. It just may be the most important book you open all year.

Editorials

The Seahawk would like to welcome everyone back to school and encourage everyone to get involved and do something.

We are in the process of implementing numerous additions to the newspaper at present and need you, the student body, to help.

First, we are going to have a View from Right and Left Field in which a topic will be given to writers from both the left and right field of politics, that writer will then express his/her views on that topic from their political standpoint. Anyone interested in either side is welcome to come by the Seahawk in Room 205 of the University Union to sign up.

We have also added a Personals section to the paper, a sample is on page seven. This section carries a charge of $1.00 for every 25 words and anyone is welcome to use it, faculty included.

The Classified section is going to be continued. Although not a newcomer to the Seahawk, it has dropped in popularity recently. The classifieds are there for the students and carry the same rates as the personals. Please don't hesitate to use us if you need to sell or buy something or even if something has been lost or found. It can't hurt at any rate.

Finally, for budgetary reasons we have had to cut Garfield and Peanuts. We hope this doesn't truly devastate anyone's life and apologize to those of you who wished we had kept it. We did keep Bloom County on account of threats from the staff to lynch those who thought of sacking it.

UNCW Parking Spaces, #1 Endangered Species

In the spring of 1988 the University Administration met at Shell Island Resort to discuss proposed graduate programs and various other matters that directly affect the University and its students.

One of the results of this great meeting was the elevation of parking fees for the upcoming school year. In essence, the Administration decided that our decals would now cost $50, a new high for the school. This in itself was not such a bad idea in light of the fact that these fees are used directly to provide us with stop signs, roads and parking lots, yes parking lots.

It is a shame that this rise in parking fees has done little to help the student at this point in time. Currently the parking lot between the Behavioral Science building and the Library has been eliminated to make way for a sidewalk that will connect the Library and the New Cafeteria. Many more faculty and staff parking spaces have been added to that same parking lot as well as the lot behind the Behavioral Science building and the lot between the current cafeteria and the University Union. These spaces were simply taken away from the students and painted yellow for the faculty and staff.

It is fair to say, however, that the faculty and staff did indeed need more spaces in which to park, but so did the students. There were supposed to have been at least 550 more parking spaces for the students this semester. It is apparent that this proposal did not go through or at least has not been completed.

This problem has caused undue stresses for those who live on campus as well as those who commute. Those who commute, once their allotted parking spaces have run out, must park in the lots provided for the on-campus residents and when their spaces run out where are they to park?

In addition those who cannot find room to park must either park illegally and face a fine or miss their class.

This situation must truly be resolved if this University has any intention of growing. It currently seems to be 'biting off more than it can chew' with its parking plans.

COMMENTARY

Greetings!

It gives me great pleasure as Student Body President to welcome you to our fine University. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your acceptance to UNCW. I am confident that your decision will prove to be most rewarding in the future.

Since my enrollment in 1985, I have witnessed a tremendous growth in UNCW. Not only are there new buildings being constructed each year, but also our increasing enrollment of intelligent, motivated people such as yourself. The expansion of academic programs here on campus has provided for the student a greater diversity in educational challenges allowing our graduates a wider range of future opportunities.

I would like to challenge you to make the most out of your college experience. There are over sixty registered organizations on campus in which you may choose to participate. Get involved to better enhance your stay here at UNCW.

There are many opportunities for student involvement through Student Government. Regular elections are held each semester for students interested in becoming elected members of the SGA. There are campus committees that any registered student can serve on. Students can also help in the planning of annual activities scheduled through the SGA office.

The saddest aspect of campus life is apathy. This places the student at a distance from his environment and is the primary cause of stagnant problems on this campus.

Many corporations in the job market look for extracurricular activities as well as grades, after all what good is a 4.0 average in anything if you can't relate yourself to other people or share their ideas. That is what involvement is all about and it's up to you as an individual to take charge of your life and live up to your full potential as a person.

Your Student Government office is located in the University Union, room 200. I encourage you to stop in and offer us any ideas or suggestions or to just see where we are located.

Once again, congratulations and welcome to UNC-Wilmington.

With Seahawk Pride,
Karla F. Alston
SGA President

Rambling Advice From A Senior

By Chad Adams
Managing Editor

I will spare the welcome to UNCW routine because I'm sure you've heard it from countless sources already.

Without further adieu I'll acquaint you with one of the not so wonderful aspects of this wonderful University that you haven't heard about.

First, expect the parking administration to be as tough as ever. They are marvelous at finding an illegally parked vehicle. You may think that you will fare well and that it's easy to avoid tickets. My first roommate thought so to until he amassed over $200 in $5 parking fines. Hard to believe isn't it, just wait, your time is coming!

While I have the chance to fill your head with more wonderful democratic propaganda, I will.

The comic in the lower right hand corner is appropriate for this page for it reflects a common occurrence at the Seahawk, complaints.

Please realize that the editorials and columns reflect opinions, not universal truths. They are opinions that usually challenge, commend, or criticize actions and policies of the University and its students.

If you have an opinion please write a letter to the editor. I cannot stress to you enough the importance of these letters. They prove to us at the Seahawk that the student populace:

- 1) Reads the paper occasionally,
- 2) Has an intellect and is therefore capable of forming an opinion.

3) Actually cares about this University and isn't just for the waves.

I've been here for three years and wish I could stay for about twenty more. This is a great place to start a career. Most importantly, don't let your schooling interfere with your education.

Common Comments And Complaints Ala Rick

Welcome back! For all of you freshmen: How are y'all doing?

I do quite a bit of listening on campus, and I'm not talking about listening to professors. I listen to conversations and complaints as I walk around campus, and I occasionally hear whining. Yes, believe it or not—whining. I'm going to make a list of comments or complaints which you are sure to hear this semester, and a list of comments which you are sure not to hear.

First of all, here is my list of the comments and complaints which you will hear if you listen closely. Feel free to cut this out and check them off as you hear them.

1. I'm so tired.
2. I can't wait until Friday.
3. I hate this class.
4. I almost didn't come to class today.
5. I'm going to really buckle down an study this semester.
6. I wish this class wasn't so early.

7. I wish this class wasn't so late.
8. I hope he/she let's us go early.
9. That professor is a ##&^*!@!
10. I can't believe we have a test already.
11. I have three tests Friday, what am I going to do?
12. I'm going to fail this test.
13. I'm going to fail this test and I don't care.
14. I got wasted at Red Dog's last night.

17. That professor is too hard. Doesn't he realize that we have other classes too?
18. School sucks!
19. I've got to go right to work after this class.
20. Work sucks!
21. I need a drink.
22. It took forever to find a parking spot!
23. I can't believe that I paid fifty bucks for a parking sticker and there's nowhere to park.
24. It's not fair that the professors get the parking spots near the building.
25. I can't believe the semester is almost over.
26. It's about time.
27. If I ace the final, I just may pass.

School: More Than Grades For A Job

By Bob Haywood

"Wake up, or die without a clue!" This is my current favorite T-shirt slogan. I had some plans to have large banners with that slogan hung over all the entrances to the University as everyone came back to begin this fall semester, but then I decided that the University Administration might have some objectives!

It is an ongoing frustration for me to see that the beginning of a new school year is, for so many students, little more than a plodding process of going to classes, working and trying to get a degree. On the surface, this is what the University is all about: education. But underneath this surface agenda is another whole arena of interior activity to which we must pay more and more attention if we ever hope to have a life that is characterized by a deep sense of meaning and joy.

For students, the university years are much more than the educational process made up of our class schedules and academic records. It is a time where we have more opportunity and resources than we will perhaps find at any other time of our life to engage in increasing our self-awareness, reflecting on our values, shaping our dreams and making changes in our thoughts and behavior that hold promise of increased richness in living. I have heard so many talking about their reason for being here simply being to get adequate grades and get a job that will bring good money. What a narrow and limited perspective on the possibilities of our life! There is so much more that can happen here and in our future.

But we have to Wake Up! We have to wake up to the possibilities that surround us. It means going to class not just to take notes and get out of there in fifty minutes, but letting ourselves be engaged by some of the material and seeking out another student or, God forbid, even a professor to ask questions and engage in conversation. It means that when you run into questions or teaching that seriously challenge your faith, you don't run away and drop the class, but take the question seriously and find avenues to explore them so that your faith can get bigger and stronger. It means that when you run into a lifestyle that is radically different from your own that you begin to raise questions with yourself like, "What is important to me?" "Why am I reacting like I am to this person and do I really want to react this way?" It means increasing your awareness at the places where you feel inadequate and nervous and determining to find the resources to come to grips with yourself. It means realizing that there is much more to life than what simply appears before you on any given day.

As you come to the university or return to the university this semester, you are setting out once again on what can be a fantastic and exciting journey. One of my deepest desires is to be fully human and fully alive and to die with few regrets and no feeling of "oh, I wish I had . . .". All of us are busy, all of us have struggles and problems to deal with and too many of us use these issues to miss all the opportunities that surround us to grow, become more self-aware and intentional, to sink into the interior dimension of our spirit, all of which would help us to break out of self created mental prisons that inhibit us from the fullness and the joy that is possible to each of us.

Wake up! Wake up to all the possibilities that surround you. Wake up to all the excuses, all the "yes, but . . ." that you use to stop yourself from growing. Wake up or die without a clue.

Willie And Kool Invade Trask

By Rick Cairns

Kool And The Gang Appear Saturday

By Rick Cairns
Entertainment Editor

Robert "Kool" Bell and the Gang are coming to Trask Auditorium! Not many headliners of this caliber visit Wilmington, so take advantage of it. The Gang will perform Saturday, September 3 at 8:30 p.m. The Kool and the Gang concert will be the first of a series of concerts planned throughout the end of the year. Yarg Promotions has promise to bring the thrill of live entertainment to the Wilmington area on a regular basis.

Kool and the Gang promises a sound and light show like Wilmington has never seen. It is billed as a "Labor Day Celebration."

Kool and the Gang has established themselves in the 1980's as the top pop group of the decade -- a fact broadcast world-wide by the countdown show American Top 40 in 1986. Their tally for the decade now numbers 16 top forty hits, including the recent smashes "Victory" and "Stone Love."

Three of their singles have turned into standards, first, in 1980, "Celebration" which has become one of the most played and recognizable songs of our time. "Joanna" was named by BMI as the most-played pop song of 1984. And "Cherish" was named the top adult/contemporary song of 1985 by Radio and Records.

Kool And The Gang give a message in their music: "Work constructively toward long term goals, cherish long term relationships, value the spiritual, then celebrate!" That's why their new album, Forever, is an album of affirmation. Robert "Kool" Bell explains the feeling behind some of Forever's songs, "Victory," he says, "is about success in life," and "God's Country" is a song that comes from the idea that we've been blessed with one more tomorrow to do things we need to do in life."

I don't see how the show can't be thrilling; it promises to be the highlight of the Labor Day weekend.

Why not be at Trask Saturday night?

Tickets are available at School Kids Records, and at the Thalian Hall Box Office.

Red Headed Stranger Coming

That's right--Willie Nelson will perform at Trask Coliseum, Tuesday, September 6th at 8:00 p.m. The concert is a benefit for Hospice and is co-sponsored by Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

The legendary Nelson's major breakthrough was his 1975 album, Red Headed Stranger, and has been one of America's most popular entertainers since.

Nelson takes pride in his charitable contributions, especially Farm Aid which he helped mastermind.

Nelson was born April 30, 1933 in Abbott, Texas and began writing songs at the tender age of seven. "I always seem to be able to write the sad side of everything," says Nelson. It was always easy for me. The playing's the fun, the writing's the work" he added.

Nelson has recorded numerous albums as well as starred in many motion pictures. His live concert tour keeps him on the road 200 days a year. When not performing, Nelson resides in Austin, Texas where golf is his favorite pastime.

Students can purchase their tickets at the union for $15. Non students can purchase their tickets for $20 at various locations.

Married To The Mob (R) had its moments, but little else in the way of good comments can be made. I hope for the producer's sake the Mafia has a very good sense of humor.

Angela DeMarco (Michelle Pfeiffer) wants out of her marriage. She gets out--her husband is "iced" by his "family", the mob. The FBI has been tailing the leader of the family, Tony Russo (Matthew Modin). Tony is seen with Angela in a passionate embrace on the day of her husband's funeral. Naturally, the FBI thinks Angela was a co-conspirator with Tony in a plan to kill Frankie. Things are downhill from there. The tumbling of the case by special agent, Mike Downey (Dean Stockwell), the hysterical chasings by Russo's jealous wife, Connie (she thinks Tony is having an affair with Angela, also) and the final capture at the end of the movie all seem to be a little too "precious". The satire is lost in the shuffle. This flick is good for a slight chuckle or two, but don't expect much more.

Betrayed, (R) stars Debra Winger as FBI special agent, Kathy Weaver a.k.a. Katy Phillips and Tom Berenger as a mixed up farm boy, Gary Simmons. The movie starts with a liberal radio disk jockey being assassinated and the letters "Z-O-G" being written over his corpse. Weaver's job is to find out who the assassins are and what the letters stand for. She does that all well and good, but falls in love with Simmons who believes in everything she stands against. Such irony of events during the entire movie almost becomes too much, but its choke-hold is lessened by the actors and the tension they are aptly portraying. This certainly is a picture worth seeing.

We, The Mediocre . . .

I've been asked to write some sort of description for this section on alternative music for people who turn pale with FEAR at the thought of listening to another second of bland, lifeless, meaningless, and utterly unimaginative COMMERCIAL RADIO in Wilmington, N.C. . . .

Well, that's a start. This column is going to be devoted to NEW MUSIC which offers some alternative. All of these albums and bands mentioned can be heard on the UNCW campus radio station WLOZ (90.9 cable-fm). I'll be doing record reviews as well as keeping up with progressive music information (bands in the area and more). I imagine this "thing" will develop as it goes along (I hope it will develop).

LET'S ACTIVE "Every Dog Has His Day (IRS)"

Mitch Easter is North Carolina's own residential recording genius, and probably the leader of the whole Southern Pop phenomenon. His studio has been instrumental in the success of everyone from REM to Feist/Bones. Easter's band, Let's Active, is his own creation and has already achieved national success. "Every Dog," Let's Active's third full length LP, is bound to lift the band to BIG, big time. Unfortunately, it's also a bit more produced and polished which gives the overall recording a slicker feel. "Every Dog" doesn't have the innocence or character of Mitch's last effort, "Big Plans, For Everybody." But there are still plenty of Easter-like, hook oriented, Beatle influenced, 60's-panisley-pop sounds to make all his fans HAPPY. Go ahead and buy it, before it sells out.

HAPPY FLOWERS "I Crush Bozo" (Homestead Records)

What can you say about a band that sounds as if they're playing inside a rotating cement mixer while wired to a 440 volt cattle prod? Is this music? Use the word "music" loosely because HAPPY FLOWERS is about as melodic as a push mower. These two guys don't have a bumper crop of talent instrumentally, but they make up for it with a unique perspective on the hazards of adolescence. Song titles range from "I Saw My Picture on a Milk Carton" to "My Frisbee went under a Lawnmower." This album works because these guys don't take themselves too seriously. . . . thank God. A MUST buy for anyone looking for the demented, yet humorous, side of the new music scene.

NAKED RAYGUN "Jettison" (Caroline Records)

NAKED RAYGUN is a highly acclaimed band from the Chicago area which happens to be filled with an abundance of excellent bands. This is their 3rd LP and one of the most solid releases this year. They combine power chord, rhythm oriented, Buzz saw electric guitar with a fairly hook oriented song structure. Vocals include a lot of "Ooah Ooo's" which is reminiscent of the 70's punk movement. This record was extremely popular on the college radio chart; it made it to #1 on WLOZ's Top 50 rotation. MUST BE PLAYED AT TOP VOLUME on general principles.

PIXIES "Come On Pilgrim/Suffer Rosa" (Roughtrade 14 AD)

This is a band for the 90's, and their college radio success has been astounding after just two albums done in a year's time! They draw some comparisons in quirkiness to the Violent Femmes, but definitely have their own style. This "style" is a mixture of sorts from powerful buzzing guitar to quirky, yet melodic, and Spanish and the two vocalists (male and female) work together to produce a combination of scream and whine that actually works. The PIXIES are unique without being too obscure. Two GREAT buys!

WORLD DOMINATION ENTERPRISES "Let's Play Domination" (Caroline Records)

Best industrial, dissonant, chainsaw-gone-bust guitar since BIG BLACK or THE JESUS AND MARY CHAIN. These guys rip and mutilate their guitars creating sounds akin to the screaming death of a herd of hyenas run around by a corn harvester. Vocals sound like Adam Ant talking after his face was smashed in by some 66" buckethead. Some "funky" covers are included (they mutilate a L.L. Cool-J-Song) but the originals are better. They would be well-advised to drop the hip-hop influence and wallow in pure demented dissonant FILTH.

For album information call WLOZ at 395-3086.

Special to the Seahawk

National TM Lecturer Ed Hipp will give an Introductory Lecture on Transcendental Meditation (TM) Thursday, September 8, at 7:30 p.m. in room 206 of the Student Union. Mr Hipp will speak at UNCW as an extension of his North Carolina lecture tour. He has lectured to 150 Wilmingtonians and has appeared on several local TV and radio shows. His trip to Wilmington has spurred the organization of the Wilmington TM Association, a non-profit group of the 50 meditators in Wilmington to encourage the use of TM.

The purpose of the September 8 lecture will be to educate the university community about the benefits of TM in student life. It will be free and open to the public. For those wishing to learn how to meditate, there will be a four day TM course, for an hour and a half each day beginning Saturday September 10. The cost of the course is $145 for students.

TM has been the subject of over 300 scientific studies at leading universities and research institutions. These studies show that TM produces a unique state of restful alertness in the mind and measurable relaxation in the body. Research further shows that the release of stress and expansion of mental potential afforded by TM causes many benefits during daily activity. Not a philosophy, religion, or life style, TM is a simple, natural mental technique that is practiced for 20 minutes, morning and evening. It has been learned by over 3 million people around the world from all ages, professions, personality types, levels of successfulness, and religions.

Some of you may know me through my column I've written for the past year. I'm still writing the column, and am also the entertainment editor.

I am attempting to entertain all types of students. I added a weird fact column--This "Won't Be On The Test", and a column by Kelly Holsten of WLOZ which covers the progressive

If you feel that you have any writing ability--come on up to the Seahawk office and talk to me. If reviewing bands an plays interests you--this job's for you.

TM in Education:

"After learning TM, my grades improved tremendously. I became an A student in college. TM gave me a sense of self-sufficiency which allowed me to improve personal habits and begin to excel."

Richard Ruth, Student Research findings have shown increased learning ability, broader comprehension, greater ability to focus and increased intelligence growth rate with TM.

TM in relationships:

"Being very shy, I found that TM did wonders for me. It gave me more confidence and security and a sense of well-being. It enabled me to open up to relate to people more spontaneously." . . . Charly Stember, Model Research has shown that TM promotes better relationships in the work place, more time competence, less inhibition, more spontaneity, greater self-regard, and reduced tendency for irritability and depression.

TM in Health:

"I have recommended the TM technique to a number of patients with hypertension, headaches, and stomach aches."

Fenner: Student Or ATHLETE?

"In search of a good school? One with a strong academic background? Are you afraid you will not be admitted due to a sagging SAT score that was almost tripled by the number of yards you gained rushing the football last season? Were you once a prominent big-time Division I All-Conference performer whose forgivable infatuation with crime participation now has you without a field to play on? If the above is true, then fret no longer. Our home is your home. Our home is Gardner-Webb."

No this is not an actual advertisement, but it very well could have been. Especially if, as a sophomore, you were fortunate enough to lead your conference in rushing. Especially if you were accused of murder and convicted of possessing cocaine. Especially if you happen to be Derrick Fenner.

The last time you probably saw Mr. Fenner, he was gliding up and down the sidelines of Kenan Memorial Stadium, donned in the shade of blue that is unmistakably Carolina. However, more recently, Mr. Fenner has been spending more time in a Maryland District Court than the friendlier, more familiar, confines of Chapel Hill in a vain attempt to re-establish, what has to be by now, a quickly eroding credibility. Silly things like killing people, and using drugs have a funny way of doing that. That was more than two years ago.

Enter Gardner-Webb. While Mr. Fenner was worrying whether or not he would be spending the next few years in a quiet cell, Gardner-Webb had a much more pressing problem. Who in the world could they find, with such short notice, the season being a mere month away, to cavalierly rescue his troops of yet another non-contending season?

In accepting Fenner, they did the community a major injustice. In an age where sports corruption is more in vogue than class assassination, when First Lady's are screaming "Just Say No", Gardner-Webb says yes. You knew sooner or later it was bound to happen. It was simply a matter of time before a coach, whose contract may be in jeopardy, who values athletics more so than academics, would challenge the integrity of college athletics by allowing this criminal into its program.

Oh no? You believe differently? You actually believe that the Chancellor, out of the kindness of his heart, rather than his checkbook, honestly foresaw this student as something other than an academic mishap. Perhaps he overlooked Fenner's highly impressive $50 SAT score. Perhaps he overlooked Fenner's high school transcript which, despite the alarming number of non-collegiate preparatory classes taken, barely met the required minimum entrance level GPA of 2.0.

Furthermore, following Fenner's dismissal from the UNC football team, it was learned that due to scholastic shortcomings he would have likely been placed on academic probation anyway. There is absolutely no substantial evidence in Fenner's record that would seem to indicate an adequate opportunity at enjoying academic success at any institution, so why the second chance? Have we reached a point where athletic prosperity is so paramount that we must resort to these types of unscrupulous tactics in the unrelenting challenge of pleasing our Booster Club?

It is past time for the leaders of our universities to stand up, united as one voice, and "Just Say No" to the prima donnas of the sporting world. Carolina did, and I admire that.

I believe everyone deserves a second chance, including Derrick Fenner, but I also believe that everyone needs to repay society for the inconveniences it causes.

And just to prove that I can be as sensitive as the next Chancellor, I too, would allow Mr. Fenner to attend my university as well. There would be only one small, minutely important, stipulation: no football. You see, Mr. Fenner, instead of going to jail for the crimes you committed, I would send you to a place I believe you would find just as disgusting. The classroom!

Justice is indeed swift and merciless.

UNCW Soccer Looks To Cresswell

By Chris Wright
Sports Editor

There is an old adage in sports that relies on the premise that defense wins ballgames. Assuming this school of thought is true, then UNCW Head Coach Jackie Blackmore's 1988 edition of the Seahawk Soccer team may agonizingly boot its way through another losing season.

What Blackmore may be counting on, however, is another adage that states "the best defense is a good offense."

Showcasing All-CAA conference performer, midfielder David Cresswell, the youthful Seahawks promise to bring to Brooks Field an offense that is potentially explosive. Cresswell, one of only three returning seniors, should combine with Sophomore Chris George to give UNCW one of the top 1-2 punches in the conference. Cresswell and George, who has recovered from a season-ending injury of a year ago, accounted for the vast majority of the 1987 points scored. And while Coach Blackmore realizes that with a year's more experience, other players, such as Sophomore Mike Gercis, should contribute a great deal more toward the potency of the offense, he concedes that in order to win consistently, he'll need a Herculean effort from All-South selectee Cresswell. "I'm sure David will have a great year," Blackmore noted. "He knows he will be the focus. He's our most experienced player and knows what role he has to play. We don't expect David to shoulder all of the load, but we'll be looking at him for leadership."

While graduation basically left the offense in tact, it wreaked havoc on the defense. There will be several new faces defending the net when the Hawks open play September 1, at Charleston, and experience, or the lack thereof, will go a long way in predicting the fortunes of this relatively young squad that returns just three lettermen on defense.

Gone are four seniors from last year's defense that gave up less than 1.5 goals per game, including four-year goalkeeper, and 1987 team MVP, Donnie Lewis. In his 67 games in a Seahawk uniform, Lewis recorded 17 shutouts and 351 saves, good for second place among all-time UNCW goalies. Blackmore will look to Sophomores John Pinter and Tom Redmond, in addition to JUCO transfer Buck Rowlee, to fill the void left by Lewis' graduation.

"We have some slots to fill on defense," Blackmore said. "I don't have any idea on the alignment at this point. We'll just see who can do the job." Returning senior fullback John Hollenbach will be looked upon to lead the defense. And though less experienced, junior Drew Pope and sophomores Marc Rose and Sean Wallace should provide capable assistance in Blackmore's revamped defensive scheme.

The Seahawk's outlook is probably not as bleak as it appears on paper. Last year's freshmen are this year's sophomores which means, if nothing else, the novelty of playing your first game away from home should not be so dramatic. Additionally, the Hawk's overall performance will not necessarily be indicative of their performance on the field, as once more, the CAA, perennially considered to be one of the finer soccer conferences in the country, will boast a competitive race for the conference championship. And while winning the conference may be a bit unrealistic, UNCW will hope to attain a successful season by finishing in the top half of the division.

UNCW Names Assistant Coach

From staff reports

Mike Elbe, the former assistant basketball coach at St. Andrews College last season, has recently been called upon to join the ranks as an assistant to UNCW Head Coach Robert McPherson.

McPherson, hoping to fill the vacancy left by former assistant Cletus Green, announced earlier this week that Coach Elbe, "will be an asset to the program. He was a hard-nosed competitor in college, and he has a good basketball background. We're looking forward to his contributions in the program."

Elbe, whose credentials include a year-long stint as a graduate assistant for the University of South Alabama in 1987, will assist the Seahawk staff with on-campus recruiting, video resources, academic guidance, and local promotions. Additionally, his responsibilities will include the more traditional roles as practice and game day instructional.

McDaniel Continues Successful Volleyball Program

Sports Information

In four years at UNC Wilmington, Kathy McDaniel has overseen the development of the university's volleyball program into a regional power.

McDaniel has won nearly 60 percent of her matches since landing in the Port City in 1985. Her 60-38 overall record is the best career mark among UNCW coaches and includes upper division finishes in the Colonial Athletic Association her first three seasons.

A 1981 graduate of UNC Greensboro, where she played volleyball and softball, McDaniel was also an assistant coach for the men's volleyball team while an undergraduate student at UNCG.

McDaniel moved on to Appalachian State University following graduation and served four years as an assistant volleyball coach and three years as assistant softball coach. The Lady Mountaineers won the Southern Conference volleyball championship in 1982.

McDaniel heads into her fourth season at UNC Wilmington with a school record 60 victories under her belt. She is responsible for UNCW's smooth transition into the NCAA Division I ranks.

The addition of an assistant coach, a top-notch conditioning program and a rigorous schedule have been offshoots of the successful program.

SGA Elections will be held Monday, September 12. All registered students are urged to come out to vote. Voting can be done at the Union, Bell Hall, and the Cafeteria.

Graduate Programs Approved

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington received approval in late June from the UNC Board of Governors to establish new master's degree programs in biology, chemistry, English, history, mathematics and a Master of Arts in Teaching. This formal approval to proceed comes after several years of planning the new graduate offerings.

Chancellor William H. Wagoner, who attended the meeting in Chapel Hill, said, "This is another milestone in the history of Wilmington College and The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. These graduate programs will serve us well in Southeastern North Carolina and the state in general."

"During the 1988-89 academic year, the dean of the Graduate School will work with the academic departments to prepare for the implementation of the newly-approved programs," said Dr. Charles L. Cahill.

UNCW provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs, "The university intends to start offering courses in each of the programs as soon as preparations are completed. Fall 1989 is the anticipated start-up semester."

Dr. James McGowan, who has served for the past year as acting dean of the graduate school and was actively involved in the development of the new programs, said this is significant because "the people in this region will have realistic access to education at this level. Until now, people wanting this level had to travel to the Piedmont. This will mean that most will have a half-hour drive instead of a three-hour drive," he said.

In terms of long range impacts, McGowan said, "Through the master's programs, we will start elevating the mind-set of the region. The philosophical base supports the idea that this program will ultimately lead to better teachers, better high school students, and better professionals."

The six new master's programs will expand the university's graduate offerings in the liberal arts field, and will permit secondary school teachers to pursue the master of arts in teaching in five specialty areas. Most of these programs will be designed to accommodate people in the evenings, McGowan said.

At present, students may enroll in programs of study at UNCW leading to the Master of Science degree in Geology, the Master of Science degree in Marine Biology, the Master of Business Administration degree, and the Master of Education degree in Elementary Education, in Educational Administration and Supervision, in Reading Education, and in Special Education. During spring semester, 1988, 279 students were enrolled in graduate level courses.

Massachusetts Campuses Suffer Monetary Woes

By Julie Lanza
Special to the Seahawk

AMHERST, MASS (CPS) -- If he's elected president in November, Gov. Michael Dukakis will take with him education policies that have left students in Massachusetts with more financial aid and campuses with more buildings, but that have also gotten the state's public colleges in deep budget troubles.

This fall, for example, some schools are turning away students, replacing teachers with computers and raising tuition 8.5 percent -- a higher price hike than the national average of 4 percent -- to cope with deep budget cuts.

In general, the Dukakis administration has been both a boon and a bust for colleges and universities.

The boons have been considerable: since beginning his second term in 1982, after a four-year absence from the governor's office and a stint teaching at Harvard, Dukakis has raised student aid, faculty salaries and the budgets of other programs on public campuses to promote his high tech agenda for the state's economy.

As the federal government reduced aid to students, the Dukakis administration picked up the slack: since 1983 the state's scholarship fund, for example, jumped from $19 million to $84 million.

Earlier in 1988, moreover, Dukakis signed legislation to initiate more than $400 million in massive construction, maintenance and repair projects on several campuses, a bill that was a top priority for education officials.

"I think we were treated reasonably fairly," said Franklin Jenifer, chancellor of the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Yet Massachusetts students and administrators maintain they're frustrated by what they see as a bias toward private institutions, by scandals that pushed several campus presidents out of jobs and by Dukakis's failure to maintain adequate operations budgets for state colleges.

Jenifer, for one, said operating budget cuts have almost paralyzed the state higher education system.

Public campuses will receive $638 million this year, $21.3 million less than last year. Current operating budgets are "not conducive to maintaining programs," Jenifer said.

Fitchburg State President Vincent Mara called the reductions the most severe blow to public institutions since the state's fiscal crisis during Dukakis's first term in 1975.

Several schools say they'll accept fewer students this year because of financial woes. To save money, they'll cut back on teaching assistants, freeze faculty hiring and top maintenance funds to try to provide the same level of services as last year.

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst, the state's flagship public university with more than 20,000 undergraduates, is charging students a special one-time $230 fee to raise emergency cash.

Students throughout the state public system face an 8.5 percent tuition hike in the coming year and a substantial increase in dormitory fees.

Many University of Lowell students will receive instruction from computers, instead of faculty members, in order to cut costs. Those students will have to pay a $100 fee to use computer labs.

"Without the faculty we have to do something," said President William T. Hogan.

It could get worse. State campus budgets, Dukakis said during a March hearing on college savings bonds, "cannot be expected to continue to grow at anything like the rate they have over the past few years."

Some students, however, are upset most by Dukakis's support of a measure that would allow schools to keep excess revenues generated by tuition hikes. The "tuition retention" plan, student leaders say, encourages colleges to raise their prices.

"We all think he's not sensitive enough," said Michael Ferrigno, director of the State Student Association of Massachusetts. "It pains us. This policy, we believe, is really a Republican policy."

And Vincent McGrath, president of the State College Faculty Association and a Salem State College professor, said tuition increases are often determined by what private colleges charge, even though private schools "can't keep their own costs down."

McGrath also thinks Dukakis tends to bow to the traditional dominance of private colleges in Massachusetts.

"We aren't California, we're not Texas and we're not Michigan," Dukakis said during a 1986 Boston Globe interview. "We do happen to have some of the finest (private) institutions in the world. And I don't think it makes sense for us to duplicate that (by building up public colleges)."

The remark infuriated many educators and students. Stanley Rosenberg, a Democratic state representative from Amherst, said the UMass community still feels betrayed.

"The governor has clearly done and said things over time which have given rise to concern and annoyance among people in western Massachusetts," Rosenberg said.

Yet, he quickly added, the Dukakis terms have been "a good time" for UMass, noting that $141 million of the recently signed capital improvements bill will go to the Amherst campus alone.

Rosenberg credits Dukakis with saving the multi-million dollar capital outlay proposal from a legislature that had doomed it.

But in a letter circulated to fellow educators and published in the Chronicle of Higher Education earlier this year, Wesleyan University Prof. Robert Wood, a long-time Dukakis foe, credits the Massachusetts legislature alone with providing real support for higher education in the Bay State.

And critics, including the Bush campaign, have noted a certain "slowness factor" on the state's public campuses.

Activities Hailed A Success

By Scott Wheeler
News Editor

The mass of people that you saw out in front of the University Union this Wednesday was there to discover about all of the different organizations and activities that are offered to the students on this campus. The whole affair, dubbed "The Activities Fair", is put on every year by the Student Activities office.

Todd Shaver, new Student Activities Advisor, and his staff in are responsible for the tremendous success of the Activities Fair this year.

Shaver said that he was unsure as to how long the fair had been in existence, but he was sure that it had been going on for at least the last five years.

"There are seventy registered clubs and organizations here on the campus and fifty-one of them reserved a table for this fair," said Shaver. "The actual logistics took place over a span of about three weeks. We contacted the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce and they, in turn, contacted some of the local merchants including the two radio stations that played out here today."

"The radio stations, WHSL and B100 were kind enough to donate the services of their mobile DJ's."

It has been estimated that about one thousand people showed up for Wednesday's activities. Although five organizations signed up for a table and did not display their wares, the whole Activities Fair has to be considered a success. "I think it's wonderful that all of the clubs and organizations have an opportunity to show what they're all about and invite the students to come out and get involved," said Pat Leonard, Dean of Students for UNCW.

Some of the various clubs and organizations that were represented at the fair include the many Greek organizations, some of the clubs here on campus, and quite a few of the area retailers.

"I've been out here since eleven o'clock and I've seen and talked to a lot of people about our fraternity. Our goal here today is to get as many people interested in joining Chi Phi as we possibly can," said Chi Phi President, Rob Sappenfield, a senior.

Scott Walker, a brother in the fraternity, said, "A lot of interested people have stopped by to ask questions about the different aspects of fraternal organizations."

Sitting in for the Panhellenic council, which is the governing body for UNCW's different sororities, were Elizabeth Peacock and Shelley Garrison. They

Student Governments To Convene

532 student government presidents, campus newspaper editors, and state student associations, representing all 50 states and the District of Columbia, today issued a call to convene a National Student Conference on Voter Participation. The Conference, to be held in Washington D.C. September 30 - October 2, will focus on the importance of youth voter registration, education, and get-out-the-vote efforts nationwide.

"This is going to be a critical election for many issues of concern to students. The next Administration's decisions will set the course for the coming decade and into the next century, so we must mobilize and make ourselves heard this November," declared Rafael Zapata, student body president at the State University of New York at Binghamton.

The 1988 Conference is modeled on the highly successful 1984 National Student Conference on Voter Registration, which attracted 1500 participants and became the largest student gathering of its kind since the Vietnam War. The 1984 Conference, held at Harvard University in Massachusetts, resulted in the registration of over 500,000 new voters and helped to make 1984 the first year that voter participation among 18-24 year olds increases since 1972.

"While only half of the 27 million eligible 18-24 year olds in this country are registered to vote, many states make it more difficult for a student to register to vote than to register for the draft. This is a major reason why just 40 percent of young people voted in 1984 and only 22 percent participated in 1986" stated Carolyn Jones, editor-in-chief at The Daily Californian, Berkeley's student newspaper. "It's time for us to examine the nation's priorities in regard to our rights and responsibilities, and to start exercising those rights to influence policy makers on important issues."

Both Presidential candidates have been invited to speak to the national gathering of student leaders and activists. Congressional leaders and issue experts will address areas such as higher education, voter registration reform, AIDS, the environment, economic opportunity, foreign policy and arms control.

Workshops, led by many of the largest community voter registration organizations such as Project VOTE! and the NAACP, will teach students how to conduct effective voter participation drives. National student leaders will help students develop leadership skills, such as building effective campus coalitions and utilizing campus and community media. "The Conference will generate the excitement necessary to motivate campus organizers to make a final push to register students before the deadline, which is October 10 in most states. More importantly, we will be educating and training Conference participants on the essentials of effective voter education and get-out-the-vote campaigns," explained Fred Azcarate, president of the United States Student Association.

The National Student Conference on Voter Participation is being organized by the student-based Public Interest Research Groups (PIRGs), the United States Student Association (USSA), the National Student Campaign for Voter Registration (NSCVR), the National Student Educational Fund (NSEF), the GrassRoots Organizing Weekends Project (GROW), and the Student Empowerment Training Project (SET).

"With a close election at hand, this Conference will be the most significant youth-oriented political event of the campaign season" Catherine Crane, director of the National Student Campaign for Voter Registration, asserted. "We plan to put students and student issues back on the national political agenda in 1988."

Competition Held

Washington, D.C.: The seventh annual INTERNATIONAL STUDENT SCHOLARSHIP COMPETITION -- a nationwide essay competition for international students studying in the U.S. -- is now underway, reports Tom St. Denis, Vice-President of International Underwriters/Brokers, Inc., sponsor of the competition. First prize is $1,500 to be used for academic or professional advancement.

International Underwriters/Brokers, Inc., also will award $350 to the International Student office of the first-place winner. Deadline for the competition is December 1, 1988. International students interested in entering must submit an essay of no more than

1,500 words of the topic -- "Important cross cultural clues are often found in humor."

Compare humor in your country with humor as you find it in America. Include examples of humorous situations resulting from cross cultural misunderstandings, either in the U.S. or on your first visit back to your home country."

Winner of the 1987/88

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT SCHOLARSHIP COMPETITION was Cladia Franco Hijuelos of Mexico, who is studying at the School of Advanced International Studies, at John Hopkins University.

Scholarships Awarded

UNCW AWARDS 21 MINORITY SCHOLARSHIPS by Nancy K. Hill, staff writer

WILMINGTON -- Twenty-one minority students, representing 16 cities and 18 high schools across North Carolina, have accepted Minority Achievement Award Scholarships for the upcoming school year at UNC-Wilmington. These freshmen represent the fourth group of Minority Achievement Scholarship winners to be enrolled at UNC-W.

Valued at approximately $3,600 each, the awards finance tuition and fees and are renewable through the senior year, based on academic performance.

The Minority Achievement Award Scholarships are an extension of the minority Presence Grant Program, designed by the UNC system to attract freshmen minority students. UNC-Wilmington has expanded the program in an effort to provide additional financial assistance as well as an incentive to stay in.

admissions at UNCW said, "I am pleased that the program is continuing to draw a better and better profile of minority students." She also noted that Karla Alston, rising senior and member of the first year's group of award winners, has been elected 1988/89 Student Government Association president. Alston will graduate in the spring of 1989.

SGA Debate Centers On Drug Policy

By David Vaughn
Staff Writer

Tuesday night the Student Government Association met in the Hawk's Nest. The main topic on the agenda wasn't food, however, but a hot debate over the university's new drug policy.

Denny Best, Spring Rep-at-Large, drafted a resolution asking the SGA to oppose the university's anti-drug policy and instead "support [one] which would protect the student's rights of due process." This was because the university's stand "appears to be in violation of Federal and State law." Fall Rep Lee Barnhill debated in defense of the resolution.

Jeff Silverman, Parliamentarian, opposed the resolution, saying the right of the Chancellor to suspend a student who is suspected of dealing drugs was necessary in order to protect university students. Special Senator Stephen Reilly also spoke against the resolution.

Kristine Solomon, Junior Class Vice President, spoke about how easy it was to get in trouble with drugs as in guilt by association, but her words were lost in needless debate on an unrelated topic.

The next section of debate opened with Senator Kim Tracy stating that though students could be suspended or expelled on drug-related charges they could still appeal the decision. She further mentioned that the resolution before the Senate should be clarified so that it dealt with only the part of the drug policy the author disagreed with. Senior Class President Susan Wolfson mentioned that the dean was there to work with students, not against them, and that the Senate should not appear to dislike having any drug policy.

Fall Rep Monika Mohr moved to change lines 10-12 of the resolution to oppose Section VIII-5. B. 3. in the Student Handbook. Denny Best approved the change and Robert Smith, President of the Senate, read the Handbook section in question and answered questions about it. Approval to amend the resolution was objected and Senators Mohr and Reilly debated over the meaning of that section. Senator Silverman said that suspension hinges on "clear and immediate danger" to the university community. Senator Reilly made a point of saying that the clause was intended to confront dealers, not necessarily users. A hand count was taken to amend the resolution and it failed; the resolution also failed to pass.

In other business that night, Robert Smith asked for volunteers for the Student Organization Committee, which approves on-campus clubs. He also reminded the Senate that they need to appoint two Justices to the Student Supreme Court, and each class president needed to appoint one. Three Senators are also needed to serve on the Media Publications Board, which oversees WLOZ, the Atlantis, the Seahawk and the Fledgling. Robert also feels that the MPB should have more power to govern or watch over its publications so that what happened with the Seahawk last spring would not happen again. Election Board Chairman Tonya Taylor asked for volunteers to work at the polls September 12, and a new member was appointed to the committee.

In her address Karla Alston, President of the Student Body, reminded the Senators of their retreat at Regent's Resort on Topsail Island, September 23rd and 24th. She presented her list of committees and it was approved to go to the Chancellor. One senator said perhaps lack of information and communication was the reason that committee seats were vacant. Karla also presented her revised budget and proposed adding a phone to the SGA office. When Senator Tracy moved to allocate funds for this a quorum was called and not established. After announcements the meeting adjourned.

A copy of the failed resolution is available in the Seahawk office.

The Officers of the SGA have requested that their office hours be printed in the paper so that students can come and talk with them. President Alston is in her office Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays 1-5 and Tuesdays-Thursdays 9:30-10:30 and 2-5. Vice-President Smith is in his office MWF's 10-10:45, 12-2:45 and 4-5. Tuesdays 3-5 and Thursdays 2-5. Treasurer Coley is there every day 10-11:30 and 4-4:30, and Attorney General Mercer every day 10-10:50.

The SGA asks all the students to come out and vote September 12.

prison for fraud, two Westfield State College presidents have fallen to scandals in the last three years.

Administrators, moreover, think Dukakis will interfere in campus affairs if he feels his authority is threatened.

For example, they say Dukakis forcibly reshuffled the state Board of Regents in retaliation for naming Amherst Rep. James Collins, who he didn't like, as head of the public education system. The realigned board then fired Collins and hired Jennifer, a Dukakis loyalist.

were taking applications for the formal rush period which begins on Monday, September 11, and continues through Sept. 15. Shelley Garrison said of the sororities, "We are encouraging girls to go through the sorority rush because it helps to enhance their college experience and it also provides them with different avenues to meet new people."

Elizabeth Peacock added, "The sororities offer the girls a chance to meet new people through community service and philanthropy."

Samantha Douglass, a junior transfer student from Brevard, said, "I wanted to rush the sororities to meet new people and have fun. I haven't chosen any one particular sorority as of yet. I wanted to have a chance to check them all out before I take the big plunge."

A couple of juniors who were walking around at the fair, Debbie Burch and Amy Starling gave their impression of the fair, Burch said, "I think it is has been very informative and fun."

I worked at the College Republicans' table for an hour. I passed out a lot of information and met a lot of people," said Starling.

One of the non-sport organizations that had the chance to strut its stuff is the fledgling INCW Women's Soccer program. "A few years ago the women had a soccer team here on the campus of UNCW, but the program went under. Last year I put a women's soccer team together and I am here to drum up support for the team and to solicit some possible new members. Now we have twenty-three members and eighteen returning players to build our team from," said Imer Small, a sophomore, who is the spearhead of the women's soccer program.

"Killer!" said Tom Oppelt and Bob Roetger, both concurring on their summation of the day's events, with Roetger adding, "we got to look at the Republicans and (eat) some free pizza!"

Perhaps the whole thing can be best summed up in the words of Todd Shaver, who said, "The only thing that went wrong with today's events is that the wind is blowing a bit too hard." The opinion does have merit, for the day seemed to go according to schedule.

You're in school—with a pile of books to plow through every week. So the last thing you need is another book, right?

Wrong. The Student Banking check-book actually makes your life easier.

Much easier. Student Banking is a no-hassle checking account created expressly for you—at a time when you don't have much time to manage money.

Here's how it works:

No Surprises: You'll know exactly how much money will be deducted from your account in service charges each month. Just $3.00.

For just $3.00 a month, you can make up to 12 withdrawals from your account each month. You can make these withdrawals by check, at a First Citizens Bank "24" ATM or a combination of both.

You won't be hit by any extra charges as long as you make no more than 12

transactions per month.

Free Checks: To get you started, we'll give you 50 free checks, personalized with your name and address. (Hometown and major not included.)

Free ATM Card: With this card, you can withdraw cash anytime you need it. 24 hours a day. Use it for last-minute lab fees or late night pizza runs.

You'll find a First Citizens Bank "24" ATM on—or very near—your campus. You can also use your ATM card at 1,800 Relay™ ATMs in five Southeastern states. Great for road trips!

Keep in mind that you will be charged normal service fees for using ATMs other than First Citizens Bank "24" ATMs.

Free Check Safekeeping: We know you probably don't have a lot of space to spare, so we'll keep your cancelled checks each month so you don't have to store them.

And if you ever need a copy of a check, just come to your nearest First Citizens Bank and we'll provide you a certified copy of your check.

Special Perks: You'll receive a $1,000 life insurance policy—at no charge—when you open your account.

Plus, you'll receive discounts on rental cars at any Avis, Hertz or National car rental offices. Great for spring break!

Come by the First Citizens office near your campus and open a Student Banking account today. It just may be the most important book you open all year.

SGA Elections Should Be Held For At Least Two Days

The SGA elections for the fall semester are about to occur inducing the annual voter turnout not to exceed 14%. What is bad is that the students are not to blame completely for the problem at hand.

The election board has determined that the elections will only be held on one day, that day being Monday, September 12.

The national elections, it is true, are only held on only one day. That election is designed for a country that is based on a five day work week.

The date also does not occur on any religious holidays. Oddly enough the elections here are held on a major Jewish holiday, Rosh Hashana, and the students here are either based on a three day school week, a two day school week or a five day school week. Some students don't even come to school on Mondays. They use those days to work, take care of kids or study.

The election board did provide three locations this year as opposed to the usual one, but some progress isn't enough.

It wouldn't hurt to hold the elections over a two day period. More students would vote because they would be able to and also because they would be more likely to hear about the voting.

The fact that the election is held on one of the major Jewish holidays must have been an oversight, because it eliminates their vote.

Student Gets Much Needed Thanks For Work

Every once in a while there is a student who goes beyond the normal bounds of selfishness to do something for his fellow students that no one else in their right mind would dare to attempt. That outstanding deed is not necessarily in the field of academics, sports or the world in general.

In this case it is simply something that a person has done for the student body of UNCW as a whole that would probably go unnoticed.

That person is Ed Schiffler, known to his friends as Mr. Ed.

Schiffler is currently a senior at UNCW and has taken over the overwhelmingly tedious task of putting out a yearbook, the Fledgeling, for the past year as well as the year to come.

The Fledgeling experienced severe monetary problems in the past year and the staff has not returned, thus the school had no yearbook for the 1987-88 school year.

Schiffler took over in the late spring of that year and has worked through the summer to bring us a yearbook for both years.

In addition to his work with the yearbook, Schiffler has also done a tremendous job of helping out the Seahawk in its troubled times, hence the pictures that we attempt to present.

This is just a thanks to someone who would otherwise have gone unthanked. Thanks Ed.

Student Says People Not Parking Is Problem

Dear Editor

The semester has hardly begun and already I've lost count of how many people I've heard complain about parking on campus.

Friends and strangers alike mention to me that they sat in their car, in one of what I call, "the prime lots," waiting for someone else to leave. Or else they drove through all of the "prime lots" twice before giving up and parking in one of the "outside" lots.

This, of course, causes them to walk a whole three to five minutes to get to their class making them late.

True, this year we have less instead of the promised more, student parking spaces; but even with these additional spaces many students would still have to park in the outside lots. I profess that there is indeed a parking problem at UNCW. The problem is not, however, the number of spaces that exist, it is an attitude problem.

Poor old college students who don't want to get the slightest bit of exercise. I can understand that, exercise might work against that "beer belly" project that he or she may be working on.

I offer this simple solution. First of all, if you live at a place like Campus Edge, College Manor, Seahawk Square or anywhere close to campus, WALK !!!

If you live so far that you must drive, do what I do. Leave five minutes earlier than you have to; anticipate that all the "prime lots" are already full (with the eight o'clock class crowd who won't move their cars all day); park in one of the "outside" lots where there are plenty of spaces; and walk a few minutes to class. It won't kill you.

Someday this campus will be large enough to worry about how close to a particular building you park. But right now it's only a 15 minute walk between the two farthest points on campus. So we all can contribute to the problem we so often complain about - change your attitude - who knows the exercise might even do you a bit of good.

Pizzas Could Solve Apathy Problems

By Chad Adams
Managing Editor

Believe it or not, as the famous Ripley would have said, there is a cure for apathy. The solution is very simple.

First off, whenever you want people to participate in anything, give them free food as a form of payment for participation. It works for animals and the only thing that separates us from them is the term "homo sapiens" although I'm not so sure "the wise" applies to our lot.

If you turn an event into a job and give them something for doing it they respond much better.

A perfect example of this phenomenon was the activities fair this past week. I'm not saying that the fair was bad, to the contrary, the fair turned out great. I do imagine, however, that the fair would have had a substantial decrease in participation had there not been free pizza, subs, drinks and frozen yogurt. This is America, the glorious land of "what's in it for me" isn't it?

Also if something affects you, it really matters, but if it doesn't who cares. After all, you hear that other people get horrible diseases, but until it happens to you it doesn't really matter.

If someone doesn't like who's in office what do they do? Yeah, yeah they complain. Do they vote? In our age group (18-22), not really, somewhere in the neighborhood of 20% in some polls if that high. On campus the Current SGA president got elected by about 500 votes. With a student enrollment of 6,500 (minimal) that adds up to 14.3%. Good show UNCW.

It all boils down to whether or not you really care and if you do why not do anything about it. The SGA president is responsible for about $50,000 of your money, but who cares, right. Give everyone that votes a free pizza and we would probably have a voter turnout, the likes of which have never been seen on this campus.

The hottest current item of interest which will show how apathetic this campus truly is will be the new drug policy. If you don't know about it you should look into it. It will definitely capture the attention of some of you under twenty-one. After all, alcohol is a drug and you better not get caught with it if you fall into that age group on this campus.

The Other Side

By Rick Cairns
Columnist

Last semester I flew for the first time in eight years. The forensics team went to Arizona for Nationals. (And you wonder where your student fees go.) I expected improved comfort and new safety regulations; that wasn't the case.

Upon entering the plane (planing?) I immediately felt the cramped quarters. As I wedged into my seat I couldn't help but to think of basketball players on this jet. My knees felt as though they were hitting my chin, and I'm not a tall person. Before long, the flight attendant began her infamous little safety speech. She gracefully motioned her infamous little safety speech. She gracefully motioned her hands in every direction, pointing at "things" and muttered words such as "aft section" and "floatation devices". My ears perked up at the mention of floatation. She never mentioned the words "wreck" or "devastation," but the mention of floatation allowed them to seep into my head.

Even if you are flying where there are no bodies of water, they remind you about your seat cushion. They will come in handy if you land in a swimming pool! They showed us the phantom oxygen masks. Have you ever seen these masks? If they do exist I wonder if they are really connected to an oxygen tank. I think that they are connected to a wall and they are there to muffle your screams as you plummet to your death.

The safety instruction card makes for enlightening reading. It features a well dressed man making good use of his seat cushion. There's a picture of him floating serenely on his cushion with the jet sitting nicely upon the water behind him. He is alone and has a slightly perturbed look on his face, as if he's alone. A no smoking sign is beside him. I could picture him wanting to light up his soaked cigarettes, but he remembers the no smoking sign on the card he read earlier and refrains.

The card instructs us on the proper crash landing position. It reminds us to sit with our heads between our legs with our hands covering our heads. I wouldn't want to die in that position; I think that position is chosen so it will be easy to kiss your ass goodbye!

The flight attendant's must feel compelled to constantly offer you something to drink. When I gazed back to the "aft Section" of the plane and observed the narrow path to the lavatories, I decided to cut down on my liquid consumption. If another passenger is headed in your direction as you head for the john, you best be ready to know that person intimately. There is no way two people can slide by each other without making contact. I wouldn't have minded if I confronted a good looking female, but a sweaty fat guy with wet hands would head toward me every time I got up.

I would go crazy trying to work under those conditions. Fighting your way down a narrow aisle with a cart which is the same width, just to give a passenger a bag of peanuts. I would be too embarrassed to serve that mess that they refer to as a meal. I got turkey something with some kind of vegetable. If word would get out that prisons are now serving airline food, there would be a dramatic drop in crime. Undoubtedly, some "bleeding heart" liberal would start whining about cruel and unusual punishment.

On our way home, our good friends at Piedmont screwed up the seating arrangements and nobody had an assigned seat. It was mezzanine seating and I wound up next to a one-year old boy. Meanwhile, a couple of my teammates were sitting beside each other in first class scarfing on caviar, and I've got some brat screaming and drooling in my face. Piedmont made up for it though - they offered a free drink to everyone. (All drinks are free in first class.) Why do airlines think that a free drink makes up for everything? I wonder if that guy on the floatation device was offered a free drink for his troubles?

I shouldn't complain so much. After all, I arrived in one piece. I never had to place my head between my legs and I grew to enjoy fat sweaty guys with wet hands.

Stillpoint With Bob Haywood - Campus Minister

There's More To Life Than A Self Search

I bet there are many of you that think that Christianity is mainly about avoiding hell and going to heaven. It is not. Such a notion is too simplistic and makes the essential nature of the Christian faith too easy to turn off and walk away from.

I hope that as you engage in your college education, part of that education will find you seeking to unravel the issues that relate to your own personal spirituality and the place it plays in what you are seeking in life. Many of you come out of experiences in church that have been made up, in the main, of Sunday morning worship, Sunday school and perhaps a youth fellowship. Your beliefs, by in large, reflect all that you have been taught by your elders in the faith.

As in many other areas, your university days provide you with an opportunity to explore more deeply what you genuinely believe for yourself and how you understand what God is about in your life with all its hopes and fears, dreams and expectations. You are also aided by your present stage of psychological development which finds you working out your own identity distinct from your family and background. This is a wonderfully deep and rich time of life, fraught with all sorts of potential for growing in thought and faith. For non-traditional students, often something has happened that has brought you back to the university at a later period in life, but still open to discovering new perspectives for yourself.

I want to state as clearly and forthrightly as I can, my belief that we ignore our spiritual journey to our own detriment, not just in terms of discovering a deep sense of meaning for our lives. The fundamental question is not, "If you die today, do you know where you will be tomorrow?" The fundamental questions are two-fold: "who am I?" and "what is the source of an abundant life for me in this world in which I live?"

It is easy to stop going to church while in college. It is easy to find plenty of reasons on the religious scene for spoofing religion and having the excuse to turn it all off. I am here to say that it would be an incredible waste for you to explore any and all questions you have encountered on your own spiritual journey. God lies at the core of your own personal identity. You simply cannot ignore that without doing damage to who you are and who you might become.

Willie Wows Wilmington

About three-thousand happy faces filed out of Trask Auditorium Tuesday night. Willie caused those smiles. One can't help but feel happy at a Willie Nelson concert. You can see how much he loves what he is doing and it makes you love the man. I was fortunate enough to meet Willie Nelson, the man, the legend. He allowed the press to visit him in his private bus, The Honeysuckle Rose, which was the name of his first movie. A couple of press personnel were allowed to enter the bus at intervals, which resulted in an intimate interview. I was impressed with his friendly manner and his genuine sincerity. He never seemed perturbed about answering questions which he probably hears every day at least ten times. Although it was only ten minutes until showtime, he never seemed rushed or try to rush us. Nobody did. We decided that we should let him go. It was tough leaving, but we had to be considerate.

It was fun while it lasted. The Honeysuckle Rose was quite impressive. We sat at a dinner table while Willie sipped from a coffee cup. I noticed what appeared to be a large water bed in the back bedroom. This wasn't exactly your typical Greyhound. There were two other press people to ask their questions. I wanted to talk to him and see what he is really like. I lived in Austin for six years, which is where he resides, so I talked a little about the city. I asked him if he ever dreamed when he was young, that he would become such a huge success. He said after a little thought, "No, never in my wildest dreams. Where I come from, Ernest Tubbs was as big as anyone could get." He told us about the many Farm Aid concerts scheduled until 1990, and there will be a big one in Washington that year because the farm bill is due to be signed. Benefit concerts such as this show are the focus of his tours. This was a benefit for Hospice. It's a shame that it was the day after Labor Day and that it was a rainy night. Otherwise, I'm sure the turnout would have been better.

Willie went directly from talking to us, to the auditorium where he met with admirers and posed for pictures. The next thing I knew, "Whiskey River" was flowing from the stage as the crowd cheered wildly.

Willie is not a big man physically, but yet appear as big as life. He was accompanied by his band which included his sister, Bobby, who was on the piano. She could really tickle those tusks. Willie wore his patented jeans and red bandana. He wore a black T-shirt which had messages concerning POW's and MIA's.

I heard a fan say that his mother canceled her cataract surgery to see Willie. Many held bumper stickers which said, "Willie Nelson For President." (I know the farmers would love that.) I could see that many fans were ecstatic that they had the chance to see Willie live in concert. A good journalist is supposed to use last names in a story, but I couldn't do it. Nelson doesn't sound right; this was Willie!

Extra large applause accompanied songs such as "Blue Skies," "Mama, Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up To Be Cowboys," While "ON The Road Again" got the audience clapping in rhythm throughout. Many sang along to "Amazing Grace", and he asked for help on the high notes in "Spanish Eyes", which he received, although he did quite well.

A young lady presented him with a dozen roses and he gave her his famous bandana, and sang "Happy Birthday." I saw the young lady glide back to her seat; she was howling with excitement.

I'm sure that Willie thrilled everyone, and I was definitely thrilled at being able to meet him. I can honestly say that I met Willie Nelson and he is a genuinely nice guy—not to mention a hell of a showman. I hope that the concert was as much a success financially for Hospice, as it was a success for each fan.

THE CHINESE MAGIC REVUE

Chinese Magic Review

The Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts, Inc. is pleased to present The Chinese Magic Revue at 8:00 p.m. on Thursday, September 22 in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of UNCW. This very special performance is to benefit the Thalian Hall Capital Campaign/Renovation.

For centuries, the West has been fascinated by the Orient, and The Chinese Magic Revue of Taiwan offers a breathtaking glimpse into this exotic culture. This multifaceted production is a kaleidoscope of color, featuring some of the most dazzling displays ever seen—sensational Chinese acrobats presenting formidable feats of daring and balance, explosive Kung Fu and Chi-Kung demonstrations, brilliantly costumed traditional dancing, and even a touch of Chinese comedy.

The Chinese Magic Revue is more than just a series of stunts. The precision and grace of the troupe suggest an art form shaped by centuries of tradition and honed by years of training and discipline. Indeed, most of the acts in this show have been an integral part of Chinese culture for more than 2,000 years.

The twenty members of The Chinese Magic Revue, all members of two families originally from Taiwan, have astonished audiences of all ages for more than a decade. They have entertained the citizens of Southeast Asia, Central and South America, Europe, the Middle East and Africa, as well as Canada and the United States. In 1986, the National Association for Campus Activities awarded The Chinese Magic Revue the Campus Entertainment Award for Major Performances in the Performing and THAT'S INCREDIBLE to name a few.

The Chinese Magic Revue is truly one of the most thrilling attractions available anywhere—a sensational piece of theatre—amazing, colorful, and fast moving. While especially recommended for children, The Chinese Magic Revue is a diverting evening for the whole family. As countless reviewers have noted, "bring the kids, but don't let them try these tricks at home!"

The Chinese Magic Revue will appear Thursday, September 22 at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. Tickets are $4.00 for students and $8.00 for non-students. 763-3398; be there or be square!

We, The Mediocre . . .

By Kelly Holsten
Staff Writer

My insides turn to mud when I consider the number of places around Wilmington that are capable of having good bands...AND DON'T. THE MAD MONK, JAKES, FRONT STREET NEWS, OARHOUSE, and ORTONS have all dabbled in NEW MUSIC, to various degrees of success. THE MONK has Thursday night as 'New Music' night; so far, we've had Fetchin' Bones, The Connells, Pressure Boys, and Fetchin' Bones, and the Connells... over and over. While these are GOOD bands, variety seems a bit lacking (ie. A BAND From outside a 300 mile radius) CHARLIE (Mr. Monk) needs to know (you need to tell him) that there are OTHER bands out there. Wilmington does not have to live by SIDEWINDER alone!

At KINGFISHES' OARHOUSE, Jose's idea of "Progressive Music" is the canadian band RARE AIR which consists of two bagpipe players, electric xylophone, a bongo player, two drummers, and a ukulele. FRONT STREET NEWS is limited by the amount of noise they can generate in such a SMALL space... and as for JAKE'S... Well, they've gone around the bend and ended up in a cross between Haitian and Jamaican music.

It's UP TO YOU... YOU NEED TO TELL these places that we want more bands such as FIREHOUSE, NAKED RAYGUN LET'S ACTIVE, THE PIXIES SCREAMINGTRESS etc....

Hell, they're all probably cheaper than SIDEWINDER, anyway!

P.S. If we DO happen to get one of these bands you better show up... or I'll burn your house down.

SPACEMEN 2 "The Perfect Prescription" (Genius Records) ENGLAND

This is spacemen's 3's first release in the U.S. after three earlier records in the U.K. They've been together for about five years and have accumulated rave reviews in the British press. Their earlier music is strongly reminiscent of the STODGES and VELVET Underground. On "Perfect Prescription," the ole SPACEMEN SEEM KINDA LOST IN SPACE, wandering about in a vast, dreamy, weightless void of one chord Velvet Underground re-runs. Not too many Stodges comparisons here except for the opening track "TAKE ME TO THE OTHER SIDE," which has a strong psychedelic-guitar-bludgeoned beat about it. The rest of the album drifts off into the upper stratosphere soon after that's not to say "Perfect Prescription" is offensive; in fact, it's pretty addictive in a hypnotic, monotonous way. It just doesn't light me up... it sorta smolders on the medulla.

CLAY IDOLS "Every Day Starts Like This" (Genius Records) Thousand Oaks, CA.

Imagine forced exposure to Bruce Hornsby and the range with your eyelids pried open and your mind on pause... If "Every Day Starts Like This" then I'd rather be put to sleep.

SCREAMING TREES "Even If And Especially When" (SST Records) Wash. St.

These 60's revivalists are in the bust-down-the-doors-burn-up-the-walls tradition. In other words, THESE GUYS ARE GREAT... and even better live. They came to Chapel Hill's CATS Cradle and left to a 15 minute semi-pandemonium standing ovation. "Even If And Especially When" takes the 80's garage-psche-60's roots movement and elevates it to further heights. The guitars have a chaotic raspy tone and are put through everything from wah-wah pedals to phase shifters. The drumming is powerful and all over the place. The vocals soar and bend with the guitar while leading the band to a whirling mixture of melody vs. dissonance (Did I actually write that?) There's no filler on this L.P. One of the best releases of '87. Go see them the next time they're in the Triangle Area.

MY DAD IS DEAD "Let's Skip The Details" (Homestead) Cleveland

MY DAD IS DEAD is composed of Mark Edwards - He plays all the instruments, sings, writes, and pretty much does everything he wants...this is his third release and by far his best. This album has various styles at work; Edward's obvious inspiration is Steve Albini of BIG BLACK fame, although you can hear bits of Joy Division and Big Dipper. He sings in a deadpan voice behind an industrial, grisly montage of guitar and drums. Like BIG BLACK, Edwards uses drum machine loops over his natural drum tracks. The songs have a lot of nervous energy pent up that is constantly held in check. "SKIP THE DETAILS" is probably one of the top five releases this summer.

(But why does he have to come from Cleveland???)

This Won't Be On The Test

By Rick Cairns
Entertainment Editor

Don't Say "Bug" In London Tourists in London, England, should be advised that asking for a "bug repellent" may invite some questioning stares. Bug means one thing only in Great Britain -- bedbugs.

Johnny Appleweed

John Chapman, better known as Johnny Appleseed, took his sack of apple seeds to Ohio around 1800, sowing them around roadways, by rivers and in forest clearings. Wearing a burlap coffee sack for a shirt and a tin pan for a hat, the barefoot eccentric became well known to settlers throughout the wilderness.

Appleseed was a great believer in the powers of medicinal plants and encouraged their use. It was a common belief in his day that dog fennel relieved fever -- so, with the best intentions, he scattered the seeds throughout Ohio and Indiana. The foul smelling weed spread from barnyard to pasture, sometimes growing as high as fifteen feet. Today, exasperated midwestern farmers still cannot rid their fields of the plant they humorously refer to as "Johnnyweed".

Helen Keller, A Radical?

Helen Keller is famous throughout the world as the blind and deaf girl, who learned to speak, read and write. What is less known is that for much of her life Keller was an active socialist and political radical.

She first learned of socialism when we read a braile edition of H. G. Wells' New Worlds For Old.

In 1909, when she was twenty-nine, Keller joined the Socialist Party in Massachusetts and proudly displayed a red flag in her study. Finding the Socialists "too slow", however, she later switched allegiance to the more militant Industrial Workers of the World (IWW).

In 1915 she wrote to President Wilson, urging him to stay the execution of IWW organizer Joe Hill. She also wrote in favor of birth control on women's suffrage and supported the creation of a Women's Party.

Elvis A Narc?

When Elvis Presley learned that a certain Hollywood celebrity was an undercover agent for the Federal Narcotics Bureau, he decided that, he too, wanted to be an agent. If that couldn't be arranged, then he at least wanted a Federal Narcotics Bureau badge. Elvis took this straight to the President, who invited him to the Oval Office. When Nixon saw Elvis's outfit, he said, "Boy, you sure do dress kind of wild, don't you?" to which Elvis replied, "Mr. President, you've got your show to run and I've got mine." Nixon granted him a badge. (I wonder why Elvis didn't turn in Dr. Nick?)

Beware Of The Dog

This old warning goes back at least as far as the Roman Empire ("Cave Canem") and should be applied with caution. It does not relieve the dog owner of responsibility. It has been said that as a matter of law, every dog is allowed one bite, or "one bite free". This means that an owner is presumed to be unaware of his dog's tendency to bite, unless the dog has already bitten someone.

Obviously, by posting a sign, a dog owner is revealing his knowledge of his dog being a threat, which deprives him of a possible defense in a lawsuit.

Tantalizing Teaseme Tabs Tigers

Call it intuition but I somehow feel the need to preface this column with the following assertion: It is not intended to be taken as a serious below-the-belt jolt to cheerleaders. Conversely, its intent is strictly a light-hearted, satirical venture into not only cheerleading, but at some of the stereotypical pitfalls of college athletics, as well.

Once more, the debate, which generally coincides with the onset of the football season, has begun. The debate, in case you're interested, is whether or not you consider cheerleading a sport.

As far as I can tell, there are only two groups who support their recognize endeavor as a sport: the cheerleaders themselves, and of course, their proud parents.

"Our little Johnny, we're so proud of him. He's a four-year letterman at the University of Oklahoma," quips one beaming, though fictitious, mother.

"That's great," replies the genuinely impressed bystander. "What position does he play?"

"Oh, he doesn't have a position," the cute little gray haired woman continues. "He's a cheerleader."

"I see," says the now-genuinely unimpressed on-looker. "Isn't that special?"

Though I have never actually participated in the enhancement of creating bedlam, which to me, seems to be the general job description of a cheerleader, I have, upon occasion, lifted my appreciative eyes from the worldly important events of the playing field in order to glance at these lovelies as they are being tossed effortlessly through the sans-sun purists nightmare, or to the casual observer, the ever-popular domed stadium. And having participated in real sports, such as baseball, basketball, and football for nearly two-thirds of my life, I cannot help but feel somewhat an authority in determining and distinguishing what is and what is not a sport.

So without further adieu, I have compiled, strictly for your benefit, a few select excerpts that should help to solidify my belief that the hysteria-enhancing activity occurring on the sidelines should never be mis-nomered as a sport.

"The participants are not recruited. You will never hear of Clemson scheduling a press conference to announce that they have signed the much sought-after, uh, lungs and lips of four-time Horry County defending champion, "Miss Congeniality" herself, Stephanie Teaseme to a full scholarship worth in excess of $6,000 per annum.

"There is no AP nor UPI poll ranking the top cheerleading squads in America, and for a country that is a slave to these worthless space-fillers, this is a positive indication that it is not considered a true sport.

"In most of the real sports it is not considered customary to engage in hugging and celebrating with the opposition following an athletic encounter. Cheerleaders are always hugging and celebrating, something.

"These aforementioned rules can easily be either argued or dismissed. However, the following cannot and will, therefore, be used to end, once and for all, the ridiculous speculation that there is indeed a so-called "sport" of cheerleading.

"Incoming cheerleading candidates actually have to meet the required admission standards like the rest of the school, unlike a few job-saving "sports" participants.

"Proposition 48 was not established due to the poor classroom performances of prospective university-level cheerleaders.

"I have yet to hear about a drug scandal that has involved, as participants, members of the cheerleading squad, and any organization which hopes to receive the lofty recognition of being labeled a sport certainly must at some point perform such a scandalous act.

"And finally, Booster Club members and generous alumni don't customarily house cheerleaders in $500 a month condos with expressed rights to the family jag.

"So cheerleaders take heart. You are certainly athletes; I don't think anyone would dispute that. It's simply that your general job description doesn't meet enough of the necessary requirements to be classified as a sport. But given some of those requirements, as alluded to above, I'm not so sure that's all that bad.

George Helps Hawks Prevail

By Chris Wright
Sports Editor

After being shutout for two halves and an additional overtime period in Saturday's season-opening loss at Charleston, UNCW's Soccer team was looking for an offensive boost in Monday's home opener against visiting Florida Tech. Sophomore Chris George's two unanswered goals provided the necessary spark as the Hawk's overcame an early 2-0 deficit in route to their 4-2, come-from-behind victory. George's second goal, coming with 58 seconds remaining in the game, tied the score at 2-2 and forced the Hawks second overtime in as many games. Sophomore Forward Mike Geroci provided the winning goal with his first goal of the season and David Cresswell's first goal accounted for the final victory margin.

The Seahawks, who will open Colonial Athletic Association Conference play Saturday at James Madison, received an outstanding defensive performance from Sophomore goalie John Pinter who helped preserve the win by collecting seven saves and shutting out the Tech offense over the final half.

The victory evened UNCW's record at 1-1.

The Seahawks next home game will be September 17, when they entertain CAA conference rival Richmond at 1:00 at Brooks Field.

Defending ECAC Champs Look to Improve Performance In 88

DUDLEY EXPECTS STRONG YEAR FOR GOLFERS

WILMINGTON, N.C. - For longtime golf coach Lea Dudley, 10 years could be the charm.

The UNC Wilmington women's golf mentor begins her 10th season in the Port City after stints at Oklahoma State and Austin Peay. And she's beaming with optimism.

"There's no question," she says, "this will be the best year we've ever had in women's golf. Things really do look promising. I'm very positive about what's going to happen."

Dudley, who establishes the program in 1978-79, returns a veteran group this fall. The team opens the season this weekend (Sept. 9 - 11) by competing in Longwood College's Invitational Tournament in Farmville, Va.

"Our early qualifying scores have been exciting. The courses around here are playing tough, so I still think we have an outside chance to qualify for the nationals."

Dudley expects the top five players for this season to be Paula Brzostowski (Pinecrest HS/Pinehurst, N.C.), Paige Cribb (Georgetown HS/Georgetown, S.C.), Nina Van Drumpt (Sala, Sweden), Mary Thomas (Leonardtown HS/Leonardtown, Md.) and Laura Covington (East Mecklenburg HS/Charlotte, N.C.).

A big question mark, however, surrounds the health of Brzostowski, who is nursing a late summer back injury. Brzostowski sat out last season after coming to UNCW from N.C. State and Furman.

"Assuming that Paula's back improves," says Dudley, "she could have a tremendous impact on the program. She can win some tournaments. I think she can give us that low number every once in awhile that could help us make the nationals."

Cribb returns for her junior year and should also be one of the keys for the Seahawks. "Paige is putting good numbers on the board right now. She's such a strong player."

Van Drumpt, Thomas and Covington give the Seahawks additional experience for the new season.

Dudley says, "As your players get older, they get more consistent. We're getting close, I think. We'll have a good team next year with no seniors."

The fall schedule is similar to last year's. Besides the Longwood Invitational, the Seahawks are slated to compete in the ECAC Championships (New Hanover, N.H.), Beacon Woods Invitational (Bayonet Point, Fla.), Tiger/Tie Invitational (Destin, Fla.) and UNCW Fall Invitational.

The Seahawks finish second to the hosts in the Longwood Invitational last season and are the defending champions in the ECAC event.

"Did you see where it landed, Roy?"

Wake Forest, Boston College Headline Basketball Schedule

From Sports Information
Press Release

The 1988-89 men's basketball schedule at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington is a varied one, featuring opponents from 11 different conferences, Director of Athletics Bill Brooks has announced.

The Seahawks, members of the Colonial Athletic Association, play 27 games this winter, including 13 home contests and 14 road games.

UNCW tips off against Brazil's Rio Claro team in a pre-season exhibition at Trask Coliseum November 13. Six days later, the Seahawks officially open the season against Georgia Southern in Statesboro, Ga.

"I think it's a very competitive schedule," said Brooks. "We are committed to playing a quality schedule, and believe we have achieved that goal this season. We are very appreciative of the fine support of the community. The home schedule is especially attractive for them."

The schedule includes home and away matchups with nine opponents during the 88-89 campaign. Only two first-time opponents are on the schedule: Cincinnati and Tennessee Tech.

UNCW, 7-3 versus in-state teams one year ago, squares off with five Tar Heel State clubs this year. The Seahawks meet Campbell, East Carolina, Davidson, North Carolina A&T, and Wake Forest on the hardwood.

Five '88-89 opponents participated in post-season play last season. North Carolina A&T and Richmond advanced to the NCAA Tournament, while Boston College, Old Dominion, and Georgia Southern earned National Invitation Tournament bids.

The longest road game of the season looks to be on December 5 when the Hawks travel to upstate New York to face Niagara. UNCW stopped the Purple Eagles, 66-64, in the last meeting between the two clubs in 1986-87.

UNCW's shortest away game is a tossup between state rivals East Carolina in Greenville and Campbell in Fayetteville. Both trips take approximately two hours by bus from Wilmington.

Every contest on the '88-89 slate begins at 7:30, with one exception. The Seahawks are scheduled to play Metro Conference opponent Cincinnati at 8:00 in the River City.

The Seahawks finished 13-14 overall and 9-7 in the CAA in 1987-88. Three starters and eight lettermen return off that unit.

Hawks Enthusiastically Await Inaugural Season

"New" appears to be the catchword for the UNC Wilmington cross country teams, which open their season this weekend under first-year coach Bill Cason.

"The runners seem to be real excited about the new program and new coach," says Cason, who took over as UNCW's cross country track and field coach last month. "Our numbers are low, but the enthusiasm and practices are going real well."

"Our main goal this season is to work on individual improvement. We don't have any grand team goals, just to improve individually as the season progresses."

The Seahawks begin the 1988 schedule with just five men and seven women on the roster. Cason takes the group to Pembroke, N.C., this weekend for the Pembroke State University Invitational Meet.

UNCW did not compete in the event last year, but Cason hopes to use the meet to prepare his club for a tough schedule.

"We're using this first meet as a time trial to see where everybody fits in," he says. "We'll get there. Everything boils down to the kids getting used to me and me getting used to them."

Senior Layne Fuller (Walter Williams/Burlington, N.C.) anchors the men's team. Fuller, who placed 16th in last year's Colonial Athletic Association meet, has been the team's most valuable runner the past two years.

"We hope Layne can reach the Top 10 in the conference," says Cason. "He came back in the best shape since his freshman year. He should also improve in the regionals."

After Fuller, the rest of the men are freshmen. It's arguably the youngest men's team in the school's history. "The rest of the runners have some potential. We're just concerned with developing them as the season goes by."

Cason breathes a little easier when talking about the women's team. After all, returnees Missy Hall (Morehead HS/Eden, N.C.), Jamie Oxendine (East Mecklenburg HS/Charlotte, N.C.), and Sarah Harris (Statesville HS/Statesville, N.C.) should combine with transfer Beth Holt to give the Seahawks a solid squad.

Hall was a three-time MVP in high school, and has been a steady performer in the collegiate ranks as well. She received the Coaches Award last season after being one of the team's stalwarts.

"I think the women will be a lot stronger," adds Cason. "With some development and a little luck, we could break the top four in the conference. We're very solid in the first three spots."

Oxendine, a joyed a stellar freshman year and Holt comes to the coast from UNC Chapel Hill.

"We'll be looking for the top three to carry the team this year," said Cason.

Other members of the team include Tammy Connelly (Hoggard HS/Wilmington, N.C.), Debbie Pate (North Duplin HS/Faison, N.C.), and Laloni Walker (Page HS/Greensboro, N.C.).

The schedule is a tough one for Cason's debut. He just wants the runners to tune up in preparation for the CAA meet November 5, at Dunbar Farms in Williamsburg, Virginia.

"The schedule is set up well," he says. "I'm emphasizing a lot of cross training. We swim three times a week and supplement it with weight room workouts, circuit training, a stationary bike riding. We're just trying to develop each individual's overall fitness level right now."

One of the highlights of the season occurs September 17, when UNCW hosts the Seahawk Invitational Cross Country Meet. Several college and prep teams travel to the Port City to compete in the annual event, which has an added attraction this season.

The official dedication of the Harold Greene Track and Field Complex takes place following the meet. Local supporter Harold Greene is scheduled to be on hand to present awards to the winners of each category.

AT A GLANCE

IMBR Gets New Name

UNCW President Spangler has authorized UNCW to change the name of the Institute for Marine Biomedical Research at Wrightsville Beach to the Center for Marine Science Research. The name change was requested after an in-house study reported that the term Center for Marine Science Research would more accurately reflect the current research activities of UNCW's faculty. The purpose of the marine research program is to promote the fields of biomechanical physiology, oceanography, coastal and wetland science, biotechnology and aquaculture.

NURP Gets New Name Too

The National Undersea Research Program at UNCW, formerly known as the Southeastern Undersea Research Facility (SURF), has undergone another name change. The new name, The Undersea Research Center at UNCW, represents the funding agency's (NOAA) interest in developing centers of undersea scientific expertise. The undersea research center is located at the Center for Marine Science Research, formerly known as IMBR.

Foreign Film Series

The 1988 Foreign Film Series begins September 11 with Bizet's Carmen. The films, in the original languages with subtitles, are sponsored by the department of modern languages and will be shown on Sundays at 2:30 p.m. in Randall Library Auditorium. For more information call Dr. Lapire at 3825.

NC Symphony

The NC Symphony featuring Christopher Parkening as guest guitarist and Gerhard Zimmermann conductor, will be performing in Kenan Auditorium on Thursday, September 15, at 8 p.m. Other concerts are scheduled for December 6 with the Holiday Pops with Jackson Parkhurst as guest conductor; January 21 with Zimmermann conducting and guest artists Jaime Laredo, violinist, and Sharon Robinson, cellist; and February 9 an all-Beethoven program with Zimmermann conducting. For season tickets call Doug Swink at 3442. Adult $35; Senior citizens $25; students $15. Individual tickets will be available at the door.

Planning Calendars

1988-89 UNCW Planning Calendars are available in the UU Information Center for $1.90.

CSBA Gets Additional Department

A new department in the Cameron School of Business Administration called production and decision sciences has been formed from the department of management and marketing. This department will include information systems, statistics and computer applications in business for the business school. Faculty members include John Anderson, chairman, Ravija Badarinarthi, Tom Burke, John Garris, Gerry Gingrich, Laura Honeycutt and Paul Nkansah. The new department is located in Suite 200 of Cameron Hall.

(There is still a management and marketing department).

Teaching Fellows

Twenty-three NC Teaching Fellows were admitted to UNCW this fall semester as freshman students. They join 27 returning sophomores in the UNCW Teaching Fellows Program. Fellows receive $5,000 for each year of their college program which prepares them to become teachers in NC. The average freshman SAT score was 1069 with a GPA of 3.7.

Bolen Submits Entries

Dr. Eric G. Bolen, dean of the graduate school, is writing five entries for World Book Encyclopedia. The entries identify and describe several species of waterfowl and other birds occurring in North America. The second edition of Bolen's coauthored textbook, Wildlife Ecology and Management, will be published this fall by MacMillan.

Theodore To Direct Plays

Dr. Terry Theodore, professor of drama, will direct the following one-act plays at Jacob's Run: Edward Albee's The Zoo Story and Anton Chekhov's Swan Song. Professor Dan Wargo, an instructor in the speech division of the department of creative arts, will play a leading role in the Chekhov play. Performance dates for the shows will be September 15-18. Curtain time is at 8 nightly with a Sunday matinee at 3 p.m. Tickets are $5. Call 762-6844 for more information.

By Joe Browning
Sports Information Director

University officials and local benefactors Harold and Jean Greene are scheduled to be on hand for the official dedication of the Harold Greene Track and Field Complex, UNC Wilmington's new Olympic-class track facility.

The dedication ceremony is being staged in conjunction with the annual Seahawk Invitational Cross Country Meet. Following conclusion of the meet, a brief ribbon cutting, officially dedicates the $751,000 track and field facility at approximately 11:15 a.m.

"We are very pleased to see the track and field complex become a reality," says Bill Brooks, UNCW's longtime athletic director. "We are very grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Greene for their generosity and support of the program. It should be a source of pride for the university and community for years to come."

The dedication ceremony will take place near the finish line as Mr. and Mrs. Greene assist head track and field/cross country coach Bill Cason with the awards presentations. In between appearances by Chancellor William H. Wagoner and Director of Athletics Bill Brooks, two UNCW runners will circle the track with the Olympic torch given to the university during U.S. Olympic Festival-'87 in North Carolina.

Plans were unveiled in June of 1987 for the facility and work progressed well on the regional showpiece. It took one year for construction on the five-acre site to be completed.

The complex, located on the southern edge of campus, features a synthetic surface all-weather track with eight lanes. The surface of the track is a vented texture, full depth colored polyurethane sports surface, consisting of tiny rubber particles coated with chemicals for preservation.

A second phase is planned for the facility. It includes provisions for seating and sound capabilities.

Through the efforts of Greene, a local businessman and developer, and his wife, Jean, more than $600,000 was given to UNCW for construction of the facility.

A native of Providence, R.I., Greene moved to South Carolina in 1951 and got his start as a salesman for Olympic brand radios and television. Soon thereafter, he entered the development field by incorporating the town of Goose Creek, outside of Charleston, S.C.

Greene's next move came in the early 1960's when he developed 15,000

Beach Sweep Assaults Trash

By Melissa Ambrose
Staff Writer

Beach Sweep '88 will take place on Saturday, September 24, from 9:00 a.m. until 1:00 p.m. along North Carolina's coast from Kitty Hawk to Calabash.

What is Beach Sweep? Beach Sweep is an effort to make the public aware of the trash on our beaches and also to give the public a chance to pull together as a unified group to help clean up the some 150 miles of beaches along our coast.

On September 19, 1987, the first Beach Sweep ever was held. Some 1,000 participants helped in Beach Sweep '87, making it the state's largest coastal clean up and an overall success. Within three hours the volunteers collected more than 14 tons of trash.

Each piece was recorded on data cards. The cards divided the trash into seven categories, the largest being plastic, followed by styrofoam, metal, paper, glass, wood, and rubber. Medical supplies and other items including a washer-dryer were among some of the many things found.

The three NC Aquariums in Manteo, Pine Knoll Shores, and Ft. Fisher are the coordinating centers for Beach Sweep '88. Cathy Harris, zone captain for Ft. Fisher State Recreation area, urges everyone to come out and help in the clean up at Ft. Fisher. There are four miles of beach for off-road vehicles and anyone with four wheel drive vehicles are strongly urged to come out and help.

Anyone interested in helping with Beach Sweep '88 can meet at the Ft. Fisher parking lot at 8:30 a.m. on September 24. Trash bags will be provided, you need only to bring gloves and yourself to help make Beach Sweep '88 an even bigger success than last year. For more information call 458-8206 or 458-8207.

Mark your calendar for Beach Sweep '88 - Saturday, September 24th from 9 to 11. Can't work that long? Come anytime after 9 and stay as long as you can. Every little bit helps - a lot.

Beach Sweep is a coordinated effort to rid the 350 miles of North Carolina beaches of all trash, for at least one day. Volunteers will be working from Duck to Hatteras Beach on the 24th, fully expecting to match or exceed the more than 14 tons of plastic, glass, rubber, styrofoam, paper, wood and metal items collected last year - over 33,000 pieces of trash.

Boarders Bite It At ASU

(CPS) -- Skateboarders beware! You're not welcome at Appalachian State University.

ASU has become the latest campus to ban campus skateboarding. Arizona State University and the universities of Arizona and California at Berkeley have curtailed campus skating in recent years, too.

"We had no reports of people actually being knocked down, but many people complained they were nearly knocked down," said ASU Vice Chancellor Ned Trivette. Skateboarders also slightly damaged campus sidewalks, he added.

"I'm glad the decision was made because they were getting in everyone's way," Christi Young, a student at the Boone, N.C., campus, adds. "The skateboarders were so loud outside the library it was hard to study even if you were on the second floor."

Skateboarding and roller skating enjoyed surges in popularity in the late 1970s, when newly developed smoother wheels and fiberglass boards gave kids better control and a more comfortable ride.

College campuses, with their acres of smooth, well maintained asphalt and concrete, became a natural haven for the latest generation of skateboarders and skaters.

The proliferation of skaters, however, brought frequent complaints about out-of-control concrete surfers and unsafe sidewalks.

Not all Appalachian State students, however, support the ban. "They don't bother me as long as they're not obnoxious," said student Kim Eagle.

In a year or two the whole point may be moot anyway, predicts Irma Zandi, a New York consultant who reports on youth trends. Skateboarding, she says, is soon to be "out."

At the end of the 87-88 school year, the Chancellor's Safety Committee met to discuss several issues that they deemed important to the safety of the student body as a whole. One of the topics that came to the fore in this discussion was the use of skateboards on this campus by the students. Prior to this committee meeting, there was no stated policy on the use of skateboards here on campus. The newly adopted policy cannot be found in the 1988-89 Code of Student Life handbook, but it will be enforced; students are encouraged to abide by this policy.

Most UNCW students spend a lot of time on the local beaches during much of the school year. Please come out for Beach Sweep 1988 and help maintain the areas we all enjoy. If interested in helping clean up Wrightsville Beach, call Ed Brooks at 341-4191 or Tere Barrett at 256-4161.

ROTC Dedicates Colors

Courtesy of UNCW News

The ROTC Seahawk Battalion of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will dedicate the UNCW colors in a ceremony at 7 a.m., Tuesday, Sept. 20 on the front lawn of Hoggard Hall on the campus.

Dedication of the colors, which only happens once upon the creation of a new unit, officially recognized by the ROTC department. Receiving the colors on behalf of the university will be Dr. Gary L. Faulkner, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Also taking place during the ceremony will be the first address to the cadets by the Seahawk Battalion's new commanding officer, Lt. Col. LeRoy P. Hanna Jr., who comes to UNCW following his most recent assignment to brigade operations officer of the 210th Field Artillery Brigade at Herzo Base, West Germany.

Hanna was commissioned into the Army following his graduation from ROTC at the University of Delaware in 1970. He also holds a master's degree in human relations from Webster University in St. Louis. His awards and decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal (with one oak leaf cluster) and Army Commendation Medal (with three oak leaf clusters).

His wife Susan and their children, Stacy, Nathan, and Ryan have joined him in Wilmington.

Also on the program that morning will be the recognition of cadets who earned awards during the spring semester and during the summer.

LOVE ME DO

Sang the Beatles in 1964. It was a song about true love, commitment and fidelity. Casual sex with multiple partners, especially without condoms, is one of the riskiest sexual behaviors there is. Loving another person means caring enough to prevent the spread of sexually transmitted diseases. To reduce the risk of getting or giving STD:

- *Practice abstinence (the Surest protection) or
- *Share love, tenderness and passion but not body fluids
- *Discuss each other's sexual history
- *Always use a condom

Assumptions Of Drinking Challenged

(CPS) -- It doesn't pay to nag students about how bad drinking can be for them.

Renelle Massey of the University of South Florida found that challenging students' assumptions that alcohol makes them funny, brave, more sociable, sexier or better in some other way is the most effective way of getting students to cut down their drinking.

"We're looking at this as an approach to prevention" of alcohol abuse, Massey said.

Some studies indicate that as many as 82 percent of the nation's collegians drink regularly, and excessive drinking has turned into a problem at many schools.

Intoxicated students were blamed for turning a 1986 Colorado State University blook party into a riot, while hundreds have been arrested during drunken spring break parties at Iowa State and the University of California-Santa Barbara last spring also led to arrests, injuries and vandalism.

Excessive drinking has killed several students in recent years: a Rutgers Universities fraternity pledge died in February after a "drink 'till you're sick" hazing session, for example. In 1985, a University of Colorado sorority pledge was killed after falling from a bridge during a drunken party.

Hoping to curb such incidents and comply with lower drinking age laws, most campuses have developed "alcohol awareness programs" that generally focus on the ill effects of drinking.

The USF study is among the first to examine student drinking from an expectations point of view.

USF had students record their normal alcohol consumption for three weeks, and then assigned 25 to a program to lower their expectation of what alcohol could do to them.

Twenty-five others joined a more traditional program about the dangers of excessive drinking, and 27 received no counseling at all.

In one activity, students in the first group were given either an alcoholic beverage or a placebo, but not told which. Afterward, the group played Charades.

Students were then asked to guess who was given alcohol, based on their charades performances. "Everybody made mistakes," Massey said.

Their inaccuracy led to a discussion of how people have been taught through television, advertising and everyday conversation that alcohol can make people witty and sociable.

Showing students how wrong those expectations are, Massey said, "is a lot more potent than just telling people about the potential hazards of excessive drinking."

High-level drinkers in the experimental program went from an average 9.7 drinks a week to 6.1, while low-level drinkers dipped from 5.5 to four.

High-level students in the traditional program, however, changed only from 10.9 drinks per week to 9.4. Low-level drinkers reduced their consumption from 6.4 to three drinks per week.

University Of Florida Subpoenaed For Drug Testing Results

(CPS) -- A U.S. Attorney in Florida realized drug testing opponents' greatest fear in July when he subpoenaed the results of drug tests of University of Florida athletes.

Opponents of drug testing have long argued that if colleges gathered data on drug use, it would be impossible to keep the information confidential from law enforcement officials trying to bust a cocaine ring in the Gainesville area.

UF officials are awaiting the results of a court hearing before deciding whether to give drug agents the results of drug tests of 30 former and current athletes.

The issue of whether campuses have to turn over the drug results to police hasn't come up before, observers say.

"There hasn't been a flurry of law-enforcement attempts to get the information," said Juleya Hampton, an American Civil Liberties Union lawyer. "The Florida case puts this issue back on the agenda, and will help us add another privacy argument to our case."

Florida athletes sign a consent form at the start of each academic year agreeing to participate in UF's drug testing program. The form pledges school officials to keep the results secret.

But the U.S. Attorney in Tallahassee, Fla., working with the U.S. Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA), has subpoenaed the results, saying they're necessary for the drug probe.

Some of the athletes hired a lawyer, Stephen Bernstein, who will argue in court this month that the subpoenas are improper. Bernstein will ask the court to quash them.

"When the government goes on a fishing expedition, without showing any articulable reason to think a particular student-athlete did anything wrong, there is nothing that outweighs the privacy expectations of the athletes," he said.

Legal experts say they doubt that law enforcement agents will be stopped from getting what they want.

"I don't think there's a way in the world in which the athlete or the school can keep the information from law enforcement officials," said John Scanlan, a professor of law at Indiana University.

UF officials are torn, said Alvin Alsobrock, Florida's vice president for university relations. They do not want to oppose the U.S. Attorney's efforts or violate the privacy of their students.

"Federal law tells us one thing," he said, "and a federal agency tells us another."

Track from page 1

Greene's next move came in the early 1960's when he developed 15,000 acres of land in Brunswick County. The community became known as Boiling Springs Lakes.

Much of Greene's recent success has come in the hospitality field, where he operates motels up and down the mid-Atlantic region. He currently owns nine units and numerous apartment complexes.

About 400 participants are expected to attend Saturday's race, which scours UNCW's sprawling campus and winds up at the track facility. The starting gun for the respective races goes off as follows: High School Girls (8:30 a.m.), High School Boys (9:00 a.m.), College Women (9:45 a.m.) and College Men (10:15 a.m.).

Besides UNCW, collegiate teams entered include defending champion North Carolina State, East Carolina, Baptist, Coastal Carolina, The Citadel and Pembroke State. Cason expects about 15 high schools to be represented in the early-season test.

Seahawk athletic officials plan to initiate a track and field program next year. UNCW is currently the only school in the eight-member Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) without a track program.

Election Results And Resignations Reface SGA

By David Vaughn
SGA Correspondent

Monday the Student Government Association held its Fall elections, which were an apparent success. Nine percent of the Freshman class showed up at the polls in the Union, and three percent of all students voted. This election decided who would be the Freshman class officers and the Fall Reps-at-Large. The new Freshman class officers are: President - Curtis Wilson (46 votes), Vice President - Jody M. Dixon (95), Senators David Cadaret (55) and Kipp Summey (51).

The Fall Reps-at-Large are: Lee Barnhill (173), Monika Mohr (172), Vernon K. Johnson (170), Erin Strickland (162), Heidi Gailor (157), Shawn Mullins (156) and Dean C. Wriggison (150).

Monday night the Senate meeting was held in Room 212 of the Behavioral Science building due to a sorority function which required the use of room 100 of the University Union. Members present were Susan Wolfson, Jim Humphries, Kenneth Lemon, Bryan Holler, Kim Tracy, Danny Best, Twyla Vereen, Tim Lee and Lee Barnhill.

Susan Wolfson, Senior Class President, submitted her appointment of Paul Buren to the Student Supreme Court, and the nomination was passed by consent.

In President Karla Alston's address she submitted her appointment of Angelique Warick to the Union Board, which was passed by consent. She also announced that there are office assistants in the SGA office from 9-5 daily.

Vice President Robert Smith announced that Senators Steven Kornegay, Liliann DeFani, Lee King and Katie Schmidt had resigned. Kenneth Lemon is now Acting Sophomore Class President and Lee Barnhill became chairman of the Finance Committee. Smith also announced his appointments to the Student Organization Committee as Tasha R. Boorle, Chad Beane and Chris Slomenda. His appointment to the office of Special Senator was William Neely, and all nominations passed by consent with Neely being sworn in by Barnhill.

Barnhill had resigned his position as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee to fill the position in the Finance Committee and named Bryan Holler as acting Chairman.

Senator Kim Tracy will bring up a motion in the next SGA meeting concerning the winners of the Miss UNCW pageant. The first runner up was to receive $300 and the winner was to receive $500; however, they had not received these prizes as of this meeting. As her closing statement she said that she was drafting a resolution to get condom machines placed in the dormitories.

No major debates were held and the senate will resume meeting in the Union next week.

"Students can use a skateboard for transportation to and from classes and Residence halls," said Jacquie Skinner, Assistant Dean of Students, "but there are a couple of restrictions. Skateboards will be prohibited from walls and steps; also, trick riding on these and other areas, such as curbs, should be prohibited until such time as the people responsible for recreation examine the feasibility of building a recreational skateboard riding area. The other limitation on the use of skateboards on campus is that skateboarders will be required to yield the right of way on the sidewalks to pedestrians."

Broaden Your Horizons

Desktop Publishing Offered

Wilmington--Two workshops focusing on the exciting field of desktop publishing will be offered in October through the Office of Special Programs at UNC Wilmington.

"Desktop Publishing for Beginners" will cover the basic concepts to publish newsletters, catalogs, brochures, forms, bulletins and many other publications. At "Intermediate Desktop Publishing", a continuation of the beginning course, participants will move through the step-by-step production of a newsletter. The beginner's course will be offered on Thursday, October 13 while the intermediate course is slated for Friday, October 14. Both will run from 9:00 am-4:00 pm. Fee for each session is $109 but will be discounted to $99 for registration by October 10. The fee for enrolling in both courses will be $188 for registration by October 10.

Instructors will be John Carlson and Bill Block of Solutions!, a business that specializes in desktop publishing.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Cosmopolitan Lunch Series For Those Over 50

Wilmington--Lectures combined with a catered lunch will provide a new twist for older adults interested in a stimulating afternoon diversion. The Cosmopolitan Lunch Series, sponsored by UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs, is designed to bring adults over the age of 50 to the university campus to participate in enrichment seminars and discussions at the same time, enjoy a catered lunch and interact with other older adults.

The classes will be held from Noon-1:15 pm in the Hawk's Nest of the University Union. Registration deadline is October 11. Lunch must be ordered at the time of registration.

"We are trying to provide an outlet for personal enrichment by presenting interesting study topics and discussions," explained Diane B. Talley, assistant director for the Office of Special Programs. "But we wanted to do it in a relaxing atmosphere that would encourage group participation. A lunch discussion group provides both. Participants can either order a 'deli' style lunch or bring their own. Beverages will be provided."

The series opens with a study of "Japan and the Japanese", a four-part program running on Wednesday, October 19-November 6, that will concentrate on the unique lifestyles of this Asian nation. Dr. David Culkun, associate professor of the health and physical education, will lead the class and share his extensive collection of Japanese artifacts.

Fee is $25 for the four programs and lunch or $17 if participants bring their own lunch.

The second lecture will focus on "Politics and the Media in '88", with Wilmington Morning Star editor Charles M. Anderson discussing the news media's role in the current election race. Topics will include discussion on whether the media can "make" or "break" a political candidate; what factors lead to a newspaper's endorsement of a political candidate and who the current frontrunners are in the state and region. The program is slated for Friday, November 4 and fee is $6 with lunch or $4 if you bring your own lunch.

Last in the series will be "A Visit to China" with Rachel P. Keziah, science coordinator for New Hanover County Schools, and a science education delegate to China for the federal government. Through slides and lecture, students can explore the Great Wall, the "Forbidden City and the Stone Forest" while learning some interesting facts about Chinese society and culture. This program is scheduled for Tuesday, November 15 and fee is $6 with lunch or $4 if you bring your own.

"Getting Started On Cutting Back"

Wilmington--Learn the proper elements for living a nutritionally sound and healthy life through a one-night course being offered by UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs.

Instructor Marylin Humphries, a wellness facilitator trainer, will teach the latest guidelines for a wellness approach to living, explaining how to lower your intake of fats, sodium, cholesterol, and sugar while maintaining variety, satisfaction and flavor.

"Getting Started On Cutting Back: A Wellness Approach to Food" is scheduled for Tuesday, October 18, from 6:30-9:30 pm in Room 100 of the University Union. Fee is $26 but will be discounted to $19 if you enroll before the October 7 deadline.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

The Wonderful World Of Science For Everyone

Wilmington--The beauty and excitement of the world of science can be part of a unique learning experience being offered to young people in the "Wonderful World of Science" program sponsored by the UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs.

The classes will be held on Saturday mornings, October 15-November 19, in the UNCW campus.

Each are geared to a different age group. "An Introduction to Astronomy" is for ages 10-14 and will meet from 10:00-11:30 am. Instructor Ron Hawes will explore the mysteries of the universe using astronomical models to explain the history and makeup of the solar system, constellations, stars and galaxies. Fee is $37 discounted to $30 for enrollment before the registration deadline.

"Marine Science/Coastal Ecology for Beginners", will take

8-10 year olds on field trips to the coastal marshes to learn about the various forms of marine life that live in the surrounding coastal waters. Instructor Charlie Baker will explain the fascinating world of fossils, sea turtles, carnivorous plants and much more. The class meets from 9:00-11:00 am. Fee is $34 discounted to $27 for early enrollments.

"Introduction to Basic Sciences", for 9-11 year olds, is a basic learning course covering a variety of scientific fields including ecology, basic biochemistry, and biology. Hands-on activities include working in the laboratory with instructor Sandy Smith. The class meets from 10:00-11:30 am and the $37 fee will be discounted to $30 for registration before the deadline.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Modern Greek And Italian

Wilmington--If you are planning trips to Italy or Greece, the Office of Special Programs at UNC Wilmington is offering two courses to make your travel more enjoyable.

"Introduction to Italian", scheduled for Tuesdays and Thursdays, October 18-December 1 from 7:00-8:00 pm, will stress basic communication and vocabulary skills. Instructor Robert Boni lived in Italy for several years and will share his impressions of the country and people. Fee is $56 but will be discounted to $49 for registration before October 11.

"Beginning Modern Spoken Greek", will focus on the Greek language and alphabet. Instructor Michael Spyrou is knowledgeable about Greek culture and its people and will share his insight on both. The course will meet on Tuesdays, October 18-December 6 from 7:00-9:00 pm. A book is included in the fee of $66. A discount fee of $59 is available for registrations received before the October 3 deadline.

For more information, call the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Canoeing In Pender County

Wilmington--Learn basic canoe skills while enjoying the beautiful Fall foliage along Pender County's winding rivers in three programs being offered by UNC Wilmington's Office of Special Programs. Veteran instructors of safe canoeing and life jackets are provided.

The sessions are scheduled for October 15, 29, and November 12 from 9:00 am-4:30 pm. Cost for each is $24 per session or $17 per session if you register before October 6 deadline.

For more information, call the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

"Center For Marine Science Research" Named

(University Advancement) University of North Carolina President C.D. Spangler has authorized The University of North Carolina at Wilmington to change the name of the Institute for Marine Biomedical Research at Wrightsville Beach to the Center for Marine Science Research. Chancellor William H. Wagoner announced Wednesday, Aug 31 at the meeting of the Board of Trustees.

"The name change was requested after an in-house study reported that the term Center for Marine Science Research would more accurately reflect the current research activities of our faculty," explained Wagoner.

"The primary purpose of our marine research program currently is to promote basic research in the fields of biomedical physiology, oceanography, coastal and wetland science, biotechnology and aquaculture. The new name accurately summarizes this mission. This is another step in the maturing process in the marine-related research program on the UNC Wilmington campus."

Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Charles L. Cahill said that the new Center will facilitate organizational revisions to enhance all marine science research activities at UNC Wilmington.

"By consolidating our marine science programs, the Center for Marine Science Research will build upon the excellence already achieved and will serve as a focal point for coastal and marine-related research," Cahill said.

The in-house study of UNC's marine-related research activities found that faculty in chemistry, earth sciences, physics and biology were already engaged in marine research that crossed disciplines. The Center concept will facilitate and promote interdisciplinary cooperation, and strengthen funding possibilities.

"We think the Center will allow us to develop connections with disciplines outside the natural sciences and to broaden the opportunities for our faculty to provide community and state service," Cahill said.

Faculty Prison At Randall Library

In this wonderful world of stress and inconveniences, UNCW has added an additional "beast of burden" to a small group of the faculty. That small group are those faculty who were unfortunate enough to find themselves or at least their offices in the library.

It's sad to think that someone who has gone through the trouble to get a teaching job here at UNCW actually has to abide by the ridiculous hours of the campus library.

It's bad enough that the students cannot study past the stroke of midnight in the campus library, but to place that same restriction on the faculty is outrageous.

In short, these people are unable to gain access to their offices before the library opens and are not allowed to stay later than it is open, they also have no pass key!

These people should be able to work as late as they want to or go into their offices when they want to, it's their job.

One alternative would be to keep the library open much later to alleviate, not only the faculty pressure, but to allow the students a place to study at later times. There is, no doubt, a sizeable amount of money that this would entail, yet it would not break the University to bring about such a change. It would appease all parties and bring about little, if any criticism.

A university that intends to grow must be able to accommodate its faculty as well as its students. But for now, if you are reading this from your library office, we do empathize with your plight. Good luck!

Student Charges Officer With Parking Favoritism

TO THE EDITOR:

Recently I was issued a citation for parking in a faculty-staff space, in the "R" lot, located between the Social Science building and School of Business building. Sure it was 'way after 3:00 p.m., but our gestapo recently started enforcing "24 hour faculty and staff only" in that lot. Didn't you hear? $500... too bad. The clincher is: when I looked around the lot to see who else got nabbed, I was surprised (not really) to find several "Faculty and Staff" cars in violation of the rules, as well. None of these had been ticketed. I found the officer who had issued the citation to me. When I tried to point out the offending autos to him, he refused to issue citations, or even get out of his car.

Such indifference is typical of the contempt the administration has for the students. The administration should exist for the students, not the other way around. This is just one incident.

Are the staff and faculty not subject to the same parking rules and conditions as the student body? Should enforcement be arbitrary? Can officers choose to ticket certain cars, while ignoring others? I've listed here the offending cars, along with the "badge number" of the officer whom I contacted. Let the SEAHAWK print them if it dares. Parking Lot "R" 9/1/88 at 8:20 p.m.

Red Porsche 911 -- NC BSY-910
UNCW Decal: S-0587
Offense: Improper Display (decal taped inside window)

Black Ford Topaz -- NC BTN-910
UNCW Decal: S-1042
Offense: Improper Display (decal taped inside window)

Tan Nissan Truck -- NC ASY-5114
NO UNCW Decal
Offense: NO CURRENT UNCW Decal. No citation, either.

These cars were not ticketed... WHY NOT? Many students have been cited for the exact same offenses while these vehicles were not.

The officer who refused to issue the citations is identified by the number "508". I invite him to defend his inaction, by responding to these charges in print, via The SEAHAWK.

COMMENTARY

More To Life Than A GPA

By Chad Adams

I was once told that people either go through life learning more and more about less and less until they know practically everything about nothing, or learn less and less about more and more until they know everything about nothing.

During three years of college, I've learned that grades truly aren't that important in the grand scheme of things. Yes, they are important to your family and your own self-image, but the open job market likes to see people who know how to work well with other people.

And businesses like people who take the initiative to do something other than the job itself, they don't just look at the grades.

I know people who place the utmost importance on grades. They hold this "good grades or perish" ideal with religious fervor, pushing themselves to the limits of sanity trying to get the perfect GPA. And I know other people who take the lightest course load they can in order to give those few subjects their undivided attention, even if it takes eight years to graduate. As a full time student I've found it very difficult to compete for grades with someone taking nine to twelve hours when I have eighteen. But then again I've made it a point to get involved in things other than just school.

Don't get me wrong, grades are very important. I'm not saying that you should just hang around the 1.2 GPA and expect to work on Fifth Avenue. Try to achieve the grade, but make sure that you've learned something from it. I've learned quite a bit in some of the classes that I've done poorly in, (I really had to try to get a "C"). Another fact is that I can hardly recall some of the information from the classes that I aced outright. In short, there's so much more to school than memorization and fill in the blank.

The fact is, we're all mortal and in about a hundred years I don't think that the tombstones will read, "Here lies Chad Adams, who died with a 2.7. Rest In Peace." To tell you the truth, I think that college is where people should find out about themselves. It's a experience that challenges your beliefs and makes you an individual. It is not a think tank where you're supposed to come in and just spend time before you get a degree.

Yes, it is possible to go to school and get through with eighteen hours a semester and graduate on time with extra hours and honors. But how much do you really learn that way?

College is the place to get a head start on what you want to do in life. Whether you want to be in business, nursing, teaching, writing or 'go boldly where no man has gone before', there are a multitude of options for one to get involved in here at this University. All it takes is a bit of initiative, at any rate it can't hurt and you don't get graded on your extracurriculars anyway.

What's In A Name?

Shortly after birth, we are given something that will affect our entire lives -- our name. I recently read a list of the most popular names given to babies in the past year. It was quite predictable; the only surprise was that, John, wasn't in the top ten for the first time since they started recording such things. How much thought do parents put into a name? They should put plenty, because it definitely affects one's life -- favorably or unfavorably.

Many parents take the easy way out, and name their boy after their father -- even if his name is Elmer. My parents took that route; I'm a junior. Luckily, I was never referred to as Junior. I'm lucky because I get a variation of names to choose from. I could be Richard, Rich, Rick, Ricky or (ahem) Dick. (Some choice.) Names are usually popularized because of a popular TV personality, movie character, movie star or sports celebrity. Jennifer has been an extremely popular name the past twenty years because of the movie "Love Story."

Does this mean that we could have an influx of babies named Pee Wee or Rambo? They could either be a killing machine or a wimp. (What a choice.)

Somehow, people seem to fit their names. It could be that people adapt their personalities to perfect their perceptions of them. If your name is Melvin, you are expected to be a wimp, and probably will be. This kid in my high school was named Herman Handle. (I kid you not.) Now, when you hear that name, you don't exactly think of the star of the football team. This Herman was exactly what you'd expect. He was puny, had thick glasses and carried all of his books home every day. Even on Fridays! You don't usually see a "Rocky" fitting that description.

Some names just won't do for certain professions. When was the last time that you saw a bank president named Bubba? How many times have you seen a greasy mechanic with the name "Reginald" stenciled above the pocket of his torn overalls?

Sometimes a name can determine a person's destiny. If a guy's name is so bad, he could decide to get tough rather than get picked on his entire life. I bet that was the case with Dick Butkus. It couldn't be easy being named Dick Butkus, but I'm sure that most people don't laugh at his name when he is in hearing distance. I recall another football player named June Jones. Can you imagine your first name being the same as Beaver Cleaver's mother and you're a guy? He was a quarterback though, not a lineman.

John has always been the most popular name in America for some reason. It's so common, that it's a euphemism for toilet, and for a prostitute's "clients." Some men with non-masculine names prefer the name John even though it's so common. That was the case with John Wayne. His parents named him Marion Wayne. It just wouldn't be the same -- the Duke with a girl's name. It was a good career move.

Some names simply go out of style. Most of the time, if you hear the name "Mildred", "Myrtle" or "Olive" you can bet that they are quite elderly. I have a friend in Texas whose name is legally Mildred, but she smartly refers to herself as "Milyn". She couldn't do that as a child though. Teachers will call you whatever it says on the records. That is when your name can really cause you problems. Milyn told me that the other kids called her "Mildew".

Some famous persons were given perfect names. Their first and last names fit them so perfectly that I wonder what would have happened if they were named differently. Take Elvis Presley for instance. Now, is that a perfect name for him or what? Where did his parents come up with Elvis? What if his name had been Seymour Lifshitz? Would he have become "The King"? Would all the cheap tabloids blaze the headline: "Seymour is alive, and I'm carrying his baby. I doubt it."

What about Walt Disney? What if his name were Vito Numnutz? Would we have grown up watching "The Wonderful World Of Numnutz"? I sure wouldn't let my kid watch that.

I like to give a fictitious name when I'm on a waiting list at a restaurant. I usually give the name "Crowbar". I like to watch the reaction of the customers when they hear that name and don't see a big redneck with a huge beer gut encased in his forty-eight inch belt.

Symbols are what separate us from the animal world. As far as we know, animals don't name their offspring. (It would be tough for a cat to name a litter of six.) Most of you will probably have children some day, if you don't already. Remember to put much thought into a name, and empathize with the child. Think of how you would like to go through grade school with that name.

I was lucky -- my father's name could have been Wiley.

We're All In This Together

One sunny August morning while I was spending a week at the beach on Emerald Island near Moorehead City, I walked out with a towel, beach chair, sunblock 146, preparing to set up by another day of sunshine and body surfing. Lo and behold, down the beach comes a Marine Jeep with 2 Marines flanking it, walking slowly down the beach scanning the sands for debris. I was quickly told that medical waste had washed up on our beach including much of the garbage we have been hearing about on the beaches of New Jersey.

"Dear God In Heaven," I thought, "the ocean is puking back up the garbage we have been feeding it!" My second thought was, "Justice is served!" We are reaping the consequences of our actions and how else should it be?

Earlier this summer I had been doing some reading about the universe and was led to a new appreciation of this tiny, fragile biosphere in space called Earth. As far as we know we are the only planet inhabited by intelligent life able to reflect on our place in the universe. As far as we know we are the only beings who are able to appreciate our own existence and the wonder of the stars. But, intimately yoked to that unique sense of wonder is an absolute sense of responsibility since our human intelligence allows us to modify our environment and our interaction with it.

Fundamentally, we simply have to learn that we are a part of this fragile ecosystem and not masters of it. We simply cannot use the oceans for our garbage dumps and the air for our industry's vaporized excrement without having to deal with consequences like infectious syringes washing up on our beaches in the bright summer sun. There is growing evidence, not only in the form of needles on the beach but in the deterioration of the ozone layer and the increasing greenhouse effect that we are slowly committing planetary suicide.

You can do two things. First, you can go by the Livewell/Alternative Center and sign up to participate in Beach Sweep 88 on September 24. That day you can spend a morning picking up the trash on Masonboro Island that UNCW students have a part in creating. Secondly, you can spend some time increasing your awareness that you are an integral part of the planet Earth, not its master. The earth has grown you, has produced you just as surely as it grows a tree or births a porpoise. The sea is our ancestral mother. Walk her beaches, feel the kinship and struggle for her honor.

Sexpert To Visit

Dr. Roger Libby is a humorous, popular sociologist and sexologist with a soft sculpture frog (horny toad) named Roxanne Ribbit, who wears the T-shirt of each university and college they visit.

Libby frequently appears on national T.V. shows. He has appeared on "Oprah Winfrey" ("Sexy People"), "Gerald" ("Nude Centerfolds and Boudoir Photography") and MTV (with Roxanne Ribbit during "Spring Break '87"). He is also a regular guest on CNN's "News Night." He was interviewed on "Heterosexual AIDS Paranoia" on "News Night." He was featured on "Sally Jessy Raphael" on the same day ("Car Religion Ruin Your Sex Life?") His next appearance will be on the "Will Shriner Show", in February (date to be set).

Libby has also appeared on Public Television's "Currents" ("The State of Marriage"), "David Susskind" and other well-known shows. He is the co-author of the award-winning college text, Sexual Choices, he wrote the Foreword to the re-release of the international bestseller, Open Marriage, and he has edited three additional books on sex and the state of intimate relationships. He is also a regular guest columnist for USA Today, and his photo with Roxanne Ribbit will appear in March in a new publication by Playboy called Year in Sex.

Libby doesn't adhere to traditional thinking that we must either be funny or serious about sex. He believes humor and a serious concern about sexual problems are not only compatible, but necessary to fully grasp the complexities of sex. Libby's humor helps audiences relax so they can learn while enjoying his responsible, liberal approach to sex.

To Libby, sex doesn't have to be a problem! According to Libby: "Today's society puts down those who enjoy pleasure while celebrating hard work. Sex is viewed as humorous and dangerous. There is far too much guilt, garbage and games. We need to be informed so we can make responsible sexual choices, and have some fun along the way."

Unlike most speakers and writers on sex, Libby doesn't try to force everyone into one sexual lifestyle. He celebrates a diversity of values and lifestyles as a healthy, exciting reality while emphasizing openness, honesty and caring no matter what lifestyle a person chooses.

Rather than play into paranoia about AIDS and other venereal diseases, Libby takes a balanced approach to sexual risks, and he suggests ways to lower risks. His bottom line is that sex can be fun and funny. He offers suggestions for enjoying sexual pleasure without undue hassles.

Live Performances

Opera House Theatre Company proudly presents the intense, dramatic musical "West Side Story" at the Scottish Rite Temple Theater, 1415 South 17th Street. "West Side Story" places the tragic story of Romeo and Juliet in the contemporary slums of New York City celebrating with fiery intensity love's attempt to flourish against a backdrop of hate and prejudice. This brilliant collaboration between Leonard Bernstein, Arthur Laurents, Stephen Sondheim and Jerome Robbins combines words, music lyrics and dance into some of the most remembered songs of the theater - "Maria," "Tonight," "I Feel Pretty," "Somewhere," "One Hand, One Heart," "Gee, Officer Krupke!", and many more.

Caught between two warring gangs, the Jets and the Sharks, Cindy Colluci, Gloria Crist, Patrick Boyd and Nicky Hammerhead star as the two couples destined to feel the effects of society's pressures. Also featured are Franklin Williams, Jr. as Riff, Alexis Cheiffet as Velma, Tony Pender as Action, Linda Carlisle as Anybodies, Jaime Donegan as A-rab, Lara Smith as Rosalia, Jason Evans as Baby John, Paul Mixon as Lt. Schrank, and Jean Wenderlich as Doc. Directed and choreographed by Ray Lee Kennedy, this modern day love story is one of the most memorable and lovely of all musicals. The show plays every night at 8:00 p.m. through September 18th. For reservations call the Center Box Office at 763-3398 or 763-9328 from 10:00 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Tickets are available at the door.

Jacobs Run is kicking off their Fall theatrical season with two exciting one-act plays: Zoo Story by Edward Albee, and Swan Song by Anton Chekhov. Both are to be presented From Thursday Sept. 15, to Sunday the 18th. Curtain time is 8:00 pm and a 3:00 pm matinee Sunday. Ticket prices are $5.00 for students and $6.00 for the general public.

Zoo Story features a dramatic confrontation between two people in New York's Central Park. Swan Song brings together two old actors on a deserted stage, re-creating their greatest roles.

All five individuals associated with the production are UNCW based:

Terry Theodore, Director, is a professor in creative arts.

Vickie Bridgers is a junior, Ed Danilowicz is a UNCW graduate, Daniel Riggs a junior and Dan Wargo is a part-time lecturer in creative arts.

We, The Mediocre . . . Why "We The Mediocre..."?

by Kelly Holsten

Several people (actually no one, but it sounds good) have inquired as to the meaning of the title of this column. Why "We The Mediocre...?" Do you mean to put down your own column as well as the music? Well...Yes! Why hide the truth? Why not let it bleed forth in it's pure UGLINESS?

Yes, let's be honest, the "new music" at present is some of the most ugly, mediocre, incompetent, decayed, deficient, foul, putrid, shabby, depraved, rotten, imperfect... (what was I talking about?) All of those words can be used at one time or another in describing progressive music.

The funny part is --- that is what makes it GOOD! "Top 40" music in the last fifteen years has turned into slick, lifeless, polished, unimaginative, over-produced radio fodder. It doesn't offend; it deadens the mind not unlike some viscous white glue. It's sharp as a knife in production, yet dull as oatmeal in inspiration. It is Empty...Void...it makes lots and lots of money.

Progressive music has filled this "void" created by current FM commercial radio onslaught. Instead of slick packaging with little imaginative content, there's UGLY packaging with imaginative content. Progressive music exudes wit, grit, feeling, and honesty. Now any Honestly Lame Swine can pick up an instrument, and call himself a musician. In fact, if he's clever, he can locate other equally desperate swill, then Unite, and using imagination to make up for the complete lack of musical virtuosity, invent strange, twisted songs with titles like "My Mother Is A Fish." You see college radio gives the downtrodden an outlet... otherwise these hopeless dreamers would be stuck in a world full of "Journey's" and "REO Speedwagons." These poor souls would be forced to act out their lives in utter despair (much like the feeling you get when re-reading an article such as this).

Commercial radio houses the Uptrodden with absolutely NO MENTAL ABILITY, while college radio has the downtrodden with some semblance of mental capability. And I have lost ALL ability to REASON AS A HUMAN BEING!

SO...let us drink to MEDIOCRITY before we resort to drooling and walking about on all fours. AND let us pray that we can decipher the main point buried in this mediocre column...

If You Haven't Started...Start With These

The Replacements "Sorry Ma...& Stink" (Twin )

If you don't know who "The Replacements" are, then I advise you to become informed with these two albums. They have turned into cult heroes. The Replacements early sound is best described as distorted-guitar-pow Trash with extremely witty lyrics. Their first album "Sorry Ma..." contains no less than eighteen little nuggets of three and four corded terror, with lyrics like, "I Hate Music," it's got too many notes." You can't go wrong. The album "Stink" is representations of the Live Replacements Sound: Drunk chaotic, energy filled and LOUD. Buy it if you can find it!

Big Black "The Hammer Party" (Homestead Records, Chicago)

This L.P. is a combination of the first two E.P.'s (now available) by BIG BLACK. Big Black is another band which reached cult status; unfortunately, they broke up last year. Steve Albini, the creative inspiration behind the band, has now gone on to producing others. Big Black is probably the most imitated band right now--their sound has been duplicated, but never bettered! Picture a guitar and bass whose sound duplicates an industrial plant manufacturing steel hardware. There's usually a straight forward drum machine track or two layered underneath. The vocals compliment the industrial sound--it resembles someone yelling through guitar pickups. For Big Black imitators, try Bastro, My Dad Is Dead, and later Breaking Circus.

The Wailing "Ultimate Compilation (Homestead) N.Y>

This is one of the best compilations out to date. These are all bands on Homestead Records which happens to be one of the top independent labels for New music. This album is a must to get acquainted with some of the better progressive bands. A list of those includes: Volcano Suns, Big Black, Dinosaur, Naked Raygun, Death Of Samantha, Squirrel Bait, Big Dipper, Breaking Circus, Anticam, and Live Skull. If you happen to be scared to purchase all of these bands individually, this album is the answer. Ask Record Bar or School Kids Records to Order It!

Firehose "Ragin' Full On" (SST) San Pedro, Ca.

Formally, The Minutemen minus lead singer-guitar player, D. Boon who was killed in a car crash. While firehose may not be the force in music that the Minutemen were, they are one of the most creative and inspired bands out today. Their second L.P. "Ifn", was a huge success, but didn't hold a candle to their debut album "Ragin' Full On". This trio is propelled by an excellent rhythm section. Mike Watt, on bass, has taken up the leadership lost by Boon's death, and given us an album laden with off-beat rhythms, creative guitar licks, wide ranging vocals, and interesting song writing. While new front man, "Ed from Ohio's" voice does sound like REM at times, the band never does. This band does not rely as much on distortion--a very accessible band that remains Honest.

Human Exhibitions?

The Bronx Zoo in New York had the dubious distinction of being the only American zoo ever to exhibit a human being in a cage. Ota Benga, a twenty-three-year-old Congolese Pygmy, had been brought to the U.S. by the African explorer Samuel Verner to appear at the 1904 St. Louis Exposition. When a tribal war prevented Benga from being returned to his native land, Verner gave the four foot eleven inch African to the Bronx Zoo. He was exhibited in a cage with an orangutan.

Of course there was an uproar from churches and black communities and Benga was taken out of the cage and worked at the zoo.

Misinformation

Count Dracula, a Fictional character invented by Bram Stoker (1847-1912), was not called a vampire because he sucked the blood of living beings like the vampire bats of Central and South America. In fact, the vampire bats, which do indeed suck the blood of cattle and other domestic animals, were named after the vampires of Transylvania legend.

U.S. Indians In High Places

Virtually all of New York City's skyline has been built by American Mohawk Indians. Mohawks are famed for their catlike agility and indifference to heights. Evidently, the Mohawks' low anxiety level at high altitudes is inborn. For more than a century, these strengths have earned thousands of Mohawks high-level positions as riveters on skyscrapers in New York and other North American Cities.

Saying Goodbye To A Legend

As I sat and watched the painful, agonizing deterioration, my mind began to wander. And then it began to race. Match point, however, quickly brought me back to the harsh reality that my childhood idol's "day's were limited." "The handwriting had by this point totally engulfed the wall." It was clearly time to hang up the spikes." Etc. Etc..

Refusing to surrender to the empty emotions emitted by the solemn occasion, I thought back to day one of our love-hate relationship (I loved it when he won and I hated it when he lost). I can clearly remember the first time my eyes averted at his incredible ability.

I can remember, as a small child, the first time he lost a Grand Slam final. I cried. Small children often weep over seemingly monumental occasions that adults perceive to be relatively unimportant.

His long-flowing, curly hair tamed by the rebellious bandana he donned, his effortless movement surely would have been the envy of many a dancer. More than a tennis player, he was a performer. And more than that, he was my mentor. Unbeknownst to him, of course, his aura and court savvy would be attempted to be recreated by his biggest fan.

Wimbledon. 1981. After two years of frustration he finally broke through, defeating another man to the disdain of thousands of British patrons who jeered his unsportsmanlike behavior. I can remember as he lifted the trophy above his head, his USA Davis Cup jacket customarily zipped to the neck, lowered and kissed the trophy, and finally, raised it again, proudly telling all who cared to listen that he was indeed a Wimbledon Champion.

He would go on to repeat this scenario twice more, each time taking the opportunity to give thanks to his mother. I like people who give thanks to their mother.

Though ostracized by his own country for his behavioral propensities, he nonetheless, showed the necessary patriotism to pilot his country to several Davis Cup victories.

St. Louis. 1982. He probably won more admiration and received more fan support during his Davis Cup tie with Sweden's Mats Wilander than any previous match in his career. His six-hour marathon ended triumphantly; he defeated Wilander and America won the Cup. For six hours I sat glued to my grandmother's television set, agonizing over unforced errors and rejoicing over his deceptive, artistic, drop shots.

Wimbledon. 1984. The year in which he went 78-2. He destroyed fellow American Jimmy Connors in three straight sets illustrating to the world that he was indeed, the king of the court. History has shown that this would be his last Wimbledon title.

U.S. Open. 1984. His final round victory over Ivan Lendl solidified his position as the top-ranked and most feared player on the men's circuit. His dominating style of play had netted him two of the four Grand Slam titles that year. However, sadly enough, this clinching title, looking back in retrospect, would signify the denouement to an illustrious career.

It was a far more mature John McEnroe that entered Stadium Court last Thursday night. Not the "Superbrat" of his younger, more temperamental days. There would be no name calling, no questioning of close calls and tragically, no victory.

The two men have just exchanged handshakes. I can only imagine what he must be thinking. Hopefully it's about the important things in life, not tennis, but his wife, and his two sons. Tonight as he left the court, I couldn't help but think it was probably for the last time. Tonight we may have said goodbye to the greatest tennis player in American history. And if so, I hope he realized that his efforts and training did not go unnoticed. Somewhere, I guarantee it, in a small town, on a secluded court that may or may not have a net, two young boys will live out their fantasies. Their court will become Centre Court. Their opponent will become Bjorn Borg. And most definitely, they will become John Patrick McEnroe, Jr., American tennis hero.

How do I know? That's simple. Because not so long ago that secluded court was my feeble attempt at creating Centre Court. And for a brief moment, after stretching and hitting a drop shot winner, I was John McEnroe.

They say imitation is the greatest form of appreciation. I certainly believe so. How do you say thank you to someone who has provided such joy?

I'm not sure, but I think I just did.

Ailing Hawks Face "Must Win" Game

UNC Wilmington's Jackie Blackmore says ball possession tells the story of the early fortunes of the Seahawk soccer team in 1988. Opponents are simply controlling the ball on the young Seahawks.

"People are asking why we aren't scoring," he says, "but we need to focus on other things. Once we learn to possess the ball, we can get more scoring opportunities. That's the key."

A young team and rigorous schedule has taken its toll on the Seahawks, who recently dropped a pair of Colonial Athletic Association road games over the weekend to James Madison and George Mason. UNCW was shut out twice, losing 1-0 to the Dukes and 2-0 against the Patriots to fall to 1-3-0 overall, and 0-2 in the CAA.

"Obviously, if you aren't scoring, you're not going to win any games," says Blackmore. "We have had some chances. The quality of teams on the schedule has been good, so you have to take that into consideration."

Four games into the season, sophomore striker Chris George leads the Seahawks in scoring with four points on two goals. The Hawks have been outscored by a 7-3 margin against all opponents and 3-0 in CAA contests.

The schedule now breaks UNCW's way after opening the season with three of their four games on the road. Richmond visits Brooks Field Saturday for a 1:00 p.m. conference match-up and CAA rivals Navy and American travel to the Port City next weekend for back-to-back matches.

According to Blackmore, "If we're going to have a shot at doing anything in the conference, we have to win the Richmond game. Our schedule has been a strong one so far."

Despite the scores, Blackmore was pleased with the overall play of the Seahawks in the weekend games. The Seahawks turned in solid efforts in the losses on the road.

"I thought we played with more intensity and more aggressively. Every match has been difficult. We've played the most difficult part of our schedule. That should help us down the line to be stronger."

One of the bright spots for the Seahawks has been sophomore goalkeeper John Pinter. The Bethesda, Md., native has recorded 39 saves in four starts after taking over for graduated former MVP Donnie Lewis.

Pinter played sparingly last season behind Lewis, seeing action in just four games and 152 minutes overall. Pinter has allowed seven goals for a 1.5 goals allowed per game average.

"I think John has proven himself," says Blackmore. "He has played very safe and solid, and he's directing traffic like he should. He's been very consistent and solid for us."

The Seahawks, who started last season with a 3-0 record, have 13 games remaining in the season, including seven at Brooks Field. Saturday's opponent, the Spiders, posted a 5-1 victory over the Hawks last season's game played in Richmond.

Richmond holds a 3-2 advantage over the Seahawks in the five-game series between the two universities. The Spiders, coached by Tim Sullivan, have not allowed more than one goal against the Hawks in their last three encounters.

"They've lost a few key players," added Blackmore, "but they're supposed to have some good new players. They play a lot like we do in that they like to possess the ball. The difference last year was their quickness."

Six players have started all four games for the Seahawks: forward Chris George, midfielders David Cresswell and Dean Arnell, and backs John Hollenbach, Marc Rose and Sean Wallace.

Boom! UNCW's Lady Seahawks Spiked Their Way To Nine Wins In 10 Games In Their Season Debut At The Carolina Classic Volleyball Tournament Played In Chapel Hill.

Spikers Dominate

Volleyball

The Seahawks made their season debut a successful one by finishing unbeaten in three matches at the Carolina Classic Volleyball Tournament at UNC Chapel Hill.

Fourth-year coach Kathy McDaniel received strong performances from seniors DeDe Dewley (New Hanover HS/Wilmington, N.C.) and Mary Lou Ryan (Elba Central HS/Elba, N.Y.). Both players were selected to the All-Tournament team at the event.

UNCW defeated UNC Asheville (15-2, 15-3, 15-11), Davidson (15-8, 15-4, 15-10) and Appalachian State (17-15, 15-8, 6-15, 15-11). Overall, the Seahawks won 9-of-10 games in the tournament.

Women's Golf

Nina Van Drumpt finished third individually with a three-day total of 231 to lead the Seahawks to second place in the Longwood College Invitational Tournament in Farmville, Va.

The sophomore from Sala, Sweden, turned in rounds of 76, 76 and 79 to finish three strokes behind medalist Shannon Hanley of James Madison. Hanley fired a 229 to pace JMU to the team title, 17 strokes better than the Seahawks.

UNCW's Paige Cribb had a 236 total to finish in a fourth-place tie, while teammate Mary Thomas tied for 11th with a 241.

Team Finish: James Madison 306-315-315-965; Wilmington 321-315-318-954; Methodist 321-316-320-957; Winthrop 322-327-327-971; Appalachian State 347-344-342-1033; College of Charleston 374-367-362-1103.

UNCW Individuals: Nina Van

Drumpt 76-76-79-231; Paige Cribb 79-77-80-236; Mary Thomas 81-82-78-241; Laura Covington 85-80-81-246; Michelle Kamayer 88-89-87-264.

Cross Country

First-year coach Bill Cason made his UNC Wilmington debut by taking the Seahawks to Pembroke, N.C., for the women's race and 10 teams took part in the men's race.

UNCW placed fourth in the women's side, while the men finished in eighth place. Six teams competed in the women's race and 10 teams took part in the men's race.

Missy Hall placed sixth with a time of 19:34 over the three-mile course as UNCW's top finisher in the women's race. Layne Fuller ended up 13th with a clocking of 27:35 in the five-mile men's race.

Team scores: Women: Virginia Commonwealth 29, East Carolina 56, Coastal Carolina 60, UNC Wilmington 80, Methodist N/A, Pembroke State N/A. Men: Methodist 31, Virginia Commonwealth 39, Francis Marion 83, Coastal Carolina 108, East Carolina 157, Methodist "B" 157, Pembroke State 199, UNC Wilmington 240, Pfeiffer 259, St. Andrews 266.

UNCW Individuals: Women: Missy Hall (19:34), 10. Beth Holt (20:09), 22. Jamie Oxedine (21:34), 27. Lalonne Walker (22:20), 28. Sarah Harris (22:37), 33. Tammy Connolly (22:54), 41. Debra Tate (26:12). Men: 13. Layne Fuller (27:35), 53. Thomas Howell (30:34), 66. John Pugh (32:32), 79. Beau Cates (34:43), 84. Tim Gallagher (37:53).

Lady Golfer Named Academic All-America

Junior golfer Mary Thomas of Leonardtown, Maryland, has been named to the Academic All-America team selected by the National Golf Coaches Association (NGCA).

Thomas, who is majoring in Marine Biology at UNCW, joins 30 other women honored recently by the NGCA. She is the school's first honoree in golf.

"I'm very overwhelmed with the honor," says Thomas. "I'm surprised that I received it. It's difficult to keep up with your studies and play well because you're gone for several days."

"When I'm not playing golf, I'm in the library. It takes a lot of studying to make up for lost time in the classroom. You just have to be disciplined and adaptable."

Thomas is also a two-time winner of the Coaches Award, given annually to the player who personifies the qualities of a winner. She worked full-time over the summer in the University of Maryland's Chesapeake Bay Biology Laboratory.

"We are excited for Mary," says Lea Dudley, UNCW's 10-year coach. "It's a real good example of how a student can pick a school for its academic value and also benefit in the golf area at the same time."

"We stress academics first. We want the player to live up to her potential academically and athletically."

The 19-year-old Thomas should play a major role in UNCW's success this season. She competed in this year's Maryland State Amateur Tournament and appears primed for the fall schedule.

"The team captain on my left won the coin toss and has elected to forfeit the game."

Orientation Reunion Begins On 28th

By Chad Adams
Managing Editor

On September 28 the Office of Student Affairs will begin, for the first time, an orientation reunion for all those who attended the summer orientation sessions this year.

During the Summer Orientation Programs, the incoming freshmen were divided into 15 groups of approximately 25 students and assigned to an Orientation leader. All of these students who attended these programs are invited to join in this new reunion.

According to Dr. Richard Mullendore, Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, 98% of those who attended the Orientation programs came to UNCW this year. With 60% of that 98% expected to attend these reunions Mullendore hopes to receive information on the effectiveness of the Summer Orientation Programs, to facilitate discussions regarding student satisfaction and/or dissatisfaction with UNCW and to improve the retention of new students through early intervention and referral.

"Students often make their decision, regarding whether to stay in school or a particular school, during the first six weeks of their college career," said Mullendore. "We hope to find out what the intentions of our students are during this critical period."

During the reunion students will fill out a questionnaire with statements pertaining to Residence Life, ARA Food Service, and academic advising. In addition the questionnaire asks about the utilization of such services as the Student Development Center and The Career Planning And Placement Center.

The planning for the reunions has been the responsibility of Sara Shilling, Student Director of the Orientation Program.

"We hope that the groups present will be open and honest about their feelings toward UNCW," said Shilling. "Only through this honest interaction of the students and administration can we continue the success of this University as a whole."

Mullendore

A written report of the results of this reunion will be presented to the offices of concern and will be available to the faculty and students

Fledgling Revives

By Celeste E. Bulley
Editor-in-Chief

The Fledgling, UNCW's oft-troubled yearbook is making a comeback this year. The new editor, Ed Shiffler, is working hard to pull staff and finances together as the Senate prepares to review his budget and get the Fledgling off the ground for 1988-89.

As UNCW students might remember, the 1987-88 Fledgling staff had problems producing an annual last year. The Fledgling began last year as a traditional 200 page hardbound annual. Partway through the year, the Student Senate felt too much was being spent on the book with no return and a motion was made to cancel the annual altogether. However, the Fledgling's co-editors, Beki English and Jenni Brown were able to negotiate a 120 page softbound magazine to be produced by the same company, Josten's. The magazine was to be called Out of Chaos, which the editors felt symbolized all the good things that could come from confusion.

Although material had been turned into the printing company, mid-year English resigned, citing personal time constraints as the reason. Shortly afterward, Brown became ill, and on March 23, 1988, the Senate suspended the editor's $100 monthly paychecks. The Fledgling, which was to have been completed in January and ready for distribution in April, was in real trouble.

Many problems arose from the presale of the 1987-88 annual during the 1986-87 school year. The Fledgling had prosold $855 worth of the hardbound yearbooks and $39 worth of the softbound, and if an annual wasn't completed, the money would have to be refunded.

During the spring, Shiffler, a Fledgling/Out of Chaos photographer, called Brown requesting information about the state of the yearbook and about becoming the 1988-89 editor. She referred him to Cindy Zeiber, former head of the Media Publications Board, who had Shiffler fill out an application. He was then reviewed by MPB and accepted as the new editor.

"Had no one applied, there would have been no yearbook this year," says Shiffler. However, he had to present a budget to the Senate Budget committee during last year's hearings, and the budget started by Brown was incomplete. Shiffler had two weeks to work something up to present to the committee.

"When I came before them, they wanted to

Task Force Vs. UNCW Parties

By Bruce Foley
Staff Writer

The scene is all too familiar. Music echoing off surrounding houses. Cars lined up and down both sides of normally quiet residential streets. From a single house, hundreds of beer gripping youths spill into the front yard and street. The roar of laughter and countless conversations drown out the peaceful calm of the surrounding neighborhood late into the evening.

The scene is a party, a huge success, with everyone enjoying the festive atmosphere; everyone that is except the surrounding neighbors.

Since the beginning of 1986 when North Carolina raised its drinking age to 21, off campus parties in residential areas has been steadily rising. As a result, concerned, angry neighbors have flooded the Wilmington Police station with countless complaints; a reflection of the growing tension between local Wilmington residents and the UNCW campus.

In an attempt to raise questions and offer possible solutions the Wilmington City Council and the Mayor have created the UNCW-Neighborhood relations task force.

Comprised of high ranking UNCW officials and city officials, the task force met on September 8 with a number of concerned neighbors who aired their complaints regarding recent large, unruly parties, and disturbances associated with the opening of the UNCW campus. Grievances ranged from parking violations, loud music, and littering, to more heated issues of vandalism, Fraternity houses in residential areas, drunk and disorderly conduct, trespassing, and public urinating.

"College Acres Drive is a residential area. There are groups of students living together using two houses as unofficial Fraternity dwellings. That's a violation of zoning laws," said Bernie Bentley, president of his home owners association.

"We have other people at the north end of the College Acres Dr. subdivision that are absolutely scared to death," said Bentley.

Thomas MacDonald of Pine Hills Drive argued the rights of the neighbors and the role UNC-W should play.

"As far as I'm concerned our primary complaint is the complete disregard for the rights of the neighbors. There was one incident where a woman was harassed with obscene, abusive language, right in her front yard, while her sixteen year old son stood next to her. It's a very sad situation," said MacDonald.

"We sit and watch the quality of our neighborhoods drop, and I put some of the blame on UNCW. I don't understand why if these parties are good enough for our neighborhoods, why aren't they good enough for the UNCW campus?" said MacDonald.

Searching for reasons that stimulate these parties, the task force looked at the complex problem from various factors.

"One problem we cannot deny is that our campus is growing very fast, yet we only have the facilities to house about 30% of the campus population. As concerned as we are, our hands are tied to situations outside the campus perimeter," said William Bryan, UNCW Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

"The University has a responsibility to work with the students through the media, the student government, and other organizations. We must look at this behavior and encourage appropriate behavior for students. This is what we are trying to reach at with the task force.

Both residents and UNCW officials agree that much of the cause of the rise in neighborhood parties is a direct result of the recent change in the drinking laws.

"You cannot deny that the new drinking laws have not limited a lot of kids on where they can go to drink. They can no longer go to bars, the University cannot serve them, so they head for the security of the crowded parties off campus, where they can drink relatively free of hassle," said Bernie Bentley.

The new law has left only a minority of the campus population legally old enough to drink. Vice Chancellor Bryan explained that in previous years the University would supply alcohol for parties and functions on campus, but it would be impossible to do that now without turning away a large percentage of students.

"There are however legitimate steps a group can take to have alcohol at a party on campus. Unfortunately it requires an alcohol permit to be obtained through the proper channels. This not only ruins the spontaneity of the party, but almost guarantees a police officer will be close at hand at all times. This would be an obvious deterrent for underage drinkers. So what will they do? They head off campus to a party," said Joe Johnson, Director of Public Safety for UNCW.

Though the situation is a complex problem, the university strongly supports the neighbor's views.

"We are very concerned about the kind of publicity these kinds of youthful over exuberances are causing. It not only gives the University a bad name, but also portrays our students in a dim light," said Director of Communications, Mimi Cunningham.

"We must also keep in mind that the trouble with these parties is that everyone automatically assumes that because of the age group, they must be UNCW students. This is just not true. The 'Wilmington police have reported a large percentage of

Francis Named "Living Treasure"

(UNCW News)--The Institute for Human Potential at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has selected Spruce Pine marquetarian Thayer Francis as the 1988 Living Treasure of North Carolina, only the second individual to be so honored with this designation.

Thayer Francis has spent his life perfecting the artistic skill of marquetry, also known as Intarsia. This art form involves shaving layers of veneer from domestic and exotic woods, then assembling pieces of the veneers using the wood's natural shadings and grain to create a design.

The award will be presented to Francis during a banquet at 7 p.m., Thursday, September 29, in the Hawk's Nest of the University Union. He will be presented a bronze medal crafted by Shallotte artist Duane Shilz and cast by Stephen LeQuire, associate professor of art at UNC Wilmington.

Prior to the presentation, Francis will be available to meet with students from 10-11 a.m. and 3-4 p.m. in the Quiet Lounge, room 210, of the University Union. He will bring samples of his work to exhibit during these sessions.

Now 86, Francis continues to work in his shop, the Thayer House of Marquetry, near the Blue Ridge Parkway in Spruce Pine, producing works of art ranging in size from 10"x11" to 26"x20", although his work averages 16"x18". His designs include flowers, landscapes, and copies of famous paintings. Francis says he most enjoys producing scenes such as his 16"x18" portrayals of Grandfather Mountain and Mt. Pisgah. His favorite piece to produce is known as the Roman Girl at the Fountain. On the back of each of his works is a list of all varieties of wood used in its creation.

A Folk Art Show at the Smithsonian Institution once displayed his "Tennessee Walking Horse." In 1980 he was named Craftsman of the Year at the Village of Yesteryear at the N.C. State Fair, where until last year he had exhibited his work for 25 years.

A portion of his shop is set aside as a marquetry museum and features work of artists he calls "superb marquetarians," including Paul Lewis Spindler and William Bader.

Investment Challenge Given To Colleges And Universities

When the stock market opens for trading on Tuesday morning, November 1st, college students will take control of their own $500,000 brokerage account and begin competing against thousands of students across the country. For the next four months, they will buy and sell real stocks in an effort to maximize the value of their portfolios. What makes this event so unique is that a full service brokerage firm has been set up to handle all trading activity and provide human assistance throughout the event.

When participants are ready to start investing they just pick up the phone and call their broker on a toll-free 800 line that is provided. Their broker is positioned at a fully automated trading desk ready to execute trades based on up to the minute stock quotes beamed in via satellite from the Exchanges in New York.

At the end of each month, players will be mailed a personal three page account statement and newsletter. The statement will provide an account summary, a record of all their transactions, a complete listing of portfolio holdings, and a current valuation of their account. There will also be a rankings section showing how each participant fared against students in their class, at their college, and across the country. Who will be the best on campus? How about number one in the country?

There are a number of ways to be a winner in The First Annual AT&T Collegiate Investment Challenge.

The Top student at each college will receive an engraved plaque and a certificate listing them as the recordholder at their college (minimum of 25 students per campus).

Any student to double the value of their account will find a spot in The Millionaires' Club.

The Top 100 Performers each month will receive athletic shoes from Reebok and a wrist watch, courtesy of Benetton by Bulova.

Now for the Top Ten players in the country. They will be flown with a guest to New York City and honored at an awards ceremony where the top performer will receive a cash prize of $25,000!!!

Student Poetry Contest Awards Prizes For 152 Entries

A trip to Hawaii for two is the new Grand Prize prize in the American Poetry Association's latest poetry contest. There is also a $1,000 First Prize. In all, 152 poets will win $11,000 worth of prizes. Contest entry is free.

"Students have been winners in all our contests," said Robert Nelson, the publisher for the Association. "So I urge students to enter now. Later they may be too busy with exams."

Poets may send up to five poems, no more than 20 lines each, with name and address on each page to American Poetry Association, Dept. CN-74, 250 A Potrero Street, P.O. Box 1803, Santa Cruz, CA 95061.

Poems are judged on originality and sincerity. Every poem is also considered for publication.

In the last six years the American Poetry Association has sponsored 27 contests and awarded $101,000 to 2,700 winning poets.

Poems postmarked by December 31 are eligible to win. Prizes will be awarded by February 28, 1989.

Sax Conference Scheduled

(UNCW News)--The University of North Carolina at Wilmington's division of music will host a regional conference of the North American Saxophone Alliance on September 30 and October 1 in Kenan Auditorium. Convening at 3 Friday afternoon and continuing through Saturday evening, the conference will feature lectures, masterclasses and performances by student and professional saxophonists from all over the country. Evening concerts will be presented on Friday and Saturday nights at 8, featuring guest artists as well as local artists.

The Friday night concert will include performances by James Houdik of the North Carolina School of the Arts; Frank Bongiorno, assistant professor of music at UNC Wilmington and conference host, with the Wilmington Academy of Music Orchestra under the direction of Nancy McAllister; Steven Mauk, saxophone professor at Ithaca College, New York; and Kenneth Fischer, saxophone professor at the University of Georgia in Athens, with the UNC Wilmington Wind Ensemble, under the direction of Harry McLamb. Friday evening's performance is free.

Saturday evening will feature jazz artists Sarge Parsons; Jack Wilkins, jazz instructor at James Madison University. Admission charge for Saturday evening's performance will be $4 general admission and $2 for students and senior citizens. UNCW students free with a valid ID.

For more conference information, contact Frank Bongiorno in the division of music at 395-3390.

Senate Debates How to Pay Miss UNCW

By David Vaughn
SGA Correspondent

It seems that whenever our Senate gets together in a group with respectable size the end result is always one of two things: a load of needless debate or an unexpected efficiency. Monday it was a little of both.

The meeting opened with newly elected senators being sworn in and the entire Senate introduced themselves to each other so first-time senators would not feel uncomfortable. Robert Smith briefly explained their procedure.

In her President's address, Karla Alston submitted her appointments of Angeline Weyrick to the Union Board, Denise-Marie Caldwell to the Evaluation Committee, Dana Triplet to the Computer Service Committee, and Burt Kilpatrick to the Supreme Court. All were approved. President Alston also answered questions about the Senate retreat this Friday and Saturday.

In the Vice-President's report, Robert Smith asked for recommendations to the Student Organizations Committee. The five final recommendations were Kelly Turner, Angie Mundy, Randy Hollifield, Tasha Boorke and Chris Slemenda.

Robert also said that five appointments to the Judiciary committee were needed and that "we will go without one for a while if I don't get enough of them." He also stressed the importance of appointing members to the Media Publications Board. Positions are open for petition to the offices of Spring Rep-at-large, Sophomore class VP and Senior class Senator.

Senator Kim Tracy moved to open nominations for President pro tempore of the Senate (the senator who presides in the absence of the chair) Lee Barnhill won by secret ballot.

The Attorney General, Chris Mercer, explained the absentee system to the new senators and also called for an end to needless chatter when someone is speaking and needless debate.

Lee Barnhill, Acting Chairman of the Finance Committee, asked for a student appointee and gave a one-week notice of the removal of Alan Daniel due to internal matters. Two Senate seats are open due to resignations.

Bryan Holler, Acting Judiciary Committee Chairman, asked for more members and wanted to meet after next Monday's meeting.

Todd Shaver, Student Activities Advisor, also spoke about the retreat, saying that the main emphasis was team building and communication, having fun and "doing a lot of work," and complimented the Senate on being pro-active, not reactive.

The only scheduled business for this week was Senator Kim Tracy's motion to take $800 from the general fund and pay the scholarships won by the 1st and 2nd runner-up of the Miss UNCW pageant. The 1st runner-up is Madeline Shipp and the 2nd runner-up is Jill Williams.

Debate ensued when the motion was objected to.

There were three rounds of debate this week. In the first round of affirmative debate Kim said that the money for these two girls was in the budget last year and was not paid to them, and it was promised that it would be worked out in the Senate. Shawn Mullins, a newly elected Spring Rep, asked if the girls had a need for the money. Tracy responded that the SGA had promised them their money and they were entitled to receive what was theirs. Senator Shatterly supported the motion, saying that if the girls did not get their money the pageant would go downhill from lack of interest.

Lee Barnhill opened the negative debate by affirming that "[these girls] deserve their money" but that it should come from the Executive account because that was where the money was originally budgeted. Tracy queried what was the President's budget for last and this year but only this year's figure $41,950, was available.

Bryan Holler stated that the $800 rolled over into something else and that since the President had raised her salary $600 there had to be money somewhere. Senator Humphries asked for the purpose of the General Account and was told it was for clubs and organizations.

Asking himself if it was fair to make this Executive budget pay, Senator Tim Lee said yes, because this year's budget should take into account last year's deficit. Senator Mullins did not agree with covering deficits with money not allocated for that purpose.

Bryan Holler proposed changing "general account" to "executive budget" but when doubts arose as to the ability of the Senate to tamper with the budget that way Senator Tracy rejected the proposal. Robert Smith said the money for these two people last year was spent.

In the second round of debate, words went back and forth until Kim Tracy asked if the President could air her feelings about her budget. Senator Holler made an inappropriate objection to this; the Senate voted to let the President speak.

Karla defended her budget, saying "When I ran I promised the students something and I can only give it to them with what I've budgeted." Lee King left her with a negative budget, she said, so Holler asked her how she made salary increases. Only three were increased so she replied that was not the point. Tim Lee asked her if she knew of the budget deficit, and she replied "The only way I found out was when I got in office. That was the only way I could find out." In response to queries she said all of her budget was accounted for.

Lee Barnhill was irritated that the Senate was not informed of the Miss UNCW contract renewal, and since it was renewed by her office he felt she was responsible. Bryan Holler proposed her miscellaneous budget should cover it, since he did not prefer one of her expenses covered by it.

The third round of affirmative debate's high point was an insult and profanity used when the cutting edge of words began to draw blood. In the last 10 seconds of debate Tracy moved for the previous question, an unobjectionable motion to vote, which Senator Holler tried to object to. After a recount the motion to pay the scholarship from the general fund passed 11-10. After the vote Tracy said she respected both sides of the argument, a point well taken.

After announcements the meeting adjourned.

Greenpeace Alerts UNCW Students to Animal Abuse

Your school's athletic program may be perpetuating the slaughter of nearly three million kangaroos in Australia this year.

What do jocks have to do with roos?

Kangaroos are hunted mainly for their pelts, which are turned into a high-quality leather and made into, among other things, sport shoes. Faced with a Greenpeace-organized boycott in Europe, many sport shoe manufacturers, including Nike, Puma and New Balance have dropped kangaroo leather from their sneakers. However, Adidas continues to use kangaroo leather in its promotional shoes, which it gives to professional athletes and school athletic programs.

After the success in Europe, Greenpeace is turning its attention to the American market. The U.S. is the world's largest importer of finished kangaroo products and the third largest importer of raw kangaroo products. Targeting both running shoe manufacturers and the U.S. legislature, Greenpeace hopes to pressure the Australians to curtail the kill by drying up the American market for kangaroo goods.

The Australian kangaroo

hunt is the largest slaughter of wild mammals in the world. In addition to the commercial hunt of more than 2,900,000 roos for 1988, an estimated one million roos will be gunned down outside the government quota. Seven species of kangaroos have already become extinct and twelve others are considered endangered under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES).

Labeled as an agricultural pest, roos are chased down by "shooters" in 4-wheel drive vehicles and shot with high-powered rifles. The skill of the shooters varies and often live kangaroos have their legs in tails hacked off by shooters whose first shot wasn't enough to kill. Shooters make good money selling the pelts and meat, which is ground into pet food.

"Calling the Australian kangaroo hunt wildlife management is blatant misnomer," said Leilani Anderson, Kangaroo Campaign Coordinator for Greenpeace USA. "The Australian government threatens to manage the kangaroos to death."

The Australian government continues to escalate the kangaroo genocide by sanctioning larger an larger quotas. In 1981 an inflated population estimate of 32 million kangaroos prompted the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to lift a ban on kangaroo imports into the U.S. Two years later the Australian government revised its estimates showing that a paltry 19 million kangaroos remained. Despite the precipitous decline, elements in the Australian government are encouraging both human consumption of kangaroo meat and farming roos to satiate the growing market for kangaroo products.

Many of these products may be on your campus. The kangaroo issue could make a great story for news organization as it directly involves school athletics. Student activism could be another angle, because the Greenpeace campaign for a Congressional ban on kangaroo imports should interest many young people.

Greenpeace will be officially kicking off the kangaroo campaign in September. If you should want any interviews, photos or more information about the kangaroo slaughter and what can be done to end it contact Greenpeace.

During the final hour of Parents Day, 1:30 - 2:30, a campus tour, hosted by the UNCW Ambassadors, will be given for the parents, or they may choose to visit a number of campus buildings. Also, Campus apartment L, room 101, will be open to show a typical campus residential setting.

The purpose of the Parents Day program is to provide a strong communications link between parents and the university with implications for parental assistance in student recruitment as well as in cultivation of prospective employers of UNCW graduates.

Preparations for the first Parents Day have been done by the Parents Advisory Council, which is comprised of the Lavenwoods and ten other families including a single parent. The program is under the direction of Jean Joyner, coordinator for parents and special programs in the University Advancement Division.

"When I came before them, they wanted to know the state of the annual, and being that I wasn't involved in administration of the Fledgling, I didn't know," says Shiffer. "They turned down my budget at that time."

The Budget Committee demanded three things of Shiffer before they would reconsider his budget in the fall. First, the yearbook for 1987-88 had to be completed. Next, they wanted him to have his staff together. Finally, the Fledgling must submit to an audit.

"At the point that I agreed to these conditions, I had not seen any of the written aspect of the book," says Shiffer. When he started working to finish the book by the first week of June, he had one other staff member, Jennifer Martin.

"I was continually calling around trying to find Jenni (Brown), because I'd found much profanity in the written material which had already been sent to the printers." According to descriptions of Out of Chaos, the written material it contained was to have been submitted by UNCW students on any topic they chose.

"That might have explained the profanity, but I don't know that any students contributed. To the best of my knowledge, the material was all written by the staff," says Shiffer. "Regardless, there should have been guidelines for suitable topics and restrictions on profanity."

"When I found the questionable material, I had an uneasy feeling about printing. But because of the stipulation that I finish the book, I continued working on it."

After consulting Tyrone Rowell, Associate Vice Chancellor of University Advancement and a former Fledgling advisor, and Karla Alston, Student Government President, Shiffer decided to abandon the completion of the 1987-88 Fledgling. "I felt the material would be an embarrassment to the University."

Because of the problems the annual was already destined to have from the presale confusion, Shiffer renegotiated with Jochen's to pay for what had already been completed. This proved to be a wise decision, as it left the yearbook with $8961 in its account, part of which will be refunded to students who missed the 1987-88 annual. The Senate has yet to approve the official refunding method, but students will eventually be refunded by the receipt books kept by the Fledgling. Students with receipts from the purchase of those annuals are welcome to bring them into the SGA office.

The Budget hearings for the Fledgling are forthcoming. In the meantime, students are encouraged to support the Fledgling by having their pictures taken for the Fledgling on Sept. 28-29 in room 100 of the Union. This is a not only great opportunity to get good pictures made at good prices, but also to help the annual stay alive at UNCW. With support from UNCW students and staff, the Fledgling could see its best year yet.

With The Growing Problem Of Substance Abuse In This Country Should The U.S. Legalize Drugs?

View From The Right Legally Poisoning The People For The Sake Of Taxes And Profits?

By Robert Smith
Guest Columnist

Erroneously, many people see this issue as being one in which liberals are pro and conservatives are con. While this is mostly true, there are exceptions; many liberals are against legalization and some moderates are for it. I am opposed to legalization of illicit drugs, I will attempt to tell why in an objective manner.

Historically alcohol and drugs have been on both sides of the laws in the U.S. For many years no drugs or alcohol were illegal, but early in this century alcohol was made illegal and then legal again and several other drugs were made illegal and stayed that way. Many of those drugs are the same ones our nation is currently plagued with.

Proponents of legalization point to Prohibition as an argument in favor of legalization. When alcohol became illegal organized crime provided boot-leg alcoholic beverages and much mob violence ensued. When alcohol again became legal, organized crime eventually got out of the business. Proponents feel that the same thing would happen if marijuana, cocaine, etc., were made legal. They fail to mention the serious problems in our society today which stem from alcohol; thousands of alcohol related deaths, over 50,000 Americans a year die from alcohol related auto accidents, birth defects from Fetal Alcohol Syndrome, the list goes on and on, including the social impact of alcoholism. This goes to show that, just because something is legal doesn't mean it won't harm humans and society; cigarettes are in the same category.

Fortunately over the years, through education and treatment programs, alcohol and tobacco use has decreased significantly. I feel that through strict enforcement of laws, mandatory and increased sentences, seizure of vehicles and property used in trafficking, and especially education and treatment, we can eventually and dramatically decrease substance abuse.

The main argument of proponents is that: with the taxes and profits acquired through the sale of drugs by government or government control, we can educate, treat and control the illegal import or sale of drugs. Some also feel that according to the law of "supply and demand", demand will decrease.

Currently, approximately $8 billion annually are spent on drug enforcement, not including imprisonment. This is relatively little money and its effectiveness is obviously poor. Only about 10% of imported drugs are seized and it is quite easy to acquire any popular drug in any city or town. How much of the money acquired through legal drug sales would it take to curb the illegal sale and import of drugs? I doubt that there would be little, if any, money left over for education and treatment. If the price of government dope is not comparable to street price, who will buy it anyway? Will the government grow its own commercial pot fields, coca bushes and poppy fields, or import it? As we all know, the government pays extremely more than we do for anything it buys. It will end up costing us more subsidizing drug sales and use, than it does to enforce laws, educate and treat, and we will still have to pay for education and treatment on top of subsidizing.

The naive proponents think that with increased supply, demand will go down!! The law of supply and demand states that with increased demand and not enough supply would be lower prices, making it easier for the "law abiding" citizens to buy drugs on the street for cheaper prices. Demand affects supply and prices, but supply has no negative effect on demand, this is common sense.

In summation, it is ludicrous to think that if a crime is made legal, people will suddenly cease to commit the act. The logical avenue to ending drug use is to diminish the reasons for the use, and to remove the distributors of the drugs from society. By treatment of addicts and education of the young we can diminish the number of users and potential users. Strict enforcement of the laws, seizure of property used in trafficking or bought through illegal profits, and longer and mandatory prison sentences we can diminish the number of distributors. Finally, the impact of drug use and addiction on society must be realized. We must make the drug issue a higher priority on the social agenda and combat it with money and action, not unrealistic ideas and words!

View From The Left The Moon Is Made Of Cheese And The U.S. Doesn't Have A Drug Problem

By Marc Kelley
Guest Columnist

Some people saw the quasi-debate the other night on (oh god)-TV. Those that aren't brain dead noticed that the powers that be are leaning in favour of DRUG LEGALIZATION. GADZOOKS!! Someone gave a consciousness-raising party for the socialites. Sure, there were a few tear-jerking reformed druggies that pleaded for the preservation of our geometrically increasing police State. The D.E.A. most likely paid them via expert witness fees.

Lest we forget, the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration is the FEDS' answer to Miami Vice.

By LEGALIZING grass, coca, & other "recreational" drugs we, the People could help defuse not only a tax-consuming inept police presence but the irksome warfare currently plaguing our cities. It is an unfortunate era when in the course of human events we find it necessary to rid our streets of pushers, narcs, & excess blue suits; we must do the logical - remove the temptation(s)!

The DEA would be dissolved (great monetary savings), local police could again con-centrate on crime prevention and not have to worry about drug czars and Uzi-carrying gangs, and adults would be responsible for their own actions. By removing the "thrill" element of doing illegal drugs we may help stop a number of would-be 1st timers.

It hurts to concur with William F. Buckley, but on the aforementioned TV drug bust he advocated the death penalty for anyone selling drugs to yunginz. That, or possibly life sans parole would be appropriate. Death, being a brain-dead state, akin to what sleazy street druggists would do to youth, might be appropriate.

Does anyone remember PROHIBITION, (criminality of alcohol consumption)? It parallels our contemporary drug wars. Our most infamous hoods came out of the Prohibition era: Bugs Moran, Capone, the Dutchman, the Kennedys, et al. INTERDICTION did not work then and it is not working now. Hindsight is a disease bureaucrats have that inhibits the formation of Foresight. This wrong may be righted by placing drugs in the free market, just as tobacco & alcohol are. Quality control, courtesy of the EPA and our keeled up Sturgeon General will be amply ensured. TAXES on all these noxious substances could be raised to an appropriate level and used to educate the general public to possible adverse effects and/or to subsidize hospitalization of addicts.

Granted, most of the drugs in question are debilitating, but why play ostrich! They are hurting and killing people now and the cops are admittedly impotent. More taxes yields more DEA, more drug wars yields more death on all fronts - possibly even you if you are caught in one of their battles. One should always ponder what LESS government would do, and then consider the extreme! It was soooo odd that on the TV program the anti-drug legalization faction relied on that most exploited of human traits - emotion. Facts are, no amount of cops are going to stop the drug trade, so let's not obfuscate.

Essentially, the drug wars have the tacit approval of those who wish to perpetuate the situational crises we constantly see in the news. Who are these mega-monsters? We have drug agents operating on both sides of the fence, we have banks (domestic & offshore) that love snow profit deposits, agencies like the DEA need a raison d'être: thus it is in their best interest to keep the tides of war flowing.

We just need to look beneath the waves.

Freedom is a dangerous thing. Shall we give it a try, or shall the sheep continue to be sheared? Isaiah: "My people perish for lack of vision."

Student Identifies With Columnist's Views

22 September 1988

Yo Rick,
I can identify with what you say about unusual names. My first name is Robin, and boy, have I caught hell. People nowadays always want to say "Robert" when they first meet me. In first grade the girls would tease me by saying that Robin is a girl's name. The best retaliation was to fling up their dresses and reply, "Maybe so but I can see your underwear!" (I don't do that anymore; of course, I haven't had girls tease me like that in a while either). I don't recall the boy's hassling me much, just the girls. One even used to ride up and down the street in front of my house on her bike yelling "Robin, Robin, the Wonder Boy!" (Remember Batman and Robin, the Boy Wonder?). She later became my girlfriend.

Whenever I would complain to my parents that I hated my name, they would say "Shutup!", so, I still haven't figured out the reason why they named me Robin. When the mail comes addressed to "Mrs." or "Ms Robin Boucher", is it for me or my wife? And you know I'm infinitely glad that in USMC boot camp everyone was referred to by their last names.

Oh well, I still go by Robin because it is unusual. Beats "Joe" (my middle name). So anyway, Rick-O, what do you think a Robin looks like? Just out of curiosity, what does this name conjure up for you?

Who cares, the female work/study student at the reference desk in Randall Library thinks I have a sweet name. Boy, have times changed!

Retire Ex-Soccer Player's Jersey

Dear Students,

As a graduate of UNCW, class of 1981, I am asking for your support. I would like for you to help retire the Jersey of former Seahawk Soccer standout Johnny Miller.

Johnny Miller, a friend and former classmate in the Physical Education Department, was tragically killed by an unlicensed drunk driver two years ago. Johnny was a standout soccer player on Seahawk in the late 1970's, which were constantly ranked among the top teams in the south. Johnny just missed having a professional career in soccer. He made it to the final cut of Atlanta's professional team. Johnny was not only a good soccer player, but his easy going personality made him a friend to all who knew him. He was an excellent representative of our university.

Retiring Johnny Miller's Jersey would not only be a fitting tribute to Johnny, but would also bring more attention to the senseless problem of the drunk driver.

I appeal to the administration to give this matter immediate attention. Also I appeal to you, the students of today. You can help by expressing your opinion to the new as well as the old members of our UNCW family.

Thank you for your help.
Sincerely,
Raymond Groseclose '81

GPA Defended By Realist

I disagree with your blurb on grade point averages!

Most freshmen have never been away from home for extended periods before, and the temptation to party (especially with peer pressure) is high. You don't need to tacitly encourage 'slackness'.

I believe that most students could make and maintain an A or B average by merely "reading assignments, do the work, and try not to party pre-exam night." It isn't that hard.

Sea Squawk editors don't need to talk about how a 2.7 G.P.A. is OK. Sure some universities you may transfer to will take an average G.P.A. with a goodby list of extracurricular activities but I think it's obvious that the better a G.P.A. the more weight one carries (especially in graduate school applications).

The whole damn UNCW (et al) grading system is biased against doer.

Say student 'X' is taking 12-15 hours and does zero in the way of outside activities, and they achieve a 3.3-4.0 G.P.A. Now take student 'y' (perhaps you/any of us) with 16-20 hours and in S.G.A., a fraternity, and two academic clubs. 'Y' ends up with a 3.0 or so. There should be some type of handicap to balance things out. The UNC-W administration has made one attempt-they've instituted a 'handicap' for the Dean's List, but only on the number of hours, not taking into account a "thoroughly immersed" student to a drip-dry facsimile!

Have a Nice Day, Name withheld.

In the end though, I took it upon myself to shave it off. I was tired of drying it off in the morning and having that dreaded aftertaste that comes from food sticking to it and making its way into your mouth later. Removing it was emotionally difficult in light of the fact that I had been "growing it" for two months. I picked up the scissors, razor and shaving cream and went to it.

In a matter of minutes two months worth of hair was gone and the skin that supported it was on fire.

The most regrettable aspect about getting rid of it is that I can't just put it back on.

The great comments I get now fall into the, "Makes your face look fat." category. Some people look at me, stroke their face and say, "What happened?" This one I like, I feel like there really is an

Defend Your Rights As A Non-Smoker

One of the things that really disturb a large number of the student populous that live within the confines of Residence Life is the large number of people that smoke in the residence halls. This is a problem to that large faction of the UNCW student body that chooses not to smoke.

The smell of smoke on your clothes from your roommate's cigarette, the burning sensation in your eyes and throat, the fact that you have to inhale all of that excess smoke that floats about in the hallway can only serve to heighten the need for action on this situation.

If UNCW is to keep up with the demands of it's growing populace then it MUST, without a doubt, reserve a space here on campus for the non-smokers that attend this institution.

In New York restaurants are now required to have smoking and non-smoking sections. All flights of less than two hours have required to be smoke free and some airlines have banned smoking altogether. This is 1988 and we know that smoking is bad enough on the smoker, there's no need to make it bad on others who chose not to smoke.

One person that has been dedicated to the proposal of providing smoke free environments for some time is Deborah Haywood, Coordinator, Office of Health Promotion. She has tried in the past to get enough people to sign up for a non-smoking floor, but due to a lack of publicity, the project was less than a success.

This year; however, she has at least part of that promotion in this editorial. She needs some volunteers to make her program work. That's right volunteers! So get off your non-smoking duffs and go over to the Livewell/Alternatives Center, located in the University Union, beside the gameroom.

You, the non-smoking people of this campus have the right to stand up for a smoke-free environment.

Haywood intends to circulate a petition saying something about all of the undersigned people that wish to have a smoke free environment in which to live. You may be saying "it won't work, petitions never work." Wrong, that is one of those inalienable rights of Americans that do work.

If just one residence hall can only hold on the average, two hundred and twenty-five people, then a petition with five or six hundred signatures would be a number substantial enough to evoke some rapid action from the Office of Residence Life.

This smoke free environment is not just going to come if you don't make it happen by getting involved in this program. It would be so easy, if only you, the non-smoking people of this campus are willing to put a little time and effort into this worthy project. All you have to do is go down to the Livewell center and say, "Debbie, what can I do to help you with this smoke-free project?"

It is time for this institution to realize that not all of it's residents wish to tolerate living in an environment full of that old, nasty, foul-smelling, disgusting cigarette smoke. The administration is not just going to wake up one day, slap their foreheads and say, "Wow, we could have had a smokeless environment." You, the students, have to make a stand on this issue; now!

"Write Bad" And Get Paid For It

I recently read about a contest held annually at San Jose State University. The contest awards the best of the worst-writers—that is. Whoever can write the worst beginning of a fiction story, gets top honors. The contest is named after a fiction writer of the past, Bulwer Lytton. Terrible writers finally get some notice.

I figured that if anyone can write badly—I certainly can. I decided to devote this week's column to bad fiction. I have printed some of my attempts. I wrote more, but some of them weren't too bad so I was forced to discard them. If you feel that you have little or no writing talent, I challenge you to send some examples to me and I'll print them. (Even though I'm quite aware of the campus apathy movement, and that nobody is even reading this.) Prepare yourself for some awful fiction.

Gerald toyed with the large oozing blister which hung precariously from his left nostril as he worked up the courage to ask Ava out on a Coke date. As he approached, Ava regurgitated a yellowish, green, oily syrup onto her shiny, new penny loafers. Gerald cleared his throat of phlegm as he approached her.

Scarlet's face lit up like a jack-o-lantern at the sight of her large puffy toe as she removed the bandage. She no longer felt compelled to bite the nail off and spit it into the large flower pot.

He sat back and adjusted his BVD's as he thought of seeing Mrs. Smurdt naked. The thought of her large, luminous buttocks set him afire. He turned back to his trigonometry homework. He was horny.

William was weary after watching Wiley wittle the wonderful whistle which was for his dog, Wonder, while he watched William watch Wiley wittle. Wow. Wonderful. (What?)

George was lying in a prone position and was terrified. He was afraid that it would hurt tremendously, but a deeper fear crept up his spine—what if he liked it? He felt the pressure in his rectum as the good looking young man told him to relax. He knew that it was his first time.

George turned to watch the strange black hose with the light at the end of it. His eyes began to bulge! George could have sworn that he heard maniacal laughter as the doctor plunged the tube home.

The fair-haired, disturbed young man quietly switched the bottles of sun screen with exact bottles which held plain skin moisturizer.

A week later, porcelain skinned, Rebecca, was lying on the beach anticipating her beautiful bronze skin—not second degree burns over most of her body! Not far away, the disturbed young man sat anxiously watching the local news, with a wicked smile on his face. This was to be the worst tragedy to ever hit the small town of Yamao!

Shelby longed for her tantalizing touch. Gidget glided over to him and laid a wicked, wet one on his mouth. They locked in a big bear hug as he fiddled with the zipper of her dress. He unashamedly wondered, "Am I, Shelby Simple, really in love?" Gidget grimaced and warned, "If you don't stop messing with my zipper, I'll scratch your shiny eyes out of your slimy skull, maggot features." Shelby thought, "Isn't love wonderful?"

It was a crisp, clear, cool day and the sun shined as brightly as a five-hundred watt bulb in a small closet. A man walked down the steep path which led to the vast green valley. He was tall and lanky, sort of Ichabod Cranish looking. He even had thick, horned rimmed glasses which made his eyes appear the size of saucers if you looked at him at a certain angle. His pointed long nose had a difficult time holding his heavy glasses. "Shabby" would best describe his clothing and gait. He didn't care because he was going to feed the ducks; his ducks, as far as he was concerned. He secretly hoped that Hector wouldn't be messing with his ducks, because today, he was ready; he had his num chux. He didn't care if he couldn't spell "num chux", as long as he could use them.

The night was very dark. It was so dark that Roscoe couldn't see his hand in front of his face. He couldn't see his right hand regardless, since the large scarey, scaly, lizard bit it off hours before. He would have given anything for some light. He immediately regretted that he had quit smoking a month earlier. How he wished that he could flick his Bic again. The sick thought occurred to him: could he flick his Bic left handed? He fell into a lonely fit of depression.

Discovering The Significant Questions

It is in the questions, my friends! It's all in the questions! Whatever hope or possibility or potential there is, lies not in finding answers, but in discovering the significant questions as they emerge from within ourselves and living with them.

All of us beginning this new year at UNCW are going to find ourselves dealing with some significant questions in our life. What am I doing here? What should I major in? How close do I want to get to someone else emotionally? What do I really believe in? And the questions go on and on. Being here is simply bound to confront you with new and important questions or new versions of old questions. When we find ourselves asking these questions, it is all too common for us to feel anxiety arising as we feel that we must have an answer to whatever question is posed, and have that answer now.

Significant questions (and only we can decide which are significant for us at a given moment) emerge in us not so much to demand answers as to indicate the agenda of our present lives, to show us the cutting edges of our growth. The question "what do I really believe?", is a wonderful invitation to spiritual growth. The question "how do I get along with strange roommates?", is a scary but an exciting invitation to examine our values and to develop our interpersonal skills.

The problem comes because so many of our questions are rooted in fear. We are surrounded by a society, both generally and here at UNCW, that seems to want to set our agenda and determine how we relate to members of the opposite sex, how serious we are about our studies, how critical it is to fit into the group, etc. It is when real or perceived expectations of people, groups or organizations set our agenda that we become bound up with fear. The question "should I be here?" will cause some students to pack up and go home, when it is rooted in fear caused by being in a new place away from home, not having many friends and not being clear about career goals. Fear leads us to ask, "what do I major in?", rather than living with the question, "what do I really want to do in my life?" It is fear that leads us to wonder, "what will happen to our relationship if I don't sleep with him/her?", rather than living with the question, "what kind of relationship do I really want with this person?" See the difference? The difference is fear.

So there's the challenge. First, listen to the questions that come out of your experiences here and learn to see them as invitations to your growth and becoming. Secondly, turn to whatever relationships you have and to whatever new resources you can find that will enable you to translate questions born out of fear into questions that can be lived through. Friends, faculty, student development staff, campus ministers, all can be available to provide emotional support for living with fear and dealing with your questions. Faith provides another critical support for staying with the struggle within. So whether it is friends or professionals outside you or your reliance on God within you, seek whatever support you need. Claim the struggle; name it; live with it and grow into the self directed person you have within yourself to be.

Weird Scholarships For The Taking

Dan Cassidy, President and Founder of NSRS, presents The Ten Most Unusual Scholarships for 1988

1. For creative undergraduate juniors at Ball State University who want to work in telecommunications, David Letterman

Telecommunications Scholarship Program offers up to full tuition scholarships for telecommunications studies at BALL STATE UNIVERSITY. Grades are not a consideration! Why not Dave?

2. Harvard Radcliffe Scholarships are available for all areas of study, but only a student whose last name is Anderson, Bazendale, Borden, Bright, Downer, Penneyer or Murphy.

3. For American undergraduates interested in law and order, Association of Former Agents of the U.S. Secret Service/J. Clifford Dietrich-Julie Y. Cross Scholarship offers $1,000 for law enforcement or criminal justice studies.

4. For women flyers who prefer helicopters, International Women Helicopter Pilots/Whirly Girls Scholarships grant $4000 to encourage careers in vertical flight.

5. For left-handed freshman enrolled at Juniata College and who need the money, Beckley Scholarship Foundation offers $700.

6. For Ph.D. candidates studying fungus, Mycological Society of America has graduate fellowships of $1000.

7. For graduates of Mt. Carmel High School who don't drink, smoke, play rough sports or live anywhere but Mt. Carmel, P.A. G.J. Deppen & Voris Auten Teetotaling Non-Athletic Scholarship Fund offers SCHOLARSHIPS for all areas of study at BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY.

8. The Countess of Munster Musical Trust has scholarships in varying amounts to British and Commonwealth citizens studying music.

9. For students whose ancestors put their John Hancock on the Declaration of Independence, Descendants of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence/Scholarships Grant Program has grants of $800 to $1000 for all areas of study.

10. High school seniors and undergraduates with the surname of Gatlin or Gatling might want to take a shot at the John Gatling (Inventor of the Gatling Gun) Scholarship Program which offers full scholarships up to $7,000 at NORTH CAROLINA STATE UNIVERSITY.

More information on these ten academic oddities along with 200,000 other sources of scholarships, grants and student loans is available on the National Scholarship Research Service database.

BOOKS

National Scholarship Research Service, in association with Prentice Hall, Inc., is proud to present three new books by Daniel J. Cassidy:

The Scholarship Book: SECOND EDITION. The book that started it all has been updated and expanded to contain over 1,500 listings of available funding sources for undergraduate studies in the United States.

The Graduate School Scholarship Book. Indispensable guide for graduate students planning to attend professional or graduate school and seeking financial aid. Over 1,600 listings of private sector sources, the only sources now offered for graduate studies.

The International Scholarship Book. NSRS goes global in this newest collection of 2,000 scholarship listings. For all students seeking funds to study and travel abroad, this book is an excellent reference source.

Assembly Applications Available

Applications for the 14th internship program with the North Carolina General Assembly are now available from Dr. Abraham Holtzman in the Department of Political Science and Public Administration at North Carolina State University.

Juniors and seniors at all North Carolina four-year colleges and universities are eligible. Fourteen interns will be chosen for the program, which is sponsored by NCSU and the N.C. General Assembly.

Deadline for the completed application, an official transcript and three letters of reference, is the end of the business day Monday, Oct. 24, 1988.

These materials should be sent or delivered to Holtzman, director of the Legislative Internship Program, 224 Caldwell Hall, Box 8102, NCSU, Raleigh, NC 27695-8102. Holtzman's telephone number is (919) 737-2481.

Students of history, economics, political science and sociology are invited for the program.

The interns will serve as staff assistants to chairpersons and official leaders of the N.C. Senate and House of Representatives that meet in 1989 and will pursue a parallel course of study at NCSU during the spring semester, beginning Jan. 6, 1989. The General Assembly will convene on Jan. 11.

Participants in the program will take a governmental internship seminar, a legislative process course and a class in problems of state government. Each intern will receive 12 semester hours of credit for transfer to his or her college or university.

Interns will work a minimum of 25 hours each week at the General Assembly for the approximately 22 weeks of the session. They will be paid $200 a week.

Twenty-five applicants will be selected for personal interviews to be conducted on Saturday, Nov. 12, 1988. The Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the Senate, the chairman of the department of political science and public administration at NCSU and two political science professors will choose the interns, who will be notified by Nov. 21, 1988.

Cotton Queen Has "E" Ticket

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (Special) -- Is there such a thing as the absolute dream job of a lifetime?

Opinions may differ on that subject, but many people would agree that being the 1989 Maid of Cotton is as close as you can get to that fantasy.

For instance, what kind of job includes six months of international travel, a fashionable all-cotton wardrobe, personal meetings with ambassadors and top government officials all over the world, courtesy calls on senators and congressmen... plus other incentives? Probably not many. But that's exactly what awaits the lucky young woman who'll be chosen in Dallas, Dec. 28-30, as the U.S. cotton industry's goodwill ambassador.

The National Cotton Council, sponsor of the program, is now accepting applications from qualified young women interested in such an opportunity.

The new Maid's tour schedule for 1989 promises to be at least as demanding as Maid Angela Herbert's was last year. As the 50th Maid of Cotton, the Phoenix native undertook a busy schedule that included a Capitol Hill reception in her honor, appearances in 35 U.S. cities, a special photography session for Far East magazines, participation in a Korean fashion show that attracted more than 2,000 people, and a highly successful promotional tour of leading department stores in London which included a joint appearance with the U.S. ambassador to Great Britain.

In addition, Angela had television and newspaper interviews in 10 states. She also assisted Cotton Council International in a seminar at Cheju Island, South Korea, for the major U.S. cotton customers in the Far East. The young woman chosen as the Maid of Cotton will receive a $10,000 educational award made possible by a grant to the Cotton Foundation from Ciba-Geigy corporation.

This year's selection is open to young women between the ages of 19 and 23 who are at least five feet five inches tall, and have never been married. Judging will be based on appearance, poise, personality, and communication skills.

Application forms are available at National Cotton Council headquarters, P.O. Box 12285, Memphis, Tenn. 38182. Deadline for entries is November 18.

Write A Letter To The Editor

youths have no affiliation with UNCW," said Cunningham.

One suggestion to help create a better coexistence between these neighborhoods and the students living there is to bring the issue up before the student Senate.

"I think the students themselves will play a key role in how this situation is going to be met. Our students are responsible and reasonable, and will offer some good suggestions," said Vice Chancellor Bryan.

Other possible solutions are to enforce new zoning ordinances to control the sizes of parties in residential areas, to establish a noise ordinance, to set aside a portion of campus to build a Fraternity Row, where fraternity houses could remain separate from residential areas, and to have the landlord build special stipulations into their leases prohibiting large parties.

The problem that exists is not new, and will continue to be a problem. Where off campus parties are a concern for UNCW, they remain virtually helpless out of their jurisdiction. The creation of the Task Force is designed to work with the neighbors as well as with the students. There are no infallible solutions, though there is hope that much of the tense atmosphere can be reduced.

Get Ready for 10th Annual RIVERFEST

By Meridith Serling Staff Writer

On Friday September 30, 1988, from 6:30-10:30 P.M., the USS North Carolina Battleship memorial will present its third Annual Beach Music Concert to kick off the tenth Annual Riverfest Celebration in Historic downtown Wilmington.

The concert will be held on the banks of the scenic Cape Fear River, next to the Battleship Memorial's picnic shelter. North Tower, a six member band will perform. They formed in 1975 as a barbershop quartet on the campus of UNC-Chapel Hill. After immediate success, the band was unable to tour on all of the college campuses that requested them, due to their full schedule of commitments. Their first record released in 1987, "1,2,3,Kinda Love/Looking Forward to June" is now considered a beach classic.

Highlighting the weekend's festivities is the popular Raft Regatta which will return to the celebration sponsored by Surf 107 and Budweiser. Homemade rafts in the following categories will compete for prizes 1) most unique 2) most appropriate 3) speediest. Be sure not to miss this main event scheduled for Sunday at 2 P.M.

Performing on 3 stages: continuous entertainment, and will be headlined by favorite beach music bands, Bill Pickney and the Original Drifters, the Embers, and the Chairman of the Board. Also featured will be the country sounds of Dixiana, a variety show and dance group. Several videos on music video stations across the Southeast have accompanied their successful career.

Don't miss the dynamic jazz duo of Eve Cornelius and Chip Crawford either. The official tenth Annual Riverfest celebration begins at noon with a big band sound on the main stage at Riverfront Park. The arrival of the Henrietta II, Wilmington's own Paddlewheel cruise Boat, along with tugboats and fireboats will bring river activity alive.

"Miss North Carolina, Lee Beaman, will arrive aboard the Henrietta II as Riverfest Guest of Honor and will cut the official ribbon that marks the beginning of Riverfest '88. A street parade of mimes, clowns, jugglers, and dancers, led by local high school bands will also take place.

For the enjoyment of us penniless college students and others, Springbrook Farms will offer free horse and carriage rides.

Be sure to also check out the artists and craftsmen and their variety of pottery, sculptures, paintings and more for sale.

International food booths will offer Mexican burritos, Polish sausage, Chinese Egg Rolls, and good-old American hot dogs, along with Fresh-squeezed lemonade. Miller Brewing and Budweiser will be sponsoring the popular Beer Garden.

Saturday includes the U.S. Marine Corps band, followed by a fabulous display of fireworks over the beautiful river, and then a street dance with the Chairman of the Board from 9 P.M.

Sunday's activities are appropriately opened by Wilmington's own Williston Choir, an inspiring black gospel group, followed by Dixieland Jazz, strolling musicians toe-tapping dance troupes.

The tenth Annual Riverfest Celebration of Wilmington is sure to be an exciting event you won't want to miss. Hint: Be on the lookout for stars shooting on location, they may be strolling through the crowds.

Club Review

By Dawn Brevard-Water

Kixx is the newest, hottest club in Wilmington. The billboard outside boasts that it's "The Place To Be", and it really is.

On a cool rainy Saturday night, one would assume that the place to be is at home, watching the tube, but a couple hundred people at Kixx had better ideas.

With the Top-40 hits pumping loudly and the air conditioner on high, everyone seemed oblivious to the rain falling outside. They were all too busy jamming to the music inside.

What attracts people from different areas to this club? Perhaps it's the building, which has white coating and is trimmed in blue; it's quite a contrast to the other buildings on Market street. More likely it's the atmosphere. With that many people having that good of a time—word gets out.

As with most clubs in Wilmington, membership is a requirement—unless of course you have a good friend who is a member. You must be at least twenty-one years of age, and must be dressed appropriately. (No t-shirts or sneakers.)

The clientele in this club is predominantly black. However, the club is open to people of all races. Kixx is frequented by students, lawyers, doctors, and psychologists.

Blue carpeting underlines the tables. On the side wall there is an interesting picture of the name of the club, Kixx, surrounded by a background of New York City. (The owner is from the Bronx.) The bar, which features reasonable prices, is located in the rear of the club. Beyond the bar, is a secluded, quieter area, which has a much more intimate atmosphere.

Of course, the spacious dance floor is the heart of this club. The famous "silver ball" hangs above the dancers. Spinning lights bathe the gyrating dancers with various colors. (Red, yellow, blue and green.) The lights are accompanied by a loud siren which resembles a police car siren.

So, if you are looking for a good time, with an appetizing atmosphere, go and fill out your membership card at Kixx. (It's ten dollars.) You'll be glad you did.

Stage Review

By Anita Bradshaw

On September 15-18, Opera House Theatre Company staged Leonard Bernstein, Stephen Sondheim, and Arthur Laurent's "West Side Story." It was the final production of their 1988 season, and what a finale it proved to be!

Franklin Williams, Jr. was the perfect selection to portray "Riff", the leader of the Jets. His square jaw, intense eyes, and muscular build combined to convince the audience that he was the leader of the gang—no questions asked.

Cindy Colucci also held her own as "Maria." She was convincingly naive and timid. However, there was no timidity in her voice as she sang Bernstein's notoriously difficult compositions.

The production was choreographed by Ray Lee Kennedy and Steven Sciotti, two artists to be reckoned with. The movement on stage was splendid. The fight scenes were especially exciting and kept the audience captive.

The only "glitch" in the show was Patrick Mel Boyd ("Tony"). He was a bit weak in his performance, and his voice did not match the fervor of Colucci's in their duets. He had trouble maneuvering his voice around the musical traps that Bernstein likes to set. And Boyd was caught in almost every one.

Even with this—if this production was an indication of next season, Wilmington is in for a year of fabulous entertainment.

On September 15-18, Jacob's

Kun presented two one-act plays both directed by Terry Theodore, professor of drama at UNCW.

"The Zoo Story" by Edward Albee, starred Ed Danilowicz as "Peter" and Vicki Bridgers as "Jerry." Originally, Jerry was written to be a male part, but Theodore changed it for a different perspective.

Sad to say, though, what could have really been a fabulous show, ended up lack-luster. Ms. Bridgers came on stage as if for the first time. She was overly expressive with her hands, gesturing with pointed fingers at nothing, in particular. In fact, her extraneous movements detracted from her performance as a whole. Too, her lines seemed over-rehearsed and strained. Instead of the audience enjoying the illusion of the theatre, it was forced to watch someone struggling with their lines. However, her saving grace was in the closing. She was stabbed by Peter and dies. Under the tutelage of Theodore, at least this particular movement was believable and well executed.

Ed Danilowicz, Peter, did not have many lines but he had a lot to say. His expressions and body language said a lot—less than to be learned by Bridgers. He played his role with assurance, with subtle innuendoes leading the viewer to realize something tragic was underneath the surface of a seemingly harmless conversation in the park.

The potential was in the air, but things just did not seem to get on track for opening night.

We The Mediocre

By Kelly Holsten

Does listening to progressive music require some sort of sacrifice to the Gods of Style? And does the word "VEGETARIAN" necessitate the equalizing effect of not having to take a shower in seventeen days?

Progressive music seems to require an inherent need to look and act like you have risen from the planet ZONTAR. This need to look different takes on many forms which, interestingly enough, seems to correspond with the appropriate style of music:

Music: Grateful Dead to Coteau Twins

Followers: Genefic Throwbacks to 1967...unfortunately, in 1967 most of these GIMCRACKS weren't even one-year old. Physical appearance is characterized by a complete lack of regard for physical movement; exercise, sunlight, and MEAT are all taboo and punishable by forced removal of prized CRYSTALS AND BEADS. Brain is often slowed to a crawl in order to fully appreciate the creativity in assembling two ounces of PATCHOULI OIL, 700 BEADS AROUND 17 BRACELETS, A TOAD TIE DYE, BIRKENSTOCK SANDALS, and hair delicately hanging directly in front of the left eye and right cheek bone. Conversation ranges from Buddhism to BAD POETRY. Much babble about the benefits of vegetarianism...unfortunately, "most look as if they just consumed two BIG MACS, LARGE FRIES and A DIET COKE in a closet.

LATER...AND THEN SPEAK LOUDER." Constantly worried if music is "fast enough." Can be seen skating to and fro between classes... now if only they were actually Enrolled. Appearance can be deceptive—John Lennon glasses, shaved head, old torn t-shirt, combat boots...and these ARE THE GIRLS!

Music: Depeche Mode, Cure, New Order

This group can have some bleed over from the GRATEFUL DEAD crowd, so the subtle differences can be tricky. Usually they can be identified by the absence of COLOR OF ANY KIND—in clothes, character, speech, as well as skin. Physical appearance is characterized by black clothes, black shoes, black hair, black eyes, and black jewelry. This makes up for the pale-white skin color. All statements are preceded by the word "LIKE" and followed by either "WOW", "COOL", "NEAT", or "GREAT." Front Street is preferred location of artistic discussion involving nude drawings, nude sculpture, nude poetry, nude poetry, nude cooking, and nude Hinduism. When they actually are nude, there is an uncanny resemblance to a USED CAR SALESMAN FROM DETROIT.

Music: DEAD MILKMEAN, MOJO NIXON AND SKID ROPER etc.

A doomsack crew who laugh at anything... are used to simple pleasures, such as sitting waist deep in LARD, while singing Merle Haggard tunes. Have aspirations of hitting the "BIG TIME" by owning a Tom McAnn shoe outlet in the mall.

Music: VOLCANO SUNS, MISSION OF BURMA, DINOSAUR, SCREAMING TREES

Maybe the saddest group of all... they actually "think" they know something. Many stuck doing nothing with their lives, while others leave them behind. They discard fashion and style for the reality that nothing exists except for perhaps Boston.

Music:

REM...uhhh...cure, smiths These are the "BARELY AWARE BUNCH" who, having heard of REM, think they are "IN" the HAPPENING SCENE. Unfortunately, BEFORE hearing of REM, their favorite bands were Foreigner, Journey, R.E.O. Speedwagon, and the ever-green Kansas. Given sufficient time and proper molding, these vagrants will probably fall into the "ALL BLACK" Art Crowd, or be sucked down by the Grateful Dead Magnet!

Music: INXS, MEN AT WORK, CHILLYWACK, STING

A very troublesome lot with serious mental and physical problems. Probably fed too much sodium at an early age. If sighted, proceed with vigorous heart massage followed by a severe BEATING about the head and shoulders.

Music: "I LIKE ALL KINDS OF MUSIC"

MAY GOD HAVE MERCY ON THESE MERRY SOULS... most are broken down spiritually, mentally, physically and financially, after just purchasing their brand spanking new, "York" stereo system at Best. Probably already addicted to commercial F.M. radio... should be given a quick shot of vitamin B-12 and a road map to life.

The loser is always the loser. ---Pupilius Syrus

This Won't Be On The Test

Men Arrested for Topless Bathing

As recently as 1936, it was illegal for men to wear topless bathing suits in New York. The city fathers declared: "We'll have no gorillas on our beaches." Finally, it was economy rather than morality that finally induced the Westchester, New York County Park Commission to allow swimming trunks. The Commission, which purchased suits for rental at county beaches and pools, found that the trunks were substantially cheaper. (Maybe women will win their freedom next.)

Apopsisopesis (Greek root, "to be quite silent")

This is a widespread figure of speech in which a statement is left incomplete, usually by breaking off one's thoughts. An example is "If you don't pay me back, I'll, I'll..." and there are no further words.

Average Body?

Those large charts usually seen in doctor's offices which purport to show us what our internal organs resemble have encouraged the belief that human bodies resemble one another. There is no such thing as an average body, internally or externally. Most people, for example, have three arteries branching off the aorta, but more than a third do not. There may be as few as one or as many as six. Stomachs vary in size, shape and position.

Dead But Not For Good

On May 8, 1936, the great jockey, Ralph Neves, was pronounced dead after an accident at Bay Meadows Racetrack in Saratoga, California. Yet he reappeared later in the afternoon and was back in the saddle the next day.

After an accident in which his horse fell on him, two jockeys and a spectator managed to extricate Neves. Three doctors on the scene pronounced him dead. When the track announcer announced the death to the 20,000 spectators, they joined in silent prayer.

Half an hour later Neves awakened in a mortuary with a sheet over him. When nobody heard his screams, Neves ran out to the street in his sheet and hailed a cab to the racetrack. A few thousand spectators were still milling around when he entered the track. Fellow jockeys brought him to the first aid station where the same three doctors found him suffering from mild shock and a few bruises.

Eaten By A Tree

The body of the great seventeenth-century religious emancipator, Roger Williams, was eaten by a tree.

Williams died in 1683 and was buried in a poorly marked grave in his backyard. Fifty-six years later, while excavating a nearby grave, a workman accidentally broke into Williams' grave, exposing the bones. In 1860 a descendant of Williams ordered workmen to exhume the remains and transfer them to a more suitable tomb. All they found were a few rusted coffin nails and rotted wood—not a single bone.

However, the workmen did find something extraordinary: the ramifying root of a nearby apple tree lay exactly where the remains should have been, and it had taken the shape of Williams' body, from head to heels. As if it grew the root apparently encountered Williams' skull, and from there followed the path of least resistance, inching down the body and molding itself to the contours. The corpse was gone—absorbed into the tree through the roots. The tree had eaten Williams. (If you don't believe me, it is on display at the Rhode Island Historical Society in Providence.)

Cold!

On Dec. 24, 1924, the temperature in Fairfield, Montana, fell 84 degrees in 12 hours, from 63 degrees at noon to 21 below zero at midnight. I wonder how Santa liked that?

Famous Last Words

James Donald French, when seated in the electric chair for his execution in 1966, turned to newsmen and helpfully suggested, "I have a terrific headache for you in the morning. 'French Fries'."

Delightful Will Campbell an Asset to UNCW

By Robin Boucher
Staff Writer

Last week as I was heading toward Morton Hall I noticed a man walking out of the library. There was nothing particularly distinctive about this man, except that he was more mature in age than all of the other people that passed by and around him. He did not walk with his cane (which is distinctive due to its "ball-in-a-cage design"), and he certainly wasn't wearing his black parson's hat which instantly calls to mind the Reverend Will B. Dunn character in the Kudu comic strip. But like all of us here at UNCW, this man possesses deeper insights, experiences, and gifts beneath his deceptively plain physical exterior. Will Campbell is an ordained Baptist minister who was born and raised in countrified Amite County, Mississippi during the Depression ("I didn't know what a dollar looked like"). He was fortunate to have known both "granddaddies", and he has stated that "one taught me to pray and the other taught me to cuss". One day when Will was quite young he was playing in the front yard with cousins and friends. When a black man walked by, Will and the other children almost automatically yelled out "Hey there's a nigger" and other such remarks. One of Will's granddaddies was sitting in the porch and overheard. Calling out to the children, the granddaddy proceeded to explain that the Civil War was over and that there were no more niggers. Some of the children grew up and became "Kluxers" nonetheless, but Will took the words to heart.

During America's civil rights era, Will took part in just about all of the major marches and activities connected with racial issues. He took leading roles in the NCC and SCLC. He missed the march on Washington, D.C. ("I caught the flu") and consequently, Reverend Martin Luther King's famous speech. But Will had heard King speak many times before. Will counts King as one of his "dear friends". Though King fulfilled every hope and expectation that civil rights proponents had for his position, Will reminds us that King was not the entire movement.

"I miss him", but others such as Rosa Parks deserve more than, say, having a small dirt road off Carolina Beach road named after them. Will worked with a plethora of civil rights figures—Rap Brown, Julian Bond, Ralph Abernathy, Stokely Carmichael, Eldridge Cleaver. Did Will know Cleaver when Cleaver was so bitter? "Eldridge did not trust any white people, and I did not push myself on him". At one point, Will was highly unpopular back home in Amite County. He could not visit his father because of the danger that he might put both of them in if Will's opponents discovered his whereabouts. "I was told later by one of my old opponents that I was one phone call away from death." The killing of civil rights workers was certainly not unknown during those days.

The University of Mississippi underwent many changes during the hard-fought days of integration and desegregation. Will Campbell was the first thorn in the side of segregationist Ole Miss. In 1955 while serving as a chaplain at Ole Miss, Will invited an Episcopal priest to speak on religion and jazz. The priest agreed, but sometime before the lecture, the priest mentioned that he was going to donate a large portion of money to the NAACP. This was tantamount to donating to the Communist party in many segregationists' eyes. Segregationists as high up as the state governor appealed to Will to cancel the lecture. Will refused. Ole Miss went on to fight desegregation in the James Meredith situation, and Will went on to participate in the Montgomery bus boycott. Will also worked with the National Council of Churches in the race relations arm, and served as director of the Committee of Southern Churchmen. These are but a few of the highlights in Will's years as a civil rights advocate.

Campbell's best known work is "Brother to a Dragonfly," an account of his relationship to his brother, Joe, during the height of the movement. Nominated for the National Book Award, it won the Lillian Smith Prize and the Christopher Award. His "Forty Acres and a Goat," an autobiography, also provides excellent commentary on the modern civil rights movement and the problem of race in the United States.

Campbell is the author of novels "Glad River" and "Cecilia's Sin." He has also published three theological works, and is a frequent contributor to a number of magazines and journals, both scholarly and popular.

Will Campbell feels that a majority of Americans have a skewed concept of civil rights in the U.S. today. "Everyone white is a racist, that is, they participate in a society that is disadvantageous to blacks. This does not mean that all whites are prejudiced or bigoted. But it is a cop-out to dangle out the 'ignorant Kluxers', that if we did not have them around we would be a non-racist society. That is not true. It is true that they are victims too—there is such a thing as a white ghetto. It is hard to break out of cycles. The press and media find it more comfortable to find something else to blame besides society on a great scale". Will has obviously not stopped fighting for greater enlightenment in race issues.

in early December.

The reunions will be held on Wednesday, September 28 at 5:00 p.m. in Room 100 of the University Union for those who attended the first June Orientation. Second Orientation session students will meet Tuesday, October 4, and third session students will convene Thursday, October 6. The reunions will be sponsored by Pizza Movers, who will provide free pizza and beverages to all students who attend. Questions should be referred to the Office of Student Affairs at 395-3089.

The Orientation Reunion concept is an innovation from UNCW and as yet there are no other institutions that are known to be attempting this on this large a scale. Mullendore did point out, however, that interest has been expressed from other institutions to learn about this particular program. Should this Orientation Reunion prove to be as successful as the Summer Orientation Programs have been then they too will join the many yearly programs here at UNCW.

WHO INFECTED ROGER RABBIT?

Do you know? Does he? Maybe one of his previous partners was infected with a sexually transmitted disease, but he was too embarrassed to bring up the subject of past partners. "We need to talk . . ." could have helped the situation. There is no need for embarrassment when there is the possibility of fatal disease in one or both sexual partners. Ask! It's the loving thing to do.

Retracing The Past With An Old Friend

The older gentleman seated next to me scarcely twitched a muscle. So engulfed with his beverage and entre, he neglected to notice the two-out, two-run-scoring double that had just tied up the ball game. At first, I thought that odd. So did my accompanying friends, who still were finding humor in the old man's attire, or more specifically, his tobacco-stained, checkered, flannel shirt.

He wasn't a large man, but you had to avoid glancing at his protruding stomach to see that he was not.

"Hey Mr.," I began. "That Yaz is going to be some kind of player."

"My name is Henry," he grumbled, not removing his methodical eyes from his coveted beer. "And his old man was the real ball player. Tripled the talent of his kid."

The Yaz I was referring to was up-and-coming Mike, the batter who had just driven the 2-1 fast ball up the gap in right center to tie the score. The Yaz Henry was referring to was, of course, the kid's father, Hall-of-Famer Carl, who patriotically served out his tenure in the bigs in the confines of Fenway Park, home of the Boston Red Sox.

"He was good," I continued. "I saw him play a double-header in Baltimore in '77. Hit two homers off of Palmer, one to the upper tier of the upper deck in right."

The next Durham Bulls batter was approaching the plate but the ball game, the primary reason for my being there, seemed utterly insignificant and paled in comparison to the conversation I was embarking on with Henry.

Henry said he'd seen him play, too. He had also seen Mantle, Williams, both Robinsons, Aaron, and can still remember his father telling him famed tales about the Babe. I was in.

I told him I had seen Aaron as well and desperately wished I could have seen the others.

"Ball players ain't the same nowadays," he confided. "In my day, there were no free agents. And a man's handshake was the only contract a fella needed. Guys played hurt. I remember..."

And he was off. I was just as eager to hear as he was to share. During the next seven innings we exchanged highlights and opinions of our baseball journeys. He looked up only twice, though once to point out exactly how far a home run he saw Mantle hit went. "A moonshot," Henry called it, and the other time to flag down one of the many striped-shirt, beer-dwelling vendors.

We traded stories as well. I told him of the play I had seen Schmidt make, diving to his right and snaring a would-be double and recovering in time to throw out the surprised runner, while lying on his back no less, to thwart a potentially dangerous bases loaded situation.

He confidently told me that the '61 Yankees were, as I had suspected, the greatest single gathering of nine uniformed men this world had ever seen. And as with most older men, not about to succumb or admit to the level of talent that is omnipresent in today's game, further stated it was the greatest team we will ever see. I lied and said I agreed.

He knew of Eric Davis, had seen Strawberry, and voluntarily admitted that Boggs was the second greatest hitter he had ever seen, the first being, of course, that splendid splinter, Ted Williams.

It was now the top of the seventh and though of no concern to me, Durham, in the midst of our reminiscing, had staked out and insurmountable 8-2 lead. I can read in tomorrow's game account to find out how.

My friends were ready to leave. I balked. I wanted to stay. The insights my new friend had shared allowed me to vicariously see a part of baseball history that was previously buried. It's nothing short of a tragedy that my generation will never be able to fully appreciate to raw talent of these ancestral players. Before I left, I flagged down another vendor, bought Henry one for the road and departed. It was the least I could do.

Old men with old stories, just waiting to pass them on. Someday the game played between the Bulls and Mets may become significant, but at this moment, as I reflect back, it seems so infinitely miniscule.

Citadel, N.C. State Win Inaugural Event

Visiting cross country teams from the Citadel and N.C. State used Saturday's inaugural meet at the newly developed Harold Greene track and field complex to further enhance their reputation as track powers, by taking the men's and women's titles, respectively, during the fourth annual Seahawk Invitational Cross Country Meet.

The Citadel placed runners in first, second, third, fourth, and sixth places to run away with the men's championship with 16 points.

Neighboring East Carolina took second place with a total of 75 points while Baptist (76 points) and Pembroke State (111 points) rounded out the top four.

competed in the open event. They were Layne Fuller (26:38), Thomas Howell (29:32), John Pugh (32:50), and Beau Cates (34:04).

N.C. State's women also had little competition, placing runners in first, second, fourth, fifth, and sixth in the five-kilometer race. Behind the Wolfpack was East Carolina (69 points), Coastal Carolina (82 points), UNCW (88 points), and Baptist (117 points).

UNCW's finishers were Missy Hall (17:45), Beth Holt (17:46), Jamie Oxendine (19:24), LaLonn Walker (20:08), Sarah Harris (20:26) and Tammy Connolly (21:53).

Lady Spikers Run Record To 6-0

Life just gets better and better for Head Coach Kathy McDaniel's women's volleyball team as the Lady Hawks ran their perfect match record to 6-0, overall, with two consecutive road victories, before returning home to Trask Coliseum to collect their third win of the week.

The Hawks recorded road victories over Atlantic Christian (15-5, 15-12, 15-9) and North Carolina Wesleyan (15-13, 15-6, 15-4) while defeating Coastal by the lopsided scores of 15-4, 15-1, and 15-12.

Senior hitter DeDe Devoley, a former graduate of New Hanover High School, currently leads this point offense with a 4.05 kill average and a 3.37 dig average per game.

UNCW has now won 18 of their 19 games played this season. Their lone loss was a 15-6 setback against in-state rival Appalachian State, earlier this year.

Praisner's Awarded $95,000

Some of you may remember a young man that attended this university two years ago by the name of Stephen Praisner. On September 16, 1986, he was found floating in the swimming pool in UNCW's Trask Coliseum. Apparently, or so the administration thought, Praisner had sneaked into the sports complex after it had closed the previous night. However, a further investigation showed different.

Praisner had drowned in the pool during the time that it was open the day before. You may ask, "where were the lifeguards?" and it would be a legitimate question. The answer to that question is ... they were there ... all three of them. They somehow failed to discover his body resting on the bottom of the pool and left the pool area and Praisner's body there for the night.

Praisner's parents filed suit against the state of North Carolina, under the Tort Claims Act, which allows people to sue a governing body that would otherwise be immune from a lawsuit. The Praisners were given an offer to settle out of court by the state Industrial Commission in the sum of $95,000. They agreed to the conditions Thursday, the fifteenth, exactly two years after their son died.

Pinter's Shutout Highlights

By labeling Saturday's pivotal encounter with visiting CAA rival Richmond as the biggest game of the year, UNCW Head Soccer Coach Jackie Blackmore provided the necessary initiative to help propel his struggling squad to a 1-0 victory over the Spiders, a win which gave the young Hawks their first conference victory at home this year.

"We knew coming into the game that it was a big one for us," Blackmore said. "Actually it was a pivotal game for us in the conference and for the season as well. Getting a conference win at home was awfully important for us."

Seahawk goalie John Pinter's strong net play helped preserve the shutout, his career first. "John is doing a nice job," added Blackmore. "I think we made some good strides last week. We still have a ways to go before we're where we should be at this point."

UNCW's victory helped improve their seasonal record to 2-3 overall and 1-2 in the conference.

The Hawks will next encounter non-conference opponent Atlantic Christian, Tuesday, in Wilson. "It's good to see somebody outside the conference," added Blackmore. "The conference schedule is so stiff that we needed a non-conference game to break it up. It's hard to say what kind of team they'll have. Traditionally, they've had a couple of foreign players and centered their team around them."

John Hollenbach's lone goal accounted for all the scoring in the defensive struggle.

UNCW Basketball Player Arrested

There was a little party over in Wrightsville Beach this past weekend that gave one of our basketball players a little more than he had anticipated. Matthew Fish, a 6' 9" freshman, was charged, by the Wrightsville Beach Police Department, with one count of consumption of alcohol while in a public place, one count of consumption of alcohol while being under twenty-one, another count of resisting arrest, still another count of property damage, and finally, one count of assault.

Morris Abeyounis, Supervisor of the Uniformed Patrol in Wrightsville Beach said, "The youth was acting in a manner that immediately called our attention. We approached him to ask him a few questions. That's when he broke and ran. In the process, he knocked down another officer." That officer was J. N. Smith, also of the WBPD. Smith was treated at New Hanover Memorial Hospital, for minor injuries, and released.

Fish was taken from his room in Hewlett Hall late Friday night, after escaping from the Wrightsville Beach Police on foot. "He told us (WBPD) that he had caught a ride home with a girl, after we apprehended him in his room Friday night," said Abeyounis.

Fish was taken to the WBPD, where he was released without bond into the custody of UNCW's head basketball coach, Robert McPherson.

Fish declined to comment, saying, "Coach McPherson told me not to say anything."

AT A GLANCE

NC Living Treasure Awarded

The Institute for Human Potential at UNCW has selected Thayer Francis of Spruce Pine as the 1988 Living Treasure of NC. Mr. Francis has spent his life perfecting the artistic skill of marquetry, an art form which involves shaving layers of veneer from selected woods, then assembling pieces of the veneers using the wood's natural shavings and grain to create a design. The award will be presented tonight during a banquet.

Regional Conference

UNCW's division of music will host a regional conference of the North American Saxophone Alliance Friday, September 30, through Saturday, October 1, in Kenan Auditorium. The Friday night concert scheduled for 8 p.m. will include performances by several guest artists, UNCW assistant professor of music and conference host Frank Bongiorno, and the UNCW wind Ensemble, under the direction of UNCW's Harry McLamb, assistant professor of music. Admission is free. Saturday evening at 8, visiting professors from ASU and JMU will present a jazz performance. General admission is $4.

Parking Decals Expire

1987-88 parking decals expire tomorrow, September 30, 1988. New decals must be displayed by 8 a.m. October 1, 1988.

Bookstore Yardsale

The University Bookstore will hold a yardsale tomorrow, September 30, from 8:30 a.m. - 4 p.m.

Who's Who Nominations

Nominations are now being accepted for Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges. Faculty and staff are encouraged to nominate eligible students. Nomination forms may be obtained in the office of student activities and must be returned by tomorrow, September 30.

Jefferson Meeting

The Cape Fear Council for Social Studies will conduct a Jefferson Meeting Saturday, October 1, from 9:30 a.m. - 3:30 p.m. in King Hall. A Jefferson Meeting approximates a contemporary American society, the purpose of the meeting is to educate rather than to pursue political change. For details call Ann Lockledge at 392 - 3360.

Writers Series

The 1988 Fall Writers and Readers Series will be held tonight at 8 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium with Ellen Bache, novelist, speaking on her book, Safe Passage. Sponsored by the UNCW Creative Writing Program, all interested individuals are cordially invited to attend. A reception will follow the presentation. The next series will be held October 6 with Robert Long, poet.

Foreign Film

A French thriller complete with cops and robbers entitled Melodie En Sous-Sol. ("The Big Grab") will be shown Sunday, October 2, at 2:30 p.m. in Randall Library Auditorium. Admission is Free.

Hawk's Nest

Hawk's Nest specials the week of September 29 - October 5 include 1/2 off Turkey Subs, chips & a large beverage for $2.30, and 2 Tacos with a large beverage for $1.70.

P&R Colloquium

The second in a series of Interdepartmental Colloquium Series titled "The Mismeasure of Woman," sponsored by the philosophy & religion department, will be held October 6 at 8 p.m. in King Auditorium. The topic that evening will be "Sexism in Religion." Call Dr. Turrisi at 392-3408. Admission is Free.

LivWELL '88 Definitely a Success

By Celeste Bulley, Editor-in-chief
& Melissa Ambrose, Staff Writer

The perfect weather Wednesday gave UNCW students and staff a chance to enjoy being outside on the west Union lawn while learning more about themselves this year's LivWELL festivities.

This year was the fourth for the LivWELL program, sponsored by the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center and coordinated by Deborah Haywood, Director of Alternatives!, the UNCW office for health awareness and promotion. And again this year, the LivWELL exhibits focused on wellness within six dimensions: physical/nutritional, social/environmental, intellectual, occupational, spiritual and emotional.

"The turnout and participation this year was great," commented Haywood, "we set up 50 tables and 150 chairs and every table was filled."

Between 80 and 100 student volunteers helped with this year's LivWELL. "They came from all over; people I knew and some from different departments like HPER, Psychology and Creative Arts," said Haywood.

In the four hours the campus wide health promotion was on the lawn of the Union and inside, a steady stream of students flowed through the different sections of the promotion. At the exhibits, students participated in a variety of activities designed to heighten their awareness of their health within each dimension.

Again this year, the physical/nutritional dimension was the favorite. One change to the exhibits in that area from last year was more free snacks and food specials, according to Haywood. As one student who visited the physical dimension to receive a free massage commented, "I was surprised with the vast array of demonstrations. It was very informative!"

The cholesterol check done inside the Union by Cape Fear Memorial Hospital was by far the most popular demonstration. "Last year, a lot of the faculty members took advantage of the cholesterol check," said Haywood, "but this year 3/4 of the people checked were students." Cape Fear Hospital offers the same cholesterol testing during the week for $5, and with 75 people receiving screenings, their donation to LivWELL was considerable. "We are looking into purchasing one of the screening machines so UNCW can periodically offer its students and staff cholesterol checks," said Haywood.

The snack bar had a display which was very well attended also. A computer was set up to do nutritional analyses and 60-70 students told the volunteer programmer what they had eaten that day and were given an analysis of their intake. "The Hawk's Nest itself was also wonderfully helpful," said Haywood. "They offered a LivWELL special for the day and through it helped to promote good nutrition."

According to Haywood, many changes were made in the intellectual dimension this year. "One display which attracted people was a 'creativity/imagination table' which had different kinds of puzzles on it ... sort of an 'I refuse to grow up' display." The intellectual area had added advertisements for different campus tutorial services, and several artifacts from the museum of world cultures, sent by Dr. Jerry Shinn, in an attempt to draw focus to campus organizations and what they offer students. "The students were enthusiastic," commented Haywood, "and I was pleased that this section was well represented this year."

Katrena McCoy, a UNCW freshman enjoys a free massage given by a local chiropractor during LivWELL '88, which was held in and around the Union Wednesday.

"The turnout and participation this year was great."
Haywood

One of the most satisfying aspects of LivWELL '88 for Haywood and her office personally was the area media coverage of the event. WECT did a live spot for the noon broadcast, which Haywood termed a "first" and repeated the spot during the 6 p.m. news. "The camera beautifully covered all the different dimensions we had represented, and caught the essence of wellness we are trying to promote. This year's LivWELL was definitely different!"

Dean's Office Not Just For Trouble

By Rick Heymann
Staff Writer

The clear majority of students believe that disciplinary sanctions are the only thing the Dean's office has to offer. In reality, the office administers two additional functions which are equally important.

The first function is to offer a resource and referral service to students and faculty, with specific focus on the student. The second function is to instigate new programs to benefit the University. Two examples of such are Rape Prevention Awareness Week and the creation of the Crime Prevention Office, an offshoot of the campus police department. The third and most commonly known function of the office is to discipline students, either by hearing the individual case or referring it to the judicial board.

By far, the preferred function that Pat Leonard, Dean of Students and Jackie Skinner, Assistant Dean of Students, employ is the student resource and referral service. This confidential service focuses on the students' ability to overcome obstacles that the person might face, no matter how large or small.

"I really enjoy listening to any problems a student might have and sincerely wish to create an image for the Dean of Students office as a resource center for a troubled student to turn to," said Leonard.

Leonard does not wish to turn her office into a complaint department, but she really cares for college students and is willing to listen to problems ranging from bad cafeteria food to date rape. After listening to your problem, she will then rationalize the problem and help you in every step of the way to overcome it.

One of the Dean's functions in dealing with students' problems is to inform them of their rights. Often, complaints students bring into her office deal with faculty or staff that may have infringed on a particular student's rights. In this way, Skinner and Leonard are advocates of students' rights and affairs.

Second and equally important, the Dean of Students Office creates new programs to meet the demanding needs of the student body. The Dean Of Students Office is credited with programs involving education on rape, AIDS, and alcohol.

The office has also implemented programs to make commuter and non-traditional students feel more welcome at our school.

By making opportunities available for these students to get involved in extra-curricular activities, these non-traditional students, who make up 25% of the student body, have successfully contributed time and effort to better the school and themselves.

Leonard and Skinner offer much more than disciplinary actions to the student body as well. In a way, they are counselors who don't "interfere with the cause of the problem" but rather help students cope with and eventually overcome their problems.

"We want to keep people in school, not kick them out" is a phrase used by Leonard to describe the true nature by design of the office. In truth going to the Dean's office is not necessarily an event associated with inquisitions, but rather a haven for support.

Designers and implementers of programs that constantly need attention, the Dean Of Students Office welcomes suggestions from the you, the student body.

How Others See UNCW Parties

By Bruce Foley
Staff Writer

Sit back in any class on a Monday morning and listen to students talk. There is little doubt that some time during the course of the conversation the topic of the weekend's parties will come up.

Parties are very much a part of the UNCW social life. This fact has come to light more and more in the recent weeks.

Major Simpson of the Wilmington Police Department and head of the UNCW-Neighborhood Relations Task Force has observed the steady rise of off campus parties that has local neighbors both concerned and angered.

"The majority of these so called troublesome parties occurred during the fraternity rush weeks. This, however, is not to say that fraternities are the only groups having parties," said Maj. Simpson.

"We are witnessing a wave of young people who feel that the only place they can drink and enjoy themselves is at a party. It's safety in numbers," said Maj. Simpson.

During the fraternity rush weeks, signs advertising open rush parties to any student, hung from trees, reminders that no one's weekend need be lonely or dull.

Task Force officials agree that the difference between a party that has the potential to become a problem and a party that is under control is to a large degree a factor of location.

Members of the SAE fraternity live together in an unofficial house on College Acres Drive in a residential area. In a neighborhood that wishes to remain an undisturbed and quiet environment, the SAE fraternity found that parties during rush week not only became a public nuisance, but also an embarrassment to the university.

"We can't have too many parties at our house, it just isn't a good spot. We've been forced to have several of our parties at Hugh Macrae park," said SAE member Laurence Roth.

"We're not an official house, zoned in a commercial area. The community has not accepted us or given us an inch of compromise. We understand that we have a responsibility to our neighbors when we are having a party, but they have to understand that it is not just the fact that we are having parties that is a problem but where we are located," said Roth.

The Wilmington Police have broken up a large percentage of the SAE parties due to considerable neighborhood complaints.

"From what we have heard from dealing with these people where the parties are occurring, the fraternities and other groups are not having parties for everyone but everyone is showing up," said Maj. Simpson.

"If someone is having a party and they are serving alcohol then that seems to be the place to go. We'd like to see fraternities realize that when they advertise, people are going to show up. And in a residential area this can quickly lead to problems," said Maj. Simpson.

UNCW partiers (like these, in a shot from last year) don't always do all their partying off campus; sometimes they start on campus, in the dorms or their apartments, then leave later.

According to police statistics the most common law offenses encountered at these large parties are noise ordinance violations, littering, disorderly conduct, failure to disperse, and the most common offense, drinking under age. They carry fines ranging from $10 plus court costs for drinking under the age of 19 to a $50 fine for obstructing streets and sidewalks to a maximum fine of $500 or 30 days in jail for disorderly conduct.

"A real problem at a large party is people often think that they have more rights than they actually have. They think that because the constitution guarantees freedom of speech or right of assembly, they can say or do anything they want. It's situations like these that lead to arrest situations," said Maj. Simpson.

Another factor in controlling a party is planning. A well thought out party can prevent unnecessary problems, as well as angering neighbors.

The Chi Phi fraternity on Wrightsville Avenue has had several parties during the rush week, as did the majority of the fraternities. Not once did the local police have to break up any of their parties.

"We've learned from the mistakes of the past. Through our experience we have developed a format to handle and control our rush parties," said Chi Phi president Rob Sappenfield.

"I think the key to our success is our extensive carding we do at parties. We have two brothers at our back gate, one with a flashlight to check ID's, the other with a stamp. We stamp YES for students old enough to drink. This controls the problem of underage drinking. We do not allow anyone to enter an open rush party with alcohol. All beer is poured in trash cans before entering and when leaving our gates," said Sappenfield.

The Chi Phi house is an official fraternity house situated in a partially residential area. The difference between the Chi Phi house and the SAE house is the reason behind the success and failure of their parties. Where the Chi Phi house is surrounded by an eight foot high fence on two sides of the backyard, the SAE house is completely open to the neighboring houses. This open situation makes it difficult to house all the members of a party, leading to people congregating in the streets, and even in other neighbor's yards. Where there are no available parking facilities on College Acres drive, the Chi Phi house has the permission of Port City Pawn to use their parking lot to house the students cars.

"The only solutions that could alleviate our tense neighborhood situation is for the university to either establish some sort of a fraternity row like at other schools, or establish some sort of suitable party spot for the fraternities on campus somewhere," said SAE member Roth.

The university acknowledges the complex nature of this problem involving the fraternities location. Vice Chancellor Bryan and the Task Force committee have explored the possibilities of a Greek row.

"The fraternity row solution works for other schools, yet we are still considering and discussing the issue amongst members of the Task Force. It's a difficult answer involving private housing on state property," said Vice Chancellor Bryan.

"As far as a place to house parties with alcohol, through the proper channels students can drink at functions at the Student Union or at the new gazebo. However they will have to abide by the state laws regarding the drinking age," said Vice Chancellor Bryan.

The administration as well as the Wilmington Police force both feel that there are solutions, it's just a matter of working towards those goals.

French Jurist to Speak on Abolishing Prisons

Etienne Bloch, distinguished French jurist, writer, and lecturer, will speak on "Should Prisons Be Abolished? Reflections of a French Jurist" October 5 at 8 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium. Bloch, son of resistance leader Marc Bloch, was educated in Paris, and lived under the German occupation of France. He escaped to Spain, was imprisoned, then joined the Free French, and with the 2nd Armored Division, took part in the Normandy invasion, the liberation of Paris, Alsace and southern Germany. Following the war, he studied in America and then returned to France where he has served as a judge for a quarter of a century. He has lectured extensively in Europe and the US on subjects such as penal reform, the abolition of capital punishment and legal and political responses to terrorism. The program is free and sponsored by the UNCW Historical Society.

SGA Convenes After Retreat

Monday night the SGA meeting went through its paces quickly. President Karla Alston spoke in her address of the success of last weekend's Retreat for the senators. The two goals they had defined were 1) to improve their image and 2) to improve student involvement. "Everybody has to be committed," she said. Karla also spoke of the success of the first Parents' Day.

Vice President Robert Smith mentioned that, due to resignations, several senate seats are now open. Filling the offices of Senior senator and Spring Rep will be Marc Kelley and Jim Kraft. The seat of Sophomore class Vice-President is also open. There are also two seats on the Finance committee open to non-senators.

rapidly approved the appointment without speaking to the applicant.

The treasurer was absent but there was talk of a written report being delivered from him to the senate each week. The Attorney General had no report and the Chief Justice was not present.

Acting Chairman of the Finance Committee Lee Barnhill moved to remove Alan Daniels from the Finance Committee. Last week, serving notice for this, he said the reason for removal was that Alan didn't show up at any of their meetings. The motion passed with no debate.

Several spoke during the time allowed for non-senators to address the senate. A representative from the University Program Board told the senate of the upcoming events in October and November, and Marc Kelley, soon to be appointed Senior senator, spoke of the possibility of having a Student Credit Union. Todd Shaver, Student Activities director, who also went on the SGA retreat, had some positive comments on the way things went. During Todd's speech there was a small disturbance but the senators restored themselves quickly to order so Todd could finish.

Genia Mathis, Junior Class President, nominated John Freer (who also works on concerts for the UPB) to the Supreme Court. Again the senate did not interview the applicant. Spoken to later, John said that being on the Court would not affect his studies and other involvements with the UPB. Robert Smith said to me later that his nominations last year to this same Court were interviewed by the senate.

Kim Tracy, who has been receiving much national attention for her resolution on condom machines in the residence halls, is drafting another resolution this week. She was also nominated for the office of Parliamentarian, which some senators have said she could fill very well, but the office is by appointment only. Bryan Holler served a one week notice for proposed changes in the Media and Publications Board. Robert Smith has said that since the MPB is a senate committee there should be a majority of senators on it. Denny Best is drafting an amendment to the constitution which says, in effect, that the President of the student body does not have to have prior experience (defined in the constitution as one year in the senate) to be qualified for office.

There will be a meeting of all new senators next Monday at 5:15 in Room 200 of the Union.

Beach Sweep Bags 23 Tons Of Trash

By Celeste E. Bulley
Editor-in-Chief

Over 3,000 volunteers, including many UNCW students and organizations helped make North Carolina beaches 23 tons of trash cleaner this past weekend when they gathered on beaches from Kitty Hawk to Calabash for Beach Sweep '88.

The number of volunteers for this area was way up from last year, and UNCW was well represented with members of different sororities, fraternities and clubs picking up trash at Wrightsville and Masonboro Island Beaches. At Wrightsville Beach alone, 203 bags of garbage that had been dumped at sea or dropped by area beachgoers were collected.

Deborah Haywood, coordinator of the Office of Health Promotion at UNCW commented on the number of volunteers who went with a group organized through the Alternatives/Livewell center and Campus Ministry. "Our office coordinated the presence of at least 65-75 people from Tau Nu Pi Fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega Service Fraternity, the Biology Club and Department and FOCUS (Fellowship of Christian University Students) - and they really worked hard."

"We just had a great turnout," said Ed Brooks, zone captain for Wrightsville Beach. "Last year, we only had about 45 or 50 people."

The number of volunteers up and down the Carolina coast increased dramatically from last year. Beach Sweep '87, the first annual cleanup, had about 1,000 people collecting trash in groups along the waterline and up to the dunes of North Carolina beaches. About 14 tons of trash was gathered last year and sorted into seven categories, the largest being plastic, followed by styrofoam, metal, paper, glass, wood and rubber. Some medical supplies were found in last year's sweep and organizers think the current dilemma of medical waste regularly washing up on North Carolina shores contributed greatly to the vastly increased turnout.

"I think the students enjoyed what they were doing," said Haywood, "one of the comments I heard was a girl saying 'I really feel like I made a difference today.'"

Rape Statistics Should Shock Students !

By Dan Noland
Guest Faculty Columnist

I read in the September 1 issue of the Chronicle of Higher Education that last year a University of Arizona researcher found, based on 6000 responses from 32 campuses, that 1 in 6 college women had either been raped or sexually assaulted, and that 1 in 15 college men admitted that they had either raped or sexually assaulted a woman. My first reaction was disbelief. There can't be that many men in college who would violate a woman, nor that many women who would be violated without letting it be known. At any rate, I have not heard anything about sexual assault at UNCW. But then, I have to admit that I really do not know what the situation is on this or any other campus.

If my initial reaction is accurate, then either the research is erroneous and all campuses are safer than reported (not a far-fetched possibility, since all research is prone to error), or we at UNCW have a special community which has managed to avoid what is elsewhere a terrible problem. When I broached this delicate subject to my classes, those who spoke tended to feel that the situation is not as bad here as reported in the research. That is heartening. What is it that makes our campus different, if indeed it is? We would do well to identify the factors in order to be of assistance to other campuses.

But it is possible that my initial reaction was wrong, and UNCW is not significantly safer. This leads to a very unsettling line of reasoning. If the research is accurate, then, on average, roughly two women in each of my classes has been raped or assaulted, and one man has been guilty of rape or assault. If that many people here had been robbed, or had robbed, I think I would know about it. It is far easier to tell someone you have been robbed than raped, I suppose, but silence in reaction to sexual crimes disturbs me deeply. Are women here afraid to speak out, and if so, why?

The research asserted that 'most rapes are "acquaintance" rapes, that assaulter and victim knew each other previously. Some say that women tend to feel some responsibility if they know their assailant. Others point out that the effects of alcohol blur whether or not sex was consensual, at least until the next day. In addition, our culture encourages men to seek sexual partners aggressively. At the same time, it encourages women to resist these advances initially in all cases but to join in eventually in special cases. This means that, at least potentially, the difference between living up to a cultural expectation and being sexually assaulted (or assaulting someone) is not always very evident. While these may be reasons for silence, they do not change the fact that involuntary sex is never legitimate.

I believe that being able to discuss this issue as a community is important, though I am aware that being a man makes initiating that discussion problematic. Still, we need to find agreement on what constitutes sexual assault. So, I would like to propose a definition: any sexual contact after one person has said "no." This may mean revising our dating and mating routines. Do not say "no" unless you mean it, and if you hear "no," assume that the other person does mean it.

I am aware that merely saying "no" will not solve a complex problem. But waiting for the police or administration to punish someone after the fact is no solution, either. I would like to hear women here speak out loud and often about their perception of the extent of sexual crimes, and what they think would help. Men can condemn assaults and any attitudes which promote them. We will help each other by identifying those behaviors that are and are not acceptable, and to do this we need to establish forums for open discussion of this and other issues.

I trust the problem is not as serious here as it may be elsewhere, but cooperation as a community is a good idea in either case.

Stead Brings A Bit Of The Welsh To UNCW

By Marc Kelley
Staff Writer

Professor Peter Stead is the Senior Lecturer in history at the University College of Swansea, a part of the University of Wales, Britain. After a year with our history department here at UNCW-- he will return to his tenured position at Swansea-- notable especially since he earned that distinction at the ripe old age of 22!

Professor Stead is not only a readily likable person, he captivates you with his Welsh accent. Our own Professor Toplin has been to Swansea twice, and was instrumental in bringing Professor Stead to UNCW as a Fulbright Scholar in Residence to our Department of History.

Named for U.S. Senator Fulbright, these visiting scholars teach abroad, reside in their host country and act as, in this case, an ambassador for Britain.

This term Professor Stead is teaching U.S. History and History of the British Empire. This Spring he will teach Britain in the 20th Century and a comparative analysis of U.S. and British history since 1945. These will be 400 level courses.

He has made regular visits to the U.S. over the past 15 years. His previous Fulbright was in 1973-74 to Wellesley College in Massachusetts. He really wanted to come to the U.S. at this time because of our presidential election, which thoroughly fascinates him! No small wonder since a main interest of his is the study of 20th century British (and American) Contemporary Politics, Society and Culture.

Another special interest is the social background and style of actors in the U.S. and Britain. Professor Toplin also shares his interest in the historical importance of movies, here and abroad.

With a high interest in people it should not surprise one to find that he stood for Parliament in 1979.

He has always been a member of the Labor Party, an obvious opponent of Maggie (P.M. Margaret Thatcher). Though politically at odds, as a historian he admires the way Maggie has won three elections. He noted that the Labor Party definitely has problems mounting opposition to her, and that a redefinition of their party system would be of great help.

To juxtapose that with an American party with a similar identity crisis merely imagine the Libertarian Party. It is image-dead. In Britain the Labor Party is associated with socialists, labor unions, and unilateral nuclear disarmament.

More about his beloved WALES. Wales is in western Britain and has a population of approximately 2.5 million. They lost their independence in 1536 and for centuries were fully integrated into England. Today the Welsh have three Members of Parliament (MPs) sitting in the House of Commons. Their cultural identity is on the rise and 20% of their people speak Welsh. All of them say "I'm Welsh," not English. He emphasizes the fact that Welsh people are less formal than their Brit counterparts, more friendly, spontaneous, prone to open debate and argument. Sounds like a great place to this writer!

Famous Welsh personalities include singer Tom Jones; poet Dylan Thomas, and reknowned actor Richard Burton.

As a historian of film, Professor Stead has just written a book entitled "Film and the Working Class," the feature film in American and British society, soon to be published in both the U.K. and the U.S. His concern is the content of feature films and how they relate to culture and society in the U.K. and the U.S. He is particularly interested in how U.S. films are received in Britain and vice versa. Some of you may recently have seen a British film-- "A Fish Called Wanda"!

His film analysis has been from the 1890s but a special interest lies in the 1930s of the U.S., our social times especially.

Present interest is the social content of U.S. movies and the reactions of our audiences, especially students reactions.

In his book he also covers actors such as Brando, Cagney, and Finney and how they personally changed the nature of movies. The personality of some actors can have a tremendous impact.

Professor Stead is currently working on a biography of Richard Burton and the way in which his acting was shaped by the "working class, chapel dominated, and rugby-loving community" in which he grew up--Port Talbot; which, by happenstance just happens to be only about 8 miles from Swansea where Professor Stead is from. They are practically comrades in theatre.

He is fond of pointing out that the Welsh are intensely theatrical and love opera; they're "Italians in the rain."

Having lived almost all of his life by the sea he could not envision residing anywhere else, hence UNCW--by the Sea snared him!

He absolutely enjoys contact with UNCW students, and believes they need far more one on one contact with their professors. He can envision the British "tutorial" program as a much-needed addition to U.S. universities. For a better understanding of this system all readers are hereby encouraged to see the upcoming play "Educating Rita" and/or the movie of the same name, starring Michael Caine (P.S.--the movie was great).

Professor Stead is impressed with the culture of the Wilmington area given its small size. He would like to see way more student involvement in student-run films, plays, poetry, and talks. In a cultural comparison our student counterparts determine the campus culture, not the faculty.

He is totally astonished that UNCW does not have a student management "Ye Old Bookshop." (Sounds like a joint Frat project to me!)

When asked about comparing lower level U.K. schools to U.S. schools he points out that Britain traditionally has had scholastic excellence, whereas U.S. high schools have not sufficiently emphasized the academic. He feels our emphasis has been on inculcation/socialization rather than proficiency in skills. Here in the U.S. he believes that math, languages, and music are best taught at an early age. Meanwhile, our high school students are barely treading water.

Speaking on America: he loves it here! He has been in 30+ states and feels the majesty of a large country, the blue skies, scenery, especially of the Rockies and our Southwest. He also finds Boston, Chicago, and the Big Apple particularly endearing.

He is fascinated by our addition to sports. His favourite? Why baseball of course. An appropriate quote: "I am delighted to be here and watch my beloved Red Sox win the World Series." His favorite foods are Mexican dishes and Chinese, and he misses the heavy curry dishes in British Indian restaurants. Time for another quote: "Curry is now the National Food of Britain." (I'm game, lettuce dine).

To sum, in conjunction with the UNCW History Department Swansea will be setting up a permanent relationship of student exchange. We should have approximately 50-60 U.S. students in various fields in residence. That should ensure a winning basketball team for Swansea-by the Sea!

DDT Still Gone Here, But . . .

By Mark Kelly
Guest Columnist

DDT is a fairly persistent (about 200 years) pesticide that insidiously wreaks havoc on our global environment, and the worst part is that the intended victims usually acquire an immunity/tolerance to it, which elicits the response of greater usage to "get rid of those damn bugs..." which compounds the problem.

The U.S. has effectively banned the use of DDT, yet it looks the other way while multinational corporations sell millions of tons of it extraterritorially. Are you irked? Yes, but...

We appear to enjoy a fairly decent standard of living, but, as Hendrix would have asked "Are you experienced?" Are you aware of the impact our "consumption-oriented" society has on terra firma? Some of us are blissfully ignorant, like sheep going to the slaughter; others are aware, yet do not care and the few Paul Reveres (e.g. Aldo Leopold, Ayn Rand, Rachel Carlson, Jacques Cousteau, et. al.) try to educate and warn those that would listen.

The "out of sight out of mind" mentality works when you flush a toilet, as well as when you ship toxic pesticides, defective condoms (that's the corporate answer to 3rd World family planning), and baby formulas (that cause diarrhea) to unsuspecting nations. Just think of all the yummy bananas we consume and coffee beans sprayed with tasty DDT. The karmic cycle does not discriminate.

During the Southeast Asian war games (Locals 1, Corporate America 0) we had a Naval admiral spray dioxin (Agent Orange) in the Mekong Delta and parts known & unknown. He wasn't told by the chemical companies that it would play "let's rearrange the genes of the babies" nor that it would cause many lingering effects on our own troops. That admiral just lost a son to complications from it. Have we learned how deadly it is? Oh yeah. You can still buy it.

You don't have to manage a chemical company to lay waste to a planet. Let's check out some large banks and famous burger joints. Those of you taking biology or related courses realize that approximately 40% of Earth's oxygen supply is produced by the Tropical Rain Forests. These primeval havens are sanctuaries for diverse plants and animals. Some, like Pongo pygmaeus (the orangutan) live in the high forest canopy. Excuses proffered for the decimation (non-renewable forests) of these forests are the need for teak and grazing land for Moo-burgers on the hoof. These multinational land rapists displace indigenous tribal Indians along with anything else within dozer distance.

Ponder this: would you rather have teak decks on your boat and teak salad bowls in the galley and walk around breathing bottled air; teak trinkets and flame broiled burgers or the awesome beauty of ancient forests? Teak got your breath?

ANY newspaper or TV news program can bring you bad/good news, but when was the last time they offered you a chance to do something? We'd like to offer you a methodology for the madness. Does the thought of XYZ Corp. destroying a goodly portion of your breathable air disgust you -- get you kind of 'miffed' -- wouldn't that tend to be a real damper on our most favourite of habits, breathing? WELL, there just happens to be an apolitical organization now extant that does move mountains. The Nature Conservancy is not the only protective agency around, they are the most effective. Being politically neutral they access grants and funds with which they go forth and BUY up islands, mountains, swamps, and rain forests. They are international in scope.

Look for their public service announcements in various publications. Exercise some uncommon sense and send them a weekend's worth of beer funds.

Another well established national conservation group is the Sierra Club. They are very effective at lobbying Congress and State legislatures. A plus is that they are local and often hold a variety of informative lectures and slide shows on campus.

Hopefully this will be the first in a long series of articles promulgating the notion of a planetary consciousness. Perhaps we would be more attentive "Masters of all we survey" if we actually lived in global awareness. This might upset some persons who promote nationalism, but as this is essentially an apolitical exposition exposing global brotherhood; I hope no one takes offense--none is intended.

Stress Working For You

by Robert J. Kriegel, Ph.D.

(CPS)--The alarm sounds. "6 a.m. I've really gotta hustle. I've gotta finish that outline, talk to Professor Jones, stop by the lab, read 100 pages for my noon psych class and be at work at 3 p.m."

Today's college campuses are pressure cookers. In fact, the Nuprin Pain Report, the first national study on pain in American, documented that more people 18-24 suffer from stress and pain than any older group.

As I've toured the country visiting college campuses, students tell me the most common causes of their stress are: too much to do, too little time; exams; money; relationships; interviews; family and career choices.

So, get rid of stress. Right? Wrong. Stress is neither good nor bad. How you handle it can be. Learning to make stress work for you can help you concentrate better and think more clearly under pressure, have more energy, be more creative and make college more enjoyable.

But many of us handle stress poorly. Some people panic and work too fast under stress. Others procrastinate. Neither response is productive and both are caused by what I call "sabotage thinking"--common reactions to stressful situations that work against rather than for you.

Five common types of sabotage thinking are: "the gottas," "worries," "the can'ts," "the uh oh's" and "the don'ts."

Let's look at the gottas and methods to overcome them.

The gottas usually occur when you think you have too much to do and too little time to do it. "I gotta study for two exams... I gotta read two chapters... I gotta call financial aid about my loan... I gotta get a date for Friday night..."

The gottas make everything seem harder than it really is. You get into the panic zone, rushing to get it all done. You walk fast, talk too fast, write too fast, eat too fast. You can't concentrate or think clearly. You make careless mistakes, blank out on exams and forget things you already know. Everything seems like a life-or-death proposition.

I was talking to a junior at UC Berkeley who had a bad case of the gottas about a forthcoming exam. "I gotta get an A," he said. I asked what would happen if he didn't.

"If I don't get an A, I won't keep my 4.0 average. Then I'll never get into a really good graduate school, and then I won't get a top job, and then I'll never make a lot of money..."

By the end of his discourse, not getting an A on this test was akin to his life being ruined.

When he stopped and thought about what he'd just said--that if he didn't ace this test his life would be down the tubes--he started laughing. "I must be crazy."

He was not crazy, just not thinking clearly or realistically. Many of us get that way under pressure. This type of desperation thinking makes us overreact and causes panic. The cure is to shift from irrational to rational thinking. Do a reality check. When you get the gottas take a deep breath, exhale slowly and ask yourself, "What is the worst thing that could possibly happen?" and "How likely is that to happen?"

This type of reality thinking puts the gottas in perspective. Sure, not getting an A would be a drag, but it wouldn't be the end of the world nor would it land this student in the ranks of homeless.

Looking at past wins help, too. After all, he already had a 4.0 average, and had done well on difficult exams before. Reminding himself of his past success on similar exams helped him relax and restored his confidence.

Gaining control of your thinking will help turn desperation reactions into peak performance actions. Learning this early in life will be invaluable in the future, because no matter what you do or where you do it, there's always going to be things you gotta do.

Condoms Still Cause An Uproar In N.C. Press

SGA Senator Kim Tracy recently proposed, and had passed by a 115-35 vote, a motion in the North Carolina Student Legislature to install condoms machines in the residence halls of all UNC system campuses. This proposal was passed and has immediately drawn praise from student and fire from several papers in the state.

On Tuesday, the Raleigh News and Observer stated, in its editorial, that, "the students' resolution calling for installation of condom machines in dorms shows the students haven't thought out the implications of such a move." The editorial further said that the students want, "to be pampered like children" by being able to purchase condoms in their residence halls.

Their argument is based on the belief that it will affect the image of those campuses that install such machines and therefore affect how much money the schools would receive through state money and gifts from alumni.

The legislature, however, really took an impressive stance by passing such a motion. For once the students seem to be much more sensible than their elders. These people who criticize such a move seem to believe that: 1) AIDS is the only reason for this movement and 2) colleges are mostly abstinent.

Now, hopefully this movement will shatter the myth that the UNC system is full of abstinent coeds. It will also show that they have accepted the fact that we have a problem with sexually transmitted diseases (STD), like chlamydia, which is at an all time high in the shadow of AIDS.

Currently at UNCW there is only one condom machine on campus. Most people don't even know about it. It's located in the mens bathroom of the health and wellness center. The fact is not well publicized and probably won't be.

The motion, although ratified, now must face the scrutiny of the UNC Board Of Governors. If any aspect of the real world has settled there the movement will pass and the machines will be in place by next year, if not the machines will not be in place and those who otherwise might have used them won't take the time to drive out to Eckerd's in the middle of the night.

STDs and AIDS do not discriminate or wait for red tape. It is a sad thing to say that someone of importance could actually place a higher value on school money than in a students' health.

Reader Responds With "Bad Writing" Story

Dear Rick,
I liked your "awful story" article so much, I decided to write one of my own!
By the way, your column is great!

Sincerely,
Kim

Founders Day, 1983

Silently, the fly on the wall salivated as he watched Phoebe bite the hairs that grew on Ed's nipples. She bit them off and rolled them from the end of her tongue into the crack in between the sofa cushions. Little did they know of the happenings upstairs.

Tom stared hungrily at the African Violets on the Windowsill. They were all that came between her and the real world. What would Mary think? What could she think? He observed her pickled brain in the jar by the violets. Oh, how she once loved those flowers! Leaf by leaf, Tom ingested those precious plants precisely and precariously, but without being precocious. Next, would it be Cate's, Gerkin's, the kosher ones, or Mary's medulla oblongata? She had always been out of her mind anyway.

As for the little green man behind the refrigerator, he only could muster a snicker as he telepathically transmitted the scene to his schizoprenic sister-in-law, Francine.

Francine was transfixed by the waves as she couldn't decide between extra crispy or original recipe. What did it matter? Nothing mattered anymore. Lack of enthusiasm since the accident plagued her. The accident, it flashed through her left brain. The colors! The plasmal The Aqua-Velva soaked Cheerios! She would never forget, or be the same, as she returned to her cave beneath the boardwalk. Francine wore pink shoes.

Nearby, a Pomeranian whispered sweet nothings to the fire hydrant on the corner of 5th and Elm. But, E.T. had phoned home, so it was futile. After grandfather sold the cow, all was futile.

We didn't care. We had the strength to carry on. As the sun rose to new heights over a glorious new day, she hairs from Ed's nipples underneath the couch glistened with hope...

Editors Note -- We rarely get letters of this nature and under normal circumstances such a letter wouldn't be printed. This, however, was an exception and we hope that whoever does read this gets as much a laugh out of it as we did. Thanks Kim.

Happiness In Being Depressed

By Chad Adams
Managing Editor

"I assure you that being alive isn't a plus; last night's Wallbangers left me worshipping the porcelain god; even hell would be a welcome sight today," he said.

Still searching for hope, I

It's always interesting to speak with people about their lives. I've noticed that about ninety percent of the time people are not happy or at least don't appear to be happy. It seems like people get some kind of joy by being worse off than the other guy. A few days ago I was speaking to a friend of mine from last year and had asked, "How's life?"

From his pit of depression he responded, "My grades suck, I'm broke, my car was totaled last week and I'm not happy being a registered voter this election."

His situation was definitely sad, yet as the perpetual optimist, I noted that despite all else, he is still among the living, but even this was useless.

commented that he was in the good 'ole USA and that being here was much better than being several other places he could possibly be.

He was inconsolable: "Who cares? We're the most valuable of hostages on the international terrorist market, that's always reassuring to me when I step out of the good 'ole USA."

He had a good point, so I tried to change the subject, but he was proving to be terminally down for the day. Said I, "The weather's not so bad, feels good now that it's cooled off a bit."

"Yeah, my allergies enjoy it -- I love ragweed so -- I find the side effects of Sinutab are spell binding as well. People should use the stuff to tranquilize animals on Wild Kingdom. Boom, down she goes."

I could sympathize as I too have taken it, (the stuff could bring down a horse) but it is better than employing several boxes of Kleenex to remove your nose.

Finally, in desperation, I asked him if there was anything in life to be happy about.

"Of course there is, Ben Johnson had his gold medal stripped for taking steroids, I'd say he had a rougher week, Billy Carter died, (definitely a bum for Jimmy,) the Soviets don't know who the heck their going to be dealing with in four months, (then again, neither do we), and Jim Baker still doesn't have PTL back...too bad for Tammy, although she has been talking to God lately. There's some reassurance, in a sadistic way, in knowing that somebody is worse off than I am."

I finally agreed.

Summer Tans Fading On Campus

What Happened to All Of The Tans?

I have already noticed the fading of tanned bodies on campus. It's a shame; so many of you toil for so many hours in the hot sun just to see it fade away. I don't hear any complaining though; that must mean that it's ok, and the tanning season is over. It seemed to last as long as the major league baseball season.

The tanning season begins in late March or early April. The classes become more sparse, especially afternoon classes. "Tan talk" becomes the norm on campus. I can always hear, "Wow, where did you get that tan?" That's always a smart question. Where does anyone get their tan--their bathroom?

There's only two ways to get a tan, and nobody will admit to visiting a tanning salon. They get indignant if asked about it. "I got my tan the old fashion way--I earned it."

I always hear girls talking about "laying out." I hate that term. Isn't that what funeral parlors do with bodies? Lay them out? These girls revolve their schedules around laying out. I hear, "I laid out all day." or, "I'm skipping the rest of my classes so I can lay out--there's some good rays today." The words "skin cancer" sound foreign to them.

The National Cancer Society spends so much money and time warning us about skin cancer, all to no avail. I've seen many articles and pamphlets which actually say that one should wear long pants, long sleeve shirts, and a hat, while visiting the beach. I always see people dressed like that on the beach. Don't you? Those warnings are as effective as "Just say No!"

I figure if millions of American continue to smoke despite the fact that it causes lung cancer, the threat of a little basal cell epithelioma is pretty insignificant. One can simply have it excised from their face with a scalpel blade.

I've already had one of those excised from my face, and it was as much fun as shaving my butt and sitting in a bowl of gin. I hate when that happens.

Light skinned people like me have to really take precautions from the sun, but I'm not going to avoid the beach; as long as there are near naked women lying around in the sand, I'll be out there!

I have to visit the math department prior to going to the beach though. The numbers are beyond this communication major's capability. I just hand all the stats to a computer nerd, and he takes it and figures out if my strategy will work. The stats are something like: I'm wearing a number 15 sunscreen on my entire body. I capped that off with a number 25 balm on my nose, cheeks and lips. I'll be out there between noon and 3:00 p.m. The temperature is 96 degrees, but the heat index is 108 degrees, and the tanning index is nine and holding. Who wins? The sun or my sunscreen?

It's hard to believe the war going on between my face and the sun. Somehow, my nose still manages to get red, even if I wear number 1000 sun block and stand in the shade with a hat on!

Who the hell invented this tanning index and heat index garbage? As if 99 degrees isn't hot enough, some jerk-off on the radio will say, "It's 99 degrees outside, but the heat index is 110. This means that it feels like it's 110 degrees rather than 99 degrees." Thanks a lot Jack. I'm already sweating profusely and my poor car AC is working itself into a hernia, just to keep me at ninety degrees. It doesn't need to hear that index trash. It's liable to give up and die.

I wonder if this tanning index stuff really helps the competitive tanner? Do they sit by their radio waiting to hear the stats? I certainly have nothing against beautiful tanned women lying around the beach. I just think it's weird-- lying there basking your skin.

Lying in the hot sand under the blaring sun doesn't seem to be a very intelligent thing to do. How would we explain it if intelligent beings from another planet visited and inquired about this strange practice? They would tell us about the depleting ozone they encountered and warn of it's dangers. What could we say? We wouldn't want to look like idiots, so we'd have to resort to lying. We could say, "well, ah, our bodies are so advanced that we can obtain nourishment orally or, ah, from the sun. Yeah, that's it --the sun. Photosynthesis. The sun can nourish us too."

We couldn't let them see tanning booths. They would think twice about befriending a species that would pay to get their skin baked by ultra violet rays.

Hopefully they would visit in the winter because I don't think tanning booths are very popular in the winter. I don't see many people with tans in the "off season." I reckon that there is no use tanning when there isn't any competition around.

I read that pale skin is slowly becoming the fashion again. If that happens, classes will still become sparser in the Spring. Students will say, "I missed my classes yesterday because it was so sunny out. I was afraid that I'd get a tan while walking to my classes. I don't trust my number 357 sun block and umbrella."

Quest Through Questions

What is the Answer? We all want Answers! Who am I? Who cares about me? What shall I do with my life? What shall I do with Saturday night? If we were to sit down and write out all that concerns us, we would come up, most likely, with a series of questions. As a matter of fact, a mental image I have of the human condition is an image of a person standing on a storm swept beach looking up and out into the void and shouting "Why?"

On the other side of this situation stand a lot of people and institutions that are quite ready to give us Answers; external authorities who teach and preach "this is the way"; "here is the truth for you"; "do what I say and you will be alright". And in a time when traditional authorities no longer seem to have a clear fix on truth or the "right way" of anything; we are often tempted to avoid the anxiety of a life filled with questions by seeking out a person, or a group or an institution that seems to have the Answers. All of us dream of becoming more than we are, developing ourselves and building relationships that will fill life's journey with meaning and value. I am convinced that one component of such a becoming life is learning to live into the question rather than seeking answers. Rainer Maria Rilke wrote "be patient toward all that is unsolved in your heart. And try to love the questions themselves. Do not seek the answers that can not be given to you because you would not be able to live them. And the point is to live everything. Live the questions now. Perhaps you will then gradually, without noticing, live along some distant day into the answer."

While we all long for the certainty and security that comes with absolute and pat answers; while we all want to feel that God is in our corner, the reality is that we live by faith and not by certainty or security or even knowledge. A friend of mine, Bob Raines, writing in his book Living the Questions, notes that we are on a quest that is characterized by questioning, searching, wondering and hoping. Such a quest is not a matter of just having questions, but living the questions we have and even loving the question. "Some how," he writes, "we want to live with our fears and hopes and wonderings in the confidence that, trusting the process in this fashion, we shall live our way into the purpose of God and our own fulfillment."

WLOZ: Relief From Top 40

By Rick Cairns
Entertainment Editor

Too many students aren't "hip" to the fact that UNCW has a radio station. I would hate to think that those students don't care; I'd prefer to think that they just haven't been enlightened to the fact, or that they are confused about the cable hook-up required.

Allow me to enlighten the masses. WLOZ IS THE CAMPUS RADIO STATION. YOU CAN PICK IT UP ON 90.9 F.M. CABLE, AND GETTING CABLE IS NOT A HASSLE! Campus radio stations are known around the country for their non-bubble gum approach to music, and lack of ridiculous advertisements. It's time you jump off of the top-40 bandwagon, and get in touch with the real music that college students listen to around this country.

I have been listening to WLOZ for over a year, and I guarantee that you won't get bored with it. You can hear a variety of music which is played by your fellow student DJ's.

The essence of the station is progressive rock, and as you know, you can't hear that anywhere else in Wilmington. If progressive rock doesn't get you off-give the station a try anyway. All of the music isn't "head banger" music. Popular bands such as "Love And Rockets" and the now defunct "Smiths" are anything but "head bangers".

I think that the best thing about WLOZ is their variety. Every two hours, a different DJ will take the helm, and play their favorite music. There are little restrictions for them and there are thousands of albums to choose from; they can even bring their own music to play on the air.

I was a DJ last semester so I know the system up there. It certainly was a kick being able to be a DJ, and play whatever I wanted. There is no radio station which pleases everybody all of the time. With WLOZ, if you don't like a particular DJ's selections, you can call in requests or tune in two hours later and hear a different perspective altogether.

The music starts at 9:00 a.m. weekdays and continues until midnight. The music doesn't start until 12:30 on weekends because the Union doesn't open until noon, but the music continues until 2:00 a.m.

There are a few specialty shows such as: "Trie Vibrations", a reggae show from 8 until 10 on Sundays. A heavy metal show which is yet to be named. (The DJ's that do this show are trying to think of a clever name). This show is from 8 to 10 on Mondays. "Virgin Vinyl" features an entire new album or two between 8 and 10 on Tuesdays. "Bucket Of Beans" features Boston bands, and can be heard from 9 to 10 on Thursdays. And my favorite, "Punk And Disorderly" (I don't need to explain that) can be experienced from 10 to 12 Thursday nights.

WLOZ has a new general manager this semester -- Steve Riley. He is attempting to get the station to be more professional in hopes of receiving a go ahead from the FCC to be on the FM air waves. Riley said, "There are regulations which each station has to abide by to get the FCC to grant them a license. We would have to prove ourselves for a period of time before (the FCC) would grant it." When asked if he really believed that they will get that license, Riley said, "Yes! I really think so, but I don't know how long it will take. I wouldn't want to venture a guess."

Riley made it known that if any student wanted to work for the station, that they should come up to room 212 in the union and talk to him. He said, "If there isn't a DJ spot available at that time, he will find a job for them until a spot opens." As a semester wears on, many students have to abandon their DJ shows, so there are usually openings.

According to Riley, the major expense of WLOZ is to the phone company. They get the signal to Vision Cable. It's over 50% of the station's expenses.

The music director is Danny Ling, and I can tell that he enjoys his work. He has held this position since January of '86. (None of the positions at WLOZ are salaried by the way.)

Ling's job, of course, is deciding what gets air play. He has to make the many calls to record companies to make sure that they will send their new releases.

"I have to stay on top of some of these companies, and must send them our play list to prove that we are playing their music," Ling said. "By contacting them personally, they sometimes send more than one album or poster, so we can give them away on the air."

Ling puts together the top 35 list every two weeks. There are many variables in deciding this list. Consensus of the DJ's, requests, other colleges top 35 lists and much influence comes from the "College Music Journal." This journal features new releases and the top 35 lists of all college radio stations. It is practically the bible of new music stations.

Ling said, "People are passionate about what we play here."

His office walls are decorated with "new music" posters. It looks as though only the extremely clever or weird poster merits a spot on the wall. One in particular caught my eye. It's from "The Butthole Surfers" album Hairway To Steven. It has a picture of a guy with pigtails and a harelip. It's weird, believe me.

Ling said that everyone is doing a fine job and they have been showing up for their shows. This has been a problem in the past. "The older DJ's are really helping the new ones and the new DJ's seem to be conscientious and are keeping good records of their shifts.

Bobby Thomas, a sophomore, did his first show recently. He said, "I was real nervous at first and was reluctant to talk into the microphone, but after my two hours were up, I was feeling good about it." Bobby Prefers classic rock-n-roll like Led Zeppelin, so of course he focused his show toward that music. He received a few phone calls -- mostly favorable.

Frank Simpson is the program director. I didn't have the opportunity to talk with him, but others who work with him filled me on as to his responsibilities. His job is to have DJ's on the air. It's tougher than it sounds. You know how unreliable people tend to be. He is responsible for the schedule and to make sure that the DJ's are doing their job correctly. Records must be kept for each song or public service announcement played.

The DJ must play six songs an hour from the play list. The DJ can choose any song from the list though. They should play requests and must do the weather on the half hour. The weather reports are as loose as you will ever hear. It's up to the DJ. Some will simply say, "Hey, it's hot; it might rain." I enjoy ad libbed reports so much more than the usual meteorological report.

Riley has added news to the format once again.

The news covers UNCW and surrounding areas. Donna Calleson is the news director. The news can be heard weekdays at five.

For the only music alternative in Wilmington and a different outlook on life, all you have to do is listen to WLOZ. All it takes is a cable hook-up. If you already have cable, and who doesn't, call Vision Cable and they will hook you up. It only costs about two bucks a month. If I have to tell you that two dollars a month is nothing for a better lifestyle - then you may as well drop out of school and get a job at Rose's or something.

Movie Reviews By Anita Bradshaw

POWAGATSI

This is the movie to see! Don't be put off by the fact that this movie has no words and no known actors. The images are wonderful; that's the understatement of the year. Philip Glass has created a musical masterpiece. The music stands by itself and congers up thoughts and mental processes, almost to the point of dialogue, without the actual conversation.

Exquisite shots from Peru, India, Africa, Nepal, and other countries show just how beautiful our world really is.

There really is no plot to this movie other than whatever your own thoughts become. Whatever passes through your mind, however your past experiences allow you to piece the images into some meaningful statement, that is the plot.

I urge you not to pass this film up. It truly is a work of art.

BLACK EAGLE

This movie opened this past week-end in Wilmington and is being shown in our local theatres, but it is far from entertainment. It stars Shogun and Jean Claude van Damme, two fine martial arts experts. Being able to kick and hit doesn't mean that you can break into the acting business successfully. Neither of them do. There are a lot of muscle-ripping, face-smashing fight scenes, but even they are not spectacular. They lack the vitality that we are accustomed to seeing in these martial-arts movies.

If that isn't bad enough, however, the clincher making this movie a bomb is the dialogue: it can hardly be understood, especially Koshugi. His accent is heavy, and requesting sub-titles would not have been asking too much. Skip this one.

DEAD RINGER

This is a subtle horror film about middle-aged twins that have a hard time accepting their genetics. They are entangled in each other's lives and resent it. Psychosomatic illness plagues the two, as well as, a terrible addiction to prescription drugs.

In the end, the trauma of being a genetic mirror overwhelms the two and they self-destruct. The movie lasts too long and had a few too many extraneous veins of dialogue. I wouldn't burst a gut to go see it, but if you do, be prepared to a perplexing, if not gratifying end, unless maybe you're a twin.

We The Mediocre

By Kelly Holsten

Hmmm... what to write about... after last week's column and the ensuing threats from various SKINHEADS, BUCKETBRAINS and card-carrying A.C.L.U. members, I have become wary of my ability to offend every semi-literate style KING within reading distance. I don't know; I guess part of the problem stems from an early childhood addiction to drooling during 85% of my waking moments. Fortunately, by the age of 19 I was able to CURB this sad habit. Now, if I could just learn to perfect this whole "BREATHING" thing.

But is PERFECTION a proper goal to aim for? Is something so unobtainable worth hours and hours of painstaking labor? Why not aim for something more realistic... like, say PITTSBURGH? I've often wondered how anyone who's been to Pittsburgh could STILL think GOD exists.

Of course, I've also wondered why I come close to APOPLEXY when faced with the decision of which side of the BED to get out of.

But... what does this have to do with NEW MUSIC? AND WHY was this MUTANT LOSER given a column after he continues to bludgeon everything held SACRED in SEAHAWK journalism?

Hmmm... what to write about...

The Pandoras - "Stop Pretending" (Rhino Records) L.A.

The SELF-PROCLAIMED "SLUTS OF ROCK N' ROLL", and I won't argue... The Pandoras owe everything to the 1960's psychedelic era; however, they seem to pull it off pretty well. This is no BANGLES: these four girls make other ALL-GIRL BANDS look as if they were just weaned off Oreo cookies and the Bay City Rollers. The LEAD SINGER sounds as if she just inhaled from the wrong end of a peace pipe; her tone reminds you of early Lime Spiders (from Australia). Songs such as "It Feels Alright" soar above the rest: a swirly mix of cheesy organ, distorted guitar and manic screams pull this track into the gutter. Beware of DUDS though.

Feedtime - "Cooper-S" (Rough Trade) Sydney, Aust.

This is Feedtime's second L.P. and any album with a picture of an Austin Mini Cooper-S on the cover can't be that bad! This band's debut record was a lesson in thunder-boom-grunge with thud-ridden rhythm tracks which made you want to crawl or your hands and knees (I liked it).

"Cooper-S" is Feedtime's interpretation of covers from the likes of the Beach Boys, the Rolling Stones, The Animals, the Stooges and the Ramones. Yes, they even mutilate an e.e. cummings poem. This album takes off where the first one left off... there's nothing like listening to "Fun, Fun, Fun" and "We've Got to Get Out of This Place" done by this bunch of lunatics from the OUTBACK. This trio gets top honors for making every instrumental track sound like six wailing FENDER BASS GUITARS played with a bottleneck slide!

Mission Of Burma - "Forget Mission Of Burma" (TAANG) Boston, Mass.

If you've never heard of MISSION OF BURMA, you're missing one of the legends of witty, post-punk, garage band POP. These guys are still considered "GODS" in Boston even though they disbanded years ago because of the deterioration of guitarist Roger Miller's hearing. Drummer peter prescott has gone on to carry the Burma sound in his own band, the VOLCANO SUNS, which is one of most underrated bands currently active.

"Forget..." is 12 cuts that were never released during M. O. B.'s reign of the Boston scene. Burma's sound is a combination of rough, upbeat, distorted guitar tracks with a propelling rhythm scheme. The vocals are also rough, yet melodic on the whole. This is a must release for M.O.B. fans; here's a chance to hear more of a good thing - a "THING" which influenced almost every band outta Boston!

The Feeties - "Only Life" (A & M) New Jersey
These guys are starting to jump into the BIG TIME... I mean a whole page in "TIME" magazine... and they're from Hoboken, NEW JERSEY, no less!

My God, it's hard to believe what what you can do with two or three chords, a couple of chiming guitars sounding a repetitive "ding-dong, ding-dong" riff and some folksy vocals. The Feeties of, in the Zeigiste (Reivers) tradition of melodic, simple, straight-forward, yet crafty, Velvet Underground inspired songs. They're getting a lot of air-play on college radio. While this album doesn't send me cartwheeling into oncoming traffic with excitement, it is solid, accessible, listenable and worth looking into.

This Won't Be On The Test

The Laziest President Calvin Coolidge's most quoted dictum was, "The chief business of America is business," but his most urgent priority was apparently sleep. Throughout his term of office (1923-29), the thirtieth president averaged ten hours of sleep a day, and ten hours of loafing, but rarely four hours of work. Despite his Vermont Congregationalist roots, many historians considered him the laziest chief executive in the nation's history--a president with a unique "genius for inactivity." (He must have been depressed.)

Famous Last Words As William Palmer stepped onto the gallows in 1856, he looked at the trapdoor and exclaimed, "Are you sure it's safe?"

Money To Burn Lighting a cigar with a hundred dollar bill or any bill for that matter can be accomplished at no cost whatsoever. U.S. paper money that has been burned or damaged can be redeemed at any Federal Reserve Bank--if, that is, more than half of the bill survives in recognizable form. So just be certain to blow out the flame in time. Nor is there anything illegal about it; no law forbids setting money afire. (Now that's a way to impress a date.)

Summertime Blues In 1816, there was no summer. Across northern Europe and the eastern United States, daytime temperatures rarely reached fifty degrees. A June 6th blizzard dumped ten inches of snow on parts of New England. It was all caused by a volcano on the other side of the world.

On April 5, 1815, one of history's greatest volcanic eruptions rocked Sumbawa, in what is now Indonesia. The massive cloud of produced lay suspended over the Northern Hemisphere, deflecting the sun's radiation. At night the mercury often dipped below freezing. On July 4, the high temperature in normally sultry Savannah, Georgia, was 46 degrees F. Frost, snow, sleet, and ice caused crop failures as far west as Illinois, and many people died of winter illnesses.

Say What? Newscaster: "President Carter has painful hemorrhoids and is being treated by his physician, Rear Admiral...William Lookass...Lukash!!!" (Sounds like an appropriate job for a "Rear Admiral.")

Give Rust A Break Rust itself is harmless enough and not a cause of infection or its most dreaded result, tetanus. Any cut by a nonsterile object could result in infection and/or tetanus.

The Devil In Ms. Meyers

The Surgeon General, in a collaborating, mythical research effort with former Olympic hopeful, Angel Meyers, has just confirmed what most Eastern Block men, in addition to myself, have been contending since the inception of anabolic steroids during the mid thirties. That is, of course, in addition to their widely recognizable ability to promote a rapid enhancement of muscle fibers, they are also an extremely effective form of birth control.

Consider this: Would you like to go to bed sober with a woman whose biceps are the envy of the all-male gym you attend, and whose only purpose for carrying a razor is because it's required by all bouncers at Harvy's House of Hospitality, the saloon which boasts the now world renowned stirred fingers as an appetizer? Where and how Harvy obtained the fingers is another story.

In case you are not familiar with the Meyers scenario, let me quickly fill you in. Three weeks prior to her scheduled appearance in Seoul, where she was billed as America's brightest swimming medal candidate, Ms. Meyers tested positively for having chemical traces of the banned drug, anabolic steroids in her system. She is after all an "Angel", and since no angel would ever stoop to these unscrupulous tactics for the single purpose of obtaining a silly gold medal, she vehemently protested, stating that, in fact, the drug she tested positive for had been mistaken for her prescribed birth control pill. Not fully aware of the chemical composition of the pill and knowing only that, thank goodness, it is effective in its respective endeavor, I was infinitely curious as to how such a proposterous injustice could be served.

Immediately, upon reading of this farce, two terribly important questions swam into my mind. The most obvious was how in the world could this little angel be accused of something that America's simply do not do?

Without boring you with the laborious details, suffice to say that there is no reasonable explanation, other than the obvious, that would truthfully illustrate why she showed traces of the illegal drug in her system.

I re-read the article again. This time I saw a staggering statistic that I, probably due to my uncontrollable laughter, initially failed to see. It seems as though Ms. Meyers, who has yet to change her story, is the only woman since the advent of this particular testing device to ever have her medication appear chemically identical, in level amounts, to the banned drug.

The head of the USOC suggested that in order for the level she showed to appear as a result of only the "pill", she would have had to administer her body three to five times the prescribed amount. Now either Ms. Meyers is the most fertile woman this side of "Cheer's" Carla, or the woman's brain has been waterlogged to the point where counting is no longer a reasonably expected bodily function.

The article continued. It said that there have been over 10,000 athletes tested, many of whom were currently taking the pill, and the administering scientists had never previously encountered a similar situation.

Ms. Meyers called her delicate situation a tragedy and further stated that she didn't expect the committee to positively accept her appeal because that would illustrate a flaw in the governing body's only mechanism for precisely identifying the cheater's from the non-cheater's.

I agree. Her situation is certainly a tragedy. It's a tragedy anytime someone attempts to challenge the integrity of athletics for the vain purpose of self-satisfaction. Actually, it could have been much worse. The USOC could have succumbed to Ms. Meyers, and accommodated her wishes by overturning her appeal. Had that occurred, it no longer would have been considered a tragedy. It would have been elevated to a full-force catastrophe.

My second question? Knowing the stereotypical pitfalls of cohabitating before competing, I am truly perplexed as to why a nice girl like you, as your name suggests, would even have a need to employ the services of this ever-popular form of birth control?

Could it be that you felt you were sly enough to fool your coach with your bedroom propensities, much in the same manner you attempted to cast a shadow of doubt over the USOC?

Oh, Angel. You're such a little devil!

George's Heroics Carry Hawks

By Patrick Fowler
Staff Writer

Hoping to rebound from Saturday's heart breaking loss against the Naval Academy, Coach Jackie Blackmore's young Hawks team looked to Sophomore sensation Chris George to lead an otherwise sputtering offense in their game, Sunday, against American University.

George, who scored the Hawks lone goal in Saturday's loss, picked up right where he left off, taking a nifty pass from Mike Gercis, scoring the game's first goal and giving UNCW a 1-0 lead just 51 seconds into the game.

American, a perennial national power, having reached the NCAA finals three years ago, was defenseless in attempting to stop George, who later provided the final margin with his second goal of the game, and sixth on the season. Gercis once more was credited with the assist.

With the Hawks comfortably leading at the half, 2-0, they turned to standout goalie John Pinter, who earlier last week recorded his first collegiate shutout, again played well, allowing only one American kicked ball to enter the net.

"I was upset about losing the shutout," Pinter said, "But more importantly, I didn't want the team to let down. I just wanted time to go."

Time did go, and behind Pinter's saves, several of which were of the exciting, one-handed diving variety, the Hawks were able to control the ball and escape with what Blackmore labeled "the biggest win since I've been here."

George, following his dazzling weekend which included all three Seahawk goals, was named Monday as the Colonial Athletic Association's player of the week.

The win raised the Hawks record to 2-3 in the conference and an even 4-4 overall.

Brzotoswski Crowned Champ

Individual Champion Paula Brzotoswski shot a 1 under par 71 Sunday to end-up with a two day total of 149 to lead UNCW to a second place finish, eight shots behind eventual champion James Madison in the ECAC Womens Golf Championship played in Hanover, N.H.
UNCW - Finished with a total of 638. Mary Thomas finished 6th with a 2 round total of 161.
UNCW - Brzotoswski 78-70
Thomas 81-80

The UNCW Men's Golf Team rode the strong rounds of Richard Kimble and Chris Sputh who shot a 73 and 74 respectively, to finish in a 10 place during the James Madison Fall Golf Tournament played at Laurel Fork, Va.

The Hawks two-round total of 623 was 44 shots behind champion Virginia Commonwealth.

The men entered Sunday's round in the 14th position and moved up four places after scoring a 306.

Spath, who shot a 73 on Saturday, finished in a 6th place tie overall with a two day total of 147.

Erick Luckner was the only other Seahawk to break 80 during Sunday's final round.

UNCW's Soccer Team, coming off its biggest win of this young season looking to sweep a weekend conference doubleheader against the Naval Academy and American.

Following Chris George's 4th goal of the season, a shot coming off a rebound tying the score at 1. It appeared as though the Hawks were on their way. However, at the 10:40 mark, Navy's Steve Lindsey slid undetected behind the Hawks defense and headed a corner-kicked ball past the outstretched arms of goalie John Pinter.

Coach Blackmore was amiss as to the openness of the game-winner, faulting himself for poor substitution.

The loss dropped the Hawks record to 1-3 in the conference and 3-4 overall.

Spiker's Control Bryant; Remain Unbeaten

By Chris Wright
Sports Editor

There were two games played Thursday night when the Coker Cobras went searching for their first volleyball victory against UNCW at Hanover Gym. And UNCW's Lady Spikers won both, sort of.

Within the framework of the actual contest, an individual dual was emerging, one which accounted for most of the scoring and even more of the excitement.

Coker's Althea Bryant, a 5-11 Senior, avoided another typical UNCW romp, by showcasing her immensely impressive ability. Often leaping in a Jordanesque manner, she went high and long, spiking sets from behind the six-foot midline, somewhat of a rarity in women's volleyball. Her seven kills in game one accounted for more than half of the Cobras offensive output.

UNCW's DeDe Devoloy, however, was determined not to be overshadowed as she parlayed the quick sets of her teammates to rack up six kills, including one spectacular spike in which she leaped high in air and slammed a winner through the outstretched fingertips of Bryant, in leading the Hawks to a game one 15-11 victory. Coker quickly quieted the 200 fans by staking out an early 6-2 lead, pointing coming mostly from Bryant. However, UNCW called a timeout designed to stop Bryant and it worked well enough to slow her down and afforded UNCW the opportunity to seize the lead for good at 8-7.

Games two and three were similar in style to game one; both teams looked to their top players for offensive support.

UNCW's overall talent eventually prevailed, slowing down Bryant completely stalled the otherwise impotent Cobra bite, and the Hawks easily dropped the Cobras to 0-5 by winning 15-7 and 15-6.

Crunch Falls to 5th Following Strong First Day

After winning two consecutive games during the second annual Queen City Ultimate Frisbee Tournament UNCW's "Crunch" team sputtered as they finished the first day of the tournament by losing two straight.

The Crunch was seeded second in the two-poll tournament format. They opened by defeating Appalachian St. 11-3 and later rolled over UVA, 13-4.

The Hawks then took on two consecutive national contenders, chain Lightning and Dr. Seuss, Fisbee Teams representing Atlanta and Washington, D.C. respectively.

The tiring Hawks had the legs to keep up with the powerful Lightning team, knotting the score at eight before the Atlanta-based team struck quickly and rallied for four unanswered points, escaping with a hard-fought, 13-9 victory.

The following against the D.C. squad would determine second place within the pool.

Seuss, raced to a quick 3-0 lead, but UNCW rallied, fought back and eventually let 7-6 at the half. After three hours, several key injuries, and approaching darkness the Crunch finally succumbed, 15-14.

Relegated to third place by the two consecutive losses, UNCW looked to move up Sunday when they opened play against the hometown Charlotte excuses. Once more the Hawks kept the game closing, playing well despite being short-handed, before eventually falling 16-14.

UNCW then was forced to sit, having not qualified for Sunday Afternoon's semi-finals.

Three of five teams the Crunch played, all of which were losses, wound up in the semi-finals including eventual champion Chain Lightning.

UNCW, who finished in 5th place, next awaits a two-day tournament to be played at Brooks field, Oct. 1, and 2.

Lee Plays God With Fledgling

By Celeste Bulley, Editor in Chief

As a result of Wednesday night's Senate Budget and Planning Committee meeting, for the second consecutive year, the student body of UNCW may not have a yearbook. Strangely enough, the complication is the result of Senator Tim Lee's decision to walk out of the meeting, despite violent protest.

The review and approval of the Fledgling budget was postponed last spring, and had been delayed again once this year, as a result of the resignation of the appointed Budget committee chairman, Lee King, and reappointment of Lee Barnhill to the position. The committee meeting Wednesday was to approve Fledgling editor Ed Shiffler's budget and send it for final ratification by the full senate Monday. Shiffler has been unable to negotiate a contract for the yearbook because his budget has not been approved.

At the meeting, five of the nine members of the Budget and Planning committee were present: four senators and one student member. The committee requires at least five member's presence at the meetings in order to reach a quorum vote, and present their decisions to the SGA on the following Monday night. Without five members the committee is unable to vote and are therefore prevented from approving any budgets, seed accounts or any other monetary matters.

The committee was completely split on whether to give the Fledgling his total budget or a portion of it to maintain the yearbook. Monika Mohr and Entrane Harvey fought in the affirmative for the yearbook and two non-traditional students, Tim Lee and Susan Wolfson fought in the negative. The deciding vote would have been left to Lee Barnhill, had the committee been able to vote.

In a hour-long heated debating session over the UNCW Fledgling's budget there were three rounds of affirmative and negative debate, with Senators Tim Lee and Susan Wolfson leading the negative debate. Senator Wolfson felt the Fledgling's performance last year made it unreliable and was unwilling to risk SGA money on something which might not be finished. Last year the Fledgling was cancelled, despite contractual obligations, because of questionable material which had been sent to the printer before the appointed editors resigned mid-year.

The Fledgling budget was discussed briefly in Monday's SGA meeting, but was not acted upon pending approval by the Budget committee. Approval was denied in the Wednesday meeting of the Budget committee due to one senator. If students wish to support the UNCW yearbook, they can come to the Monday, Oct. 10 meeting.

Senator Lee felt the Fledgling, Ed Shiffler, was unprepared for the meeting because he could not cite more than two names of his staff, which had only met three times for formative meetings.

Wolfson wished to cut the budget from the original $16,800 to $4,700, while Lee never conceded to giving the Fledgling money at all. After the debate, it became apparent that Barnhill would vote in the affirmative and as voting was ensuing, Lee walked out of the meeting, denying the committee the quorum it needed.

"(Tim Lee's) behavior at that point was the definition of dereliction of duty," said Vice President of the Senate Robert Smith. "All I wanted was a yes or no answer," said Barnhill, who violently protested Lee's action. "It was childish of him not to take a stand."

"I apologize for my reaction; I was irate because of the immature and assinine judgement of one who cannot make a choice, one who chose instead to jeopardize the future of the student body's yearbook."

Senator Kristine Solomon, Jr. Class Vice President attended the meeting in order to be well informed for the Senate meeting on Monday. "I find it interesting that two non-traditional student senators seem to feel that the majority of traditional students don't want a yearbook," she said.

The only chance of UNCW having a yearbook as if students show up in number at the SGA meeting Monday night at 6:00 p.m. in Room 100 of the UU. At that time the SGA will vote on whether or not to approve the Fledgling's budget despite the Budget committee's forced lack of decision.

Cameron Hall Officially Dedicated

By UNCW News

WILMINGTON -- The new 60,000-square-foot building housing the Cameron School of Business Administration at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington was dedicated in ceremonies that began at 2 p.m., Wednesday, Oct. 5 in room 105 of Cameron Hall.

On hand for the occasion were Mr. and Mrs. Daniel D. Cameron and Mr. and Mrs. Bruce B. Cameron. The UNCW Board of Trustees named the $6 million building in honor of the Cameron brothers on the recommendation of Chancellor William H. Wagoner in "recognition of the extensive and continuing contributions of Dan and Bruce Cameron to the university."

Included in the dedication program was a slide presentation about the Cameron School of Business Administration by Dean Norman R. Kaytor. Between 3 and 4 p.m., the building was open for tours and refreshments were served.

The Cameron School of Business Administration is organized into four academic departments --Accountancy and Business Law; Economics and Finance; Management and Marketing; and Production and Decision Sciences

--as well as the Center for Business and Economics Services. A regional office of the Small Business and Technology Development Center is affiliated with the school.

The School of Business enrolls more than 1,500 undergraduates and 120 graduate students, more than one-fifth of the total university enrollment. Six undergraduate degree programs are offered along with the Master of Business Administration degree.

The building was first opened to students at the beginning of fall semester 1988.

Cameron Hall houses the Cameron School of Business Administration at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. The 60,000-square-foot building cost $6 million and was occupied in late summer 1988 in time for fall semester classes.

Cameron Hall was designed by Bill Faris of Jefferies and Faris Architects of Wilmington, in the modified Georgian style of architecture. General contractor was Clancy & Theys; electrical, Cape Fear Electric; plumbing, Electric; and heating and air conditioning, Sneed, Inc.

Resources for Rape Victims Exist

By Scott Wheeler
News Editor

One of the major concerns that crosses the minds of several of the faculty members each year is sexual assault. The three main offices that have to deal with this harsh reality are the Student Development Center, the Dean of Students office, and the UNCW Police Department.

The sexual assault and rape of women is most prevalent among women between the ages of 18 and 24. These are precisely the ages of most of the women on any college campus. "One out of every three women in America will have been sexually assaulted at some point during their lifetimes," said Jacquie Skinner, Assistant Dean of Students.

Rape has a variety of definitions according to whomever is the one giving the definition. The one common denominator in all of the definitions is that rape is sexual intercourse without consent, mainly by force or coercion (deceptive persuasion). There are several different kinds of rape. Attempted rape is an assault on a woman in which sexual intercourse is intended but does not occur. Statutory rape is sexual intercourse with a girl under the age of consent (13 years of age). Date/acquaintance rape is rape by a person the victim knows or is acquainted with. Gang rape is rape by multiple offenders.

Acquaintance rape is the most underreported of these offenses, and potentially the most psychologically damaging type of sexual offense because it causes the victim to question her judgement of the character of other people if she is raped by someone that she trusts.

Every woman should realize that she has the right to say NO at any time, even after giving her initial consent.

Many times the victim of a sexual attack will not report the incident for one reason or another. Some of these include shame, guilt, fear of reprisal from the attacker, and fear of rejection from peers. There is a place, however, that the victim of one of these attacks can go to talk about this traumatic experience; that place is the Student Development Center. My concern and the orientation of the Student Development Center is focused on the counseling of the individual, because rape is a devastating psychological experience. It takes a considerable amount of time for a person who has been raped to resolve the fallout from such a traumatic experience. We are here to provide a solid base of support for the victim, commented Dr. Diane McKinstry, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs/Student Development Center.

The SDC will help the student in the time of crisis and provide follow-up support after the immediate situation has been resolved. The SDC is there for students who have been raped in the past and still need someone to talk to in order to help them deal with the experience of being raped, also. Another function of the SDC is to keep statistics on the frequency and location of the individual assaults in order to help the UNCW Police Department to combat this pressing problem (names withheld to protect the victim's privacy). This is not to say that UNCW is the rape capital of the world, but it does happen here on campus. "I am aware of nine cases of rape that occurred to students here last year, seven of which were acquaintance rapes," added McKinstry. Only one of these rapes actually occurred on campus. "It's not unusual for the victim to be vigilant, afraid, easily startled, lose sleep, and have various other reactions that interfere with their daily lives," said McKinstry.

The largest classroom building on campus, the two-story structure, is designed in a roughly "H" shape.

The building contains 16 lecture and seminar rooms, office space for 70 faculty and administrators, a lecture hall that seats 308, and two computer labs with 24 stations each. Two-thirds of the classrooms are equipped with semi-circular fixed seating with approximately one-half of those being tiered. Tiering fosters maximum student-teacher eye contact as well as maximum audio abilities of the rooms themselves.

A special feature of the large lecture hall is the result of a large lobby which permits the lecture hall to be isolated from the general classroom traffic flow. It is also conveniently located to the parking lot to accommodate evening or public functions.

A feature of considerable pride to Dr. Denis Carter, associate dean of the Cameron School of Business Administration who was closely involved in day-to-day construction of the facility, is that Cameron Hall houses the university's first attempt at installing a Local Area Network (LAN) system throughout the building.

"The entire building is networked," Carter explained. "We have the latest computer capability in this building with every office and most classrooms connected."

The computer networking allows communication throughout the building, from office to office, and from office to classroom. Carter explained that it should result in a significant reduction in paperwork, among other benefits.

"It will allow student assignments to be electronically filed, transmitted and graded. And it also allows faculty to design models and other materials which will later be projected in their classrooms," Carter said. "Faculty members can set up a diagram in their office, store it on the network, then call it up and project it on a screen in the classroom. This will be particularly beneficial for such things as accounting problems, which require quite a bit of time to put on a chalk board.

"With this system, the professor can put the problem on the computer, then project the problem right in front of the classroom. Number changes can be made with instantaneous results to show students exactly what it means when you talk about equity ratio and profit lines," Carter said.

Another interesting physical design feature of the building is an 1,100-square-foot executive management facility on the first floor. This "mini-conference" style center will allow the Cameron School of Business to hold special management workshops with area business people. It is equipped with specialized audio visual and computer hook-ups and will also accommodate catered food functions. It is designed in such a way that programming can take place in privacy during a regular class day.

Throughout the process of designing and building the facility, Carter said that the students' best interests were foremost. "The atmosphere is built around the student. When we started drawing lines, we asked how could we make the space best designed and so desirable that a student really wants to come here to learn."

Symphony Starts Season

The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra opens its six-concert season with the North Carolina premiere of Songs and Cantillations by C. Curtis-Smith on Tuesday, October 11, at 8:00 p.m. The work is a dream-like evocation of elements of the Jewish religious service. The traditional songs and cantillations are presented in a fascinating, modern treatment.

Rob Nathanson, guitarist, will be the featured soloist. Nathanson, a faculty member at UNC-Wilmington, has studied with Christopher Parkening and Michael Lorimer. He has toured the U.S. extensively, and has recently performed in Vienna, Salzburg and Modling, Austria.

C. Curtis-Smith, the composer, is a professor of music at Western Michigan University. His compositions have been performed at the "Great Performers Series" at Lincoln Center (Great American Symphony, Dennis Russell, conductor) and has received more than 60 grants, awards and commissions, including a Guggenheim Fellowship.

In addition to Curtis-Smith's Songs and Cantillations, the symphony will perform J. S. Bach's Suite #4 and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony.

The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra is conducted by Dr. Steven Errante, professor of music at UNC-Wilmington. The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra consists of professional musicians, music faculty and talented amateurs.

Tickets are $5.00 with a special $3.00 rate for students and senior citizens. For season subscriptions, tickets, or more information, call the Center

Box Office at (919) 763-3398 or (919) 763-9328.

Another resource that the victim can use to seek help with this serious offense is the Dean of Students office. "Last year, we did have a situation where the victim identified the assailant. He readily admitted guilt. The victim chose an administrative hearing, since he had already admitted his guilt, he was suspended from campus," said Pat Leonard, Dean of Students. She also added, "If it occurs to you and you are not willing to tell anyone, even your closest friend, then it will happen again. We know this through research."

One of the major functions of the Dean of Students office in this particular field is the education of the students in how to prevent rape before it occurs and where to turn if it does occur. The woman who tackles that task is Jacquie Skinner, with plenty of help from Lt. Regina Lawson of the campus police force. Together they map out strategies for the distribution of posters that explain exactly what sexual assault and rape are; distribute information through the campus mail system to all of the students, including the male populace; and hold informative programs that will help a victim by giving them strategies to prevent an attack or a resource that they can turn to in case of an attack. There are posters that, also give this information, adhered in every women's bathroom in all of the classroom, administrative, residence hall buildings as well as the University Union and the SDC.

The week of November 14-18 is National Rape Awareness Week. Some of the activities that are scheduled for this week are daily workshops, self-defense courses, and an information table. On the Wednesday night of that week there will be a major evening program with several speakers discussing the various aspects of rape and sexual assault.

One program that is currently under way is a course in self-defense and rape prevention instructed by Parker Howey of the UNCWP. The course is offered on Tuesdays and Fridays, from 3:00 to 5:00 p.m. The class is a four hour class that is offered for one week. There is still time to sign up for these classes at NO COST. All interested women can sign up at The Information Center and the Residents Life Activities center.

Another department that the victim of a sexual attack can go to for help is the UNCWP. The police department can help the victim in her decision whether or not to prosecute. The department also encourages the victim to go get a medical examination before she does anything (brushing hair, taking a shower, and changing clothes). The four major concerns of the police department are making sure the victim is immediately out of danger; get the victim medical attention (for possible injury, pregnancy, and STD's); check to see if the victim needs any psychological; also they inform the victim of all of the options open to her as far as prosecution is concerned.

The Seahawk is supporting the rape education programs not only, by printing this article, but also by running the weekly myths and facts on rape.

Colleges Attract More Nontrads

(CPS) -- Non-Traditional Students--those at least 25-years-old who often have families and jobs--will make up half of the nation's college population by the year 2000, a new report by the College Board says.

Those students, the board says, will need fewer services than students aged 18-to-25, but will bring as much revenue to colleges as younger students do.

The survey, conducted by the College Board's Office of Adult Learning Services (OALS), also found that more than six million adults study for college credit each year.

"We found that adults are serious students, and that they enroll in the mainstream of higher education," said OALS Director Carol B. Aslanian.

College demographers have predicted for years that the shrinking numbers of new high school graduates would cause college enrollments to drop dramatically. The predicted enrollment plunge, however, has been offset by greater numbers of minorities, women and adults enrolling in colleges.

But as colleges become more dependent on older students, they've become more concerned about keeping them happy.

"Colleges know the population of new high school graduates will shrink 12 percent over the next five years and stay down for another 10 years," Aslanian said. "To maintain enrollments, many colleges must attract adults with jobs and babies, or with grandchildren and time to study. They need to know the demographics, behaviors and preferences of adult college students."

Although many college administrators believe non-traditional students only enroll in a few courses -- and only produce a fraction of the revenue produced by younger student-- it takes only two and a half adult students to equal the revenue produced by a traditional student.

In addition, the survey found older students require fewer services, such as organized social events and transportation.

No Aid for Dealers

(CPS) -- Student drug dealers or users shouldn't be able to get federal financial aid for 10 years after they're convicted, the U.S. House of Representatives said last week.

In a 335-67 vote, the House approved H.R. 5210. If the U.S. Senate also approves the bill, the purging of drug dealers and users from student aid roles will become law.

Labeled as "bad policy" by Charles Saunders of the American Council on Education, the bill would deny student aid and other federal benefits for up to 10 years for drug dealers sentenced to prison terms of a year or longer.

The bill denies student aid and other federal benefits for up to five years from anyone convicted of two drug offenses in 10 years. Students who complete a drug rehabilitation program could regain their eligibility, however.

"This amendment encourages people to get drug treatment," said co-sponsor Rep. William Hughes (D-N.H.). "How much is a young man or woman going to accomplish in (college) if they're on serious drugs?"

"Why should American taxpayers support students who in turn support a drug habit or traffic in drugs?" asked Missouri lawmaker Thomas Coleman (R), another supporter of the bill.

"Do the proponents of (H.R. 5210) mean to imply that we find even a relatively minor drug-related offense more heinous than murder, rape and other violent felonies?" replied Rep. Augustus Hawkins (D-Cal.), noting other kinds of criminals can qualify for student aid after serving their debt to society.

Not many students, however, actually would lose anything if the bill becomes law. Since only a few students are convicted of drug offenses each year, the idea "doesn't affect a whole lot of students," Saunders added.

National Sororities Visit Gamma Delta Chi

By Sara Shilling
Staff Writer

This weekend, two national sororities, Alpha Phi and Phi Mu will be visiting UNCW. These organizations will be giving presentations about their organizations to Gamma Delta Chi, a local sorority on campus.

In May the sisters of Gamma Delta Chi wrote letters to ten national sororities and have now narrowed their choice to three organizations. Following a visit in November by Sigma Kappa sorority, the sisters will decide which organization will best suit the needs of Gamma Delta Chi and UNCW.

Gamma Delta Chi began in January and since then has grown substantially from the original four founders. They now have nineteen pledges and a total membership of forty-one. The Gamma Dels have participated in a variety of activities such as the University Union birthday party, Greek week, and they were coaches for the Special Olympics held here last spring. In addition, the sorority received the award for the highest grade point average last fall during Greek week.

Last weekend the girls camped out at Singletary Lake to get geared up for this weekend. "We're really excited about these presentations. We've been looking forward to this since January," said Kirki Moore, president of Gamma Delta Chi.

Kalia Brings a New Perspective on History

Special to the Seahawk
By Marc Kelley

Professor Kalia's addition to the UNCW Department of History is another coup! I knew I should've been a history major.

Dr. Kalia is from Simla, a hill station and Summer Capitol of the Raja. Simla is in a beautiful misty-mountain area north of Delhi and in the Himalayan Mountain Range--gateway to the gods. From the most rugged mountains on this planet come men of lofty ideals.

"In my youth I used painting and writing as vehicles of my expression."

His father was a civil servant to the Indian government, and as a result he moved around quite a bit, especially in the State of Punjab. (Punjab has been in the world news lately on account of the Sikhs, the dominant population, and their conflict with the Hindustani minority.) Eventually his family settled in Delhi.

"In my youth I used painting and writing as vehicles of my expression," says Kalia. "I saw that as a natural outlet of expression for the son of a conservative civil service family."

In high school, wrote a column for The Statesman, the local newspaper. Upon graduation, he sees that experience as invaluable. Kalia feels this helped make him more resourceful. Other notable points of his high school era were his being elected to the student union, being on the debate team, and receiving an award for his writings from John Kenneth Galbraith then the U.S. Ambassador to India.

Kalia feels he really did not have any focus in high school. "When in high school one is to choose a career track from among science or business." He chose science and business, with science being the strong suit. He thrived on ending high school and matriculating at a college life was dampened a bit by a nice case of "buckepox," says Kalia.

He entered the University of Delhi at age 16 and graduated at 19, earning his degree in history with Honors. Kalia feels history was a logical choice for him. "I was following in my father's footsteps." At the time he did not realize that choosing history for his degree would be more than he'd hoped for. "The training in history opened up many new possibilities," comments Kalia.

Kalia was a young college student in the late 1960s. Conspicuous via the ever present home TV set, the progress of the Vietnam conflict/war was carefully followed by the Kalia family. Kalia was witness to a terrible waste of lives and could not understand why it was happening. The TV news at the time was a blend of space exploration and the war, and he saw the World Community as an involuntary party to our war via high-tech media.

Equally baffling was the 1968 Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia. Dr. Kalia saw a world in conflict with itself. The continuing saga of mindless destruction shadowed him throughout his collegiate years.

He received his M.A. in history at the beginning of a new decade--1970. The Vietnam juggernaut had just been caught pacifying (bombing) Cambodia. (Fortunately no historians were studying ruins at this time.) He noticed that all the major universities the world over (Berkeley, Oxford, the Sorbonne, etc.) were in turmoil. And the Army National Guard killing of Kent State student Allison Krause horrified him.

Kalia sees students of the time as being the first people to be "close to the world, as the world had shrunk to fit inside of TV sets and radios." This erudite perception had a tremendous impact on shaping his views, ambitions and hopes.

Kalia was witness to a terrible waste of lives and could not understand why it was happening...

Paradoxically, this plethora of information brought to him through this "shrunk world" occurred so suddenly it could not be processed. He knew he wanted to make a difference in the world. His values transcended his immediate environs.

Upon completion of his masters he wanted to pursue his doctorate, but his family was hoping he would choose the civil service like his father. Temporarily setting aside his Ph.D. aspirations he started working as a journalist and also in advertising. He wrote for the "Voice of America" and took care of family business for the next 4-5 years.

In 1974, he went overseas to Public Information Coordinator for the City of Long Beach.

Even though he earned a high California where he was an administrator with Cal State at Long Beach. He was also the school teaching certificate in the United States, he never did teach. Eventually he went to UCLA and just as he started, politics played a mind game-- USSR invaded Afghanistan. "This was another violation of human dignity, almost akin to Vietnam, but with different aggressors," Kalia says, "it was deja vu; I was right back in my undergraduate days."

When he was with the city of Long Beach he thought our human progress was to humanize our cities and our living conditions, these being necessary outgrowths of urbanization. It was then that he chose urban economic history as his doctoral choice.

At this time he also wrote articles to various California newspapers regarding the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and those words are now a reality. "My observation was that had the Soviets taken heed of history they would have learned by reading what the British learned the hard way-- that the Afghans are fiercely independent, and that after three attempts to conquer them they gave up. Now, ten years later the Soviets are strategically withdrawing, at a waste of life (on both sides) and resources," says Kalia.

"My observation was that had the Soviets taken heed of history, they would have learned by reading what the British learned the hard way..."

His doctoral research was on the planned city of Chandigarh, which is just south of Simla, capital of Punjab. It was the first planned city built in post-Independence India. It was started under the auspices of American Albert Mayer and his Polish architect/assistant Matthew Nowicki.

While at UCLA he earned his MBA from the Graduate School of Management and his doctorate in urban economic history. He views the thesis as a search for himself; exploring his own ideals. It was published in 1987 by the Southern Illinois University Press under the title "Chandigarh: In Search of An Identity." The Oxford University Press will handle worldwide distribution and is publishing it under the title "Chandigarh: The Making of An Indian City." This work earned Dr. Kalia awards from the Architectural Historians and letters of congratulations from Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

He is currently writing his next book on the Temple City of Bhubaneswar, on the eastern coast of India bordering the Bay of Bengal. His focus is an interdisciplinary nexus. He will examine historical and economic forces, spatial arrangement, and social planning.

Kalia has received a Fulbright Scholarship to work on another project--the planned city of Gandhinagar (literally 'Gandhi City'), another post-Independence city on the West coast.

The following series of events brought Dr. Kalia to us start in 1984 when he finished his doctorate. From Long Beach CA, Kalia moved on to a university in Oregon. The limited resources of his library along with an abrupt change in climate prompted his return to Occidental College, a private liberal arts school near Los Angeles. Subsequently, he joined UCLA, where he has been for the past two years.

While there he also worked for the Social-Economic Planning Unit for the City of Los Angeles. "I would like for my students to remember that those interested in applied history need and should test their ideas in actual situations," says Kalia. "I derived great benefit from working with L.A."

"I derived great benefit from working in Los Angeles..."

With all the bugs in California one will get it sooner or later, and, sure enough, the doc was bitten by the Wanderlust bug. After feeling a real urge to move, he attended the American Historian's Association meeting in Washington, D.C. in 1987, and he met two roving UNCW ambassadors--Professors Bob Toplin and Larry Ustion. He was impressed with their warm personalities and especially Professor Toplin's interest films, as Dr. Kalia had also worked with media and film while at Cal State at Long Beach.

These personal bonds, as well as his respect for the 16 campus UNC system, led to his coming to UNCW in February 1988 for faculty interviews and to visit the area. He was impressed by the strong credentials of the entire history faculty and their warmth during his four day visit; so much so that a month later he decided it was relocation time!

"I find it extremely interesting that in CA the major city was Long Beach with the smaller port of Wilmington nearby, and here the major city is the port of Wilmington with the smaller Long Beach nearby," says Kalia. "This was very portentous."

Upon his arrival the history faculty vindicated his first impressions in the manner in which they helped him settle in. "Close colleagues are a pleasant condition here."

Dr. Kalia was hired to teach Asian history. This places him in a position where he has to perform with limited resources, both on campus and in the community. "I view it as a challenge, and that is what attracted me to this position."

Our American focus has recently been on Asia; Seoul to be precise. "An area of the world with just two countries (China & India) comprising one-half the world's population deserves our attention, yet little attempt has been made to shift our focus there," says Kalia.

The Asian world does not stop at the Pacific rim, as American interests do. It is Dr. Kalia's aspiration to bring together diverse interests of various disciplines by assembling other faculty members who touch on Asia, and develop a comprehensive program in Asian studies. His initial impressions led him to believe that UNCW does have the wherewithal and talents to achieve this goal. "If this campus or even a portion of the UNC system develops a comprehensive Asian program we will be the first to have done so," says Kalia.

For the personal touch: he is single, enjoys cooking, travel, tennis, ping-pong, and reading spy novels and human psychology books. And he definitely enjoys the beach.

He is very fond of ethnic foods, and not wanting to offend anyone, has not been too successful in locating properly pleasing foods for the palate in Wilmington. Chinese is his favorite, followed by Greek and Italian.

(Maybe once our Asian Center is on-line, Wilmington will be a mecca of international cuisine. Mmmm, merci la bouillabaisse please. Merci.)

Dr. Kalia has been all over the world save for Africa (those $$$@ tsetse flies!) And, like wine, he enjoys foreign and domestic films (and you thought I was going to write women, tsk tsk).

Dr. Kalia has been all over the world, save Africa...

In summation, he gives us an idea of his perfect evening--"going out to dinner with friends to a nice restaurant, and returning home to open a nice bottle of Cabernet Sauvignon, upon sipping same we all discuss everything under the sun late into the night."

A serious postscript: "the Asian program is important because our students, many of whom have not had much exposure to other western nations need the Asian experience now due to our ever-shrinking World." Thank you Dr. Kalia, and welcome to UNCW.

Writers note: Having been at UNCW in the late 70s to finish my first undergrad degree I am glad to see us hiring people with vision and extra drive. Student exchange programs between the UNC system and China, India, et al would benefit not only the students and those they influence but the world community in general via understanding. Humans fear that which they do not comprehend, whether it be math, UFOs or foreign nations. Let's bridge the gap.

Is UNCW Liable For Pupils' Actions Off Campus?

David Hare, Junior & Chris Fleming, Junior

"Living in Twinwood and being a brother of the Chi Phi fraternity, I don't think that you can hold the school responsible for the actions of its students while they are off campus. I think that the authorities should try to find the individuals who are responsible for throwing the larger parties and take action against them; but, I don't think that UNCW should be held liable for the actions of its students after they leave the campus for the day."

Elaine Azzarello, Sophomore

"I think that there should be a fraternity row. If we had a designated place to have a party then they wouldn't have to worry about us. I don't think that the authorities can hold UNCW responsible for the actions of its students while they are off campus."

Samuel Richard Avery III, Senior

"I work at Blake's Rent to Own and that would be like saying that Blake's Rent to Own should be held liable for my actions off the job. Just because I attend classes here at UNCW, doesn't mean that I am only a part of UNCW; I am my own person as well."

Dr. John Myers, Art Dept.

"The students who live off campus are functioning as residents of Wilmington. They should be held responsible for their own actions. What the students do on campus comes under the regulations here. Whatever they do off campus comes under the jurisdiction of the local authorities; if they want to prosecute the students, that's fine; but they shouldn't hold the University Administration liable for the students' actions off campus."

Todd Shaver, UPB Director

"It is a necessary group that had to come into existence because the campus is growing so fast. The University and the community need to be more responsive to each other's issues. This committee is the best way for this to be accomplished."

Commentary

Is Feminists' Label Unfair?

By Celeste E. Bulley
 Editor-in-Chief

I think the value of college lies predominantly in the things it makes you aware of and, consequently, the opinions you form. For example, a discussion in my English class the other day touched on a subject which never fails to enrage me — feminism.

I was sitting between two feminists (at least they harbored enough resentment of the treatment of women throughout history to be called feminists). Our classroom discussion was edging near the reasons for certain female characters in the play we were reading being portrayed in the manner they were.

Each comment from the instructor on these 18th century women's character incited the women on either side of me to mumble something sarcastic about that characterization, how unfair and stereotypical it was.

So the instructor began egging them on. And it was true, women in that play were shown as being frivolous, self-seeking, scheming things ... but the truth hurts, doesn't it?

Now you'll hear the other side of the feminism, the side which 20 years of feminists deny us the right to voice.

Yes, I'll say it straight out, I am anti-feminist. It's not that I don't believe in equal rights, I do; however, feminists seem to have provided all progressive women with a term for handy labeling. The Feminist cause suggests a group of women who feel invincible in a robotic way. I have a hard time respecting anyone who continually gripes about how ill-treated they are without realizing that not only are they not the first people in the world to be maltreated, but that in fact, women were treated well in respect to the development of technology and the world until that point in history.

Only ignorant people generalize to the point of saying everyone of a particular race, creed, color or sex is a certain way. I doubt that the sincerely intelligent men of preceding generations honestly felt that women were so much shallower or less intelligent than the men of the time. In the same play I've mentioned, there was a male character who was portrayed as a subject-to-peer-pressure wimp, and a super-macho character. It really tests your ability to discern what the truth is.

At any rate, one has to account for what current technology said at the time. True, men in the 18th century could have thought that women were of substantially less intelligence than men, please remember that it was only in the 1960's that the government forced many southern states to recognize the black man's equal intelligence and capacity through just legislation for integration. And in a recent study of high school biology students, many professed a scientific belief that there are races of subnormal (to WASP standards) intelligence.

It was also important for those women in my English class to realize that the play was not characterizing the entire woman; it was only highlighting the humorous or less than perfect parts of the female nature.

Remember that unfair stereotypes abound for men also, and that stereotypes hurt all people. The stereotype that guys want sex above all else has led many women to doubt perfectly faithful lovers and to disbelieve in their own worth. The belief that women make better parents has left many wonderful fathers without rights to see their children, and worse, left children in the hands of unfit mothers. The idea that men are unemotional has taught countless generations of men to suppress their tears and submerge real emotions. Women propagate these myths as do the men.

It takes time for anything to change. Any group who has been maltreated can expect it to take several generations to soothe the stringencies of the original group of aggressors. But have American women overcompensated by generalizing that all women want this particular thing, and if they don't they aren't intelligent? I deeply resent that a generation of women decided for me before I even arrived in this world that by not striving for their brand of self-fulfillment, I would be labeled unassertive, unmotivated, or an underachiever.

In today's scrambled-up world, where the people who can provide a comfortable life, some love and happiness are the ones who are not having children, and the ones who will break the hearts of the world with television images of their starving children are having an abundance, I care enough about the future of America, and the future of our planet no less, to feel an obligation to share my life with someone else and have healthy, well-provided for children. There is a certain joy in knowing my life can give life and make a difference.

I saw a report on 20/20 last year, where several women in their late 30's and early 40's were interviewed. They recognized the fact that they had made a mistake in their youth by assuming they would always want the same type of life—in their cases, a life in which a career replaced marriage and children.

These women wept on TV because they had followed the feminist line of propaganda and had achieved all they had wanted, only to realize that today men have a choice, and that they would probably never marry, much less have children because their biological time clock had run down. And it's true that among the greatest differences between the sexes lies the fact that men can have children until they die. They don't have to choose between a career and marriage; essentially women must.

And believe it or not, there are those of us who feel that the basic physical differences between men and women, the differences which propagated all stereotypes for so long, are the very differences which give me the capacity to be a natural mother. I know that the thinner most people spread themselves, the less they have to give to each part of their life. Therefore, I feel in order to give the best of me I have to give it to one purpose. I have decided that I want to be a mother first.

I am not the only one I know who feels that being a good wife, mother and homemaker are important to retaining the solid structure of society. It angers me that someone who protests a stereotype would dare to label someone who doesn't agree with them, without remembering that they did not agree with the stereotypes for so long.

And why would women accept that quite possibly it was better to be taking care of the children and the house than to be out in the woods chasing dinner around?

Tim Lee Selfishly Jeopardizes Fledgling

In an incredible display of selfishness last night SGA Senator Tim Lee, walked out of a critical budget committee meeting for no apparent reason. Had he been there, the committee would have voted on whether or not to approve the Fledgling budget. In short he left because the budget might have been approved and you the student would face actually having a yearbook this year.

He is supposed to represent student interest, he is, after all, a senator elected to his position. He is, furthermore, a non-traditional student and it seems odd that his non-traditional role has left the traditional Fledgling hanging.

As far as his duty to the committee goes, he was obligated to approving some form of budget for the Fledgling as the committee had postponed the Fledgling budget from the spring to the fall and had postponed hearing it last week with the condition that the budget would be decided upon this week.

His ego seems to have gotten the best of him as the realization that the Fledgling might actually get some money sank in.

A recommendation was made and approved to pay all of the Fledgling's current debts. The motion passed with only one vote in the negative, that vote was cast by Tim Lee. Facing another vote that would have recommended giving the Fledgling money for this year, Lee left.

His refusal to stay at the meeting is clearly a dereliction of duty. Hopefully the SGA will not continue to tolerate such selfishness on the committee. His apparent disregard for the students was furthered by his final comment as he left, "Make sure it goes in tomorrow's paper."

The simple reply was, "It will, editorially!"

Student Forum

Recycling News:
 Trash for the discriminating collector. The city of Wilmington saved over $46,000 over the past 14 months. Not bad for a bureaucracy. They should have started six years when a certain student advised them to.

The city sanitation people will pick up "newspapers" at a citizens' home if there is sufficient volume.

Next on the list (beginning Fall '88) is corrugated box recycling.

For those with an interest in cash for trash: Cape Fear Recyclers, 728 Surry St., 763-7805; Horton Iron & Metal, Hwy. 421 N., 763-8268; and Southern Metal Recycling, at 13 Wright (762-9619) and also at Hwy. 421 N., 762-2644.

Both locations of SMR are open from 8 A.M. to 4:30 Monday - Friday; any glass brought to them must be sorted by color, and no auto glass please; Horton has the same hours; and CFR is open 9 to 5 M-F and 9 to 2 on Saturdays. They do not accept magazines.

Students take note that both the geography and geology clubs are starting recycling programs. Perhaps some wealthy preppy out there would donate some large trash cans with endless liners!

Anyone have any ideas as to where on campus we could park one or two tractor trailer containers; one for aluminum cans and one for newspapers/cardboard?

Downey Holds Real Presidential Debate

I watched the pitiful presidential debate on television and was not impressed. The system seemed so inadequate. It was far too formal. I'd like to see the real candidates. Not two politicians pumped full of answers from their advisors. I think if they used a familiar format, we could learn so much more about the men.

How do you think the debate would be if it was a talk show format? How about if it took place on Morton Downey Jr.'s show? Now we're talking debate! I think that it might go something like this:

Morton: Hi everybody. Tonight we have the makings of a rather boring show, but I'll do my best to liven these two up. On my left stands 1988's version of the "Macho Man" -- Vice President George Bush. On my right is the "Ice Man" himself -- Mike Dukakis. Alright now let's start with the V.P. -- say hello George.

Bush: Hello George, heh heh Morton Governor Dukakis, would you like to say hello to our audience?

Dukakis: I want to talk about the issues.

Morton: Well excuse me. Audience: yeah yeah -- woo woo Give em hell Morton.

Morton: First question George--Why are you such a wimp?

Audience: Woo, woo
Bush: Don't you dare call me a wimp, Morty; I've heard enough of that doo doo from the bleeding heart liberals. I have erased all of that talk since I took John Wayne assertiveness training courses and deep voice lessons.

Morton: Well I for one am impressed George. (whispers to the audience "what a geek.") Ok Mike, why would America want a president who has the charisma of a cantaloupe?

Dukakis: I resent you saying that--I resent it deeply Mr. Downey. Just because I'm not some wacko like you usually have on your show, doesn't mean I'm boring. Excitement exudes from every pore in my body!

Morton: Funny, I thought that was sweet.

Audience: I heard that!
Morton: George, if you're not a wimp, why do all the political cartoons depict you carrying a purse?

Bush: That's an obvious exaggeration! It's just because I used to carry a satchel. A satchel isn't a purse -- Morty.

Morton: Yeah, my wife carries a satchel too heh heh. Ok Duke, why do you hate America?

Dukakis: I resent you saying that very deeply. I don't want to talk about my patriotism, but I will say this. I love America (wipes away tear) I will admit that it has been a hell hole for the past eight years though.

Morton: Yeah, that's what I like to hear. What do you say to that George?

Bush: If I weren't such a gentleman Duke, I'd tear your squatty body, limb for limb. I'll fill I'll incapacitate you by breaking your big Greek nose!

Dukakis: Listen old man, don't get yourself in a tizzy. You know I can take you.

Bush: If you did, I'd just get Danforth to kick your buttocks. Buster. He's young and strong.

Morton: Woo--Take it easy--I run a respectable show here.

Audience: Good one Mort. (and assorted cat calls)

Morton: Ok men--to the real issues. George, I've heard you skate around the issue of the homeless. Aren't you going to say anything about it that makes sense?

Bush: Well, ah, ah, Mort--thousand points of light will take care of the issue.

Dukakis: If you use that term again, I'll take you thousand points of light and shove them where the sun never shines, and I'm not talking about Pittsburgh! I didn't mean Pittsburgh--it's a lovely city. They make steel you know.

Morton: Alright Governor, I've heard your political rhetoric concerning the homeless and low-cost housing, so answer me this: what are you going to do about that smelly bum laying in the streets of DC with a bottle of Mad Dog in his hand?

Audience: Yow Yow
Dukakis: Massachusetts had that problem before I became Governor. I feel very deeply for these people. I will sober him up and give him vocational training and make him a tax paying citizen once again.

Morton: What if he doesn't want help?

Dukakis: Then we'll throw his drunk ass in an asylum. Ahem, I meant drunk buttocks of course.

Morton: Wow--I love it. Ok George, now to some more real issues--why does your wife look like your mother?

Audience: Yeah, Yeah
Bush: Well I've never!
Morton: I don't think so!

Bush: Make my 24 hour time period! You've gone too far when you talk about mommy ear ah Barbara--where was I?

Dukakis: You were trying to act tough--tough guy.

Bush: Oh Yeah, --Morty--I ought to, to, to grab those gross pimply things on your face and rip them out.

Morton: This is my show Dork! you're just talking bad because you know that you have all those body guards around to protect you. I want you Bush. Mano a Mano. I'll kick your pansy ass.

Bush: Anytime, any place, anywhere Bub.

Audience: Hit him, Hit him
Morton: We'll be back after this message.

(A Depends underwear commercial)

Morton: Sorry to ignore you Duke ole boy. I forgot you were here.

Dukakis: I'm here Mort heh heh, let's talk some issues.

Morton: Do you think that if Bensen were in his prime, he could take Quayle?

Dukakis: Of course, except Quayle wouldn't fight. His father would get him out of it.

Bush: Now wait a minute here. Dan can whip anyone's hiney--he is built.

Morton: Sorry guys. It's been fun, but time is up. No hard feelings heh heh. Join us next time when we'll have a battle of all the women who claim to have made love to Bigfoot.

Audience: Yeah Yeah (Big Applause)

Authors to Visit Campus

From Melton Mc Laurin, Chairman, History

WILL D. CAMPBELL, UNCW Foundation Distinguished Professor, has arranged for the visit of several well known writers. These individuals will be on campus throughout the day of Tuesday, October 11. They will be available to attend class from 9:00-12:00 and from 1:00-3:00. If you should wish any of these to attend your class, please contact Will Campbell at 3305.

There will be two formal presentations featuring these writers.

The first will be a seminar on "Writing and Publishing in the South," open to faculty, advanced students and area writers. The seminar will be held from 3:00-4:30 p.m. in the library auditorium. The second will be a program entitled "Southern Voices" featuring readings from their works by the writers as follows.

Tom T. Hall, recording artist and popular entertainer known as "The Storyteller." He has written over 500 songs and is the Author of The Laughing Man of Woodmont Cove (Doubleday), Storyteller's Nashville (Doubleday) and Acts of Life (Short Stories, Univ. of Arkansas Press).

James Whitehead, Novelist and Poet, co-founder of the University of Arkansas Creative Writing Program. Joiner, one of his novels, was listed as one of the best books of 1972 by N.Y. Times. Whitehead received a Guggenheim that year. His Domains, a book of poetry, won the Robert Frost Award. Other books of poetry include Local Man (1979) and Actual Size (85).

Miller Williams, Director of the University of Arkansas Press and Author and translator of 24 books including A Perfect Love, a collection of poems; Patterns of Poetry, an Encyclopedia of Forms. He also discovered and published Tom T. Hall's Acts of Life. Williams has been an Amy Lowell traveling scholar in poetry from Harvard University. He won the N.Y. Arts Fund Award for distinguished contribution in American letters; won the Prix de Rome in Literature from the Will D. Campbell Picture Courtesy of English Dept.

American Academy of Books and Letters.

Thomas Connelly, Chairman of the Dept. of History at the Univ. of S.C. He is the Author of 11 books on the Civil War including: The Marble Man, Autumn of Glory, Army of the Heartland, Will Campbell, and the Soul of the South. Connelly is a two time winner of the Jefferson Davis Award, he received the Fletcher Pratt Award and the Jules Flandry Award.

John Egerton, magazine and newspaper journalist, has freelanced articles to 71 magazines and newspapers including the New York Times Magazine and Washington Post. He is the Author of many books including Southern Foods, Generations, The Americanization of Dixie, and A Mind To Stay Here.

Robert Herring, professor of English at Middle Tennessee State University where he teaches creative writing, is the author of several novels including McCampbell's War (1986) and Hub (1982).

The program will be held at 7:30 p.m. in 105 Campan Hall and is open to the public free of charge.

Choreographer to Visit Kenan

General Electric Foundation Affiliate Artist

Presented by the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear

Sponsored by The General Electric Foundation.

A two time recipient of the National Endowment for the Arts Choreographers Fellowship, Joe Goode has been described by DANCE MAGAZINE as "one of the most promising of the nextwave of dance makers." His daring theatre/dance work is a unique blending of the raw emotional elements of experimental theatre and the structural, formal concerns of post-modern dance. The SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER calls Goode "... actor, dancer, choreographer, impeccable technician, tormented spirit, bard of the banal and Baudelairean. Goode dissolves those traditional barriers between acting and dancing, creating a natural continuum between word and gesture."

As Artistic Director of the Joe Goode Performance Group, Goode has performed his own work in London, New York, Los Angeles, and many cities throughout the U.S. His recent commissioned works include a solo for Margaret Jenkins and a full company work for the San Francisco Moving Company. In demand as a teacher Goode has served as artist-in-residence at the University of Montana, the University of Oregon, and Loretto Heights College in Denver, Colorado.

Goode received his early training in New York from Merce Cunningham and Viola Farber. He was a principle dancer with the Margaret Jenkins Dance Company, the New Dance Group, and the Sophie Maslow Dance Company. His theatre credits include choreography for two original off-Broadway plays and countless musical productions in theatres around the country. He has been seen in experimental theatre productions at St. Clements Theatre and the Theatre of the Open Eye in New York, as well as in Richard Schickel's "Marilyn Project" at the Performing Project.

Selected to join the distinguished roster of Affiliate Artists in 1987, Goode serves on the faculties of The New Performance Gallery and Footwork Studio in San Francisco.

Goode will be performing Wednesday, October 12, 1988 at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. General admission is $4.00, $2.00 for students.

This Won't Be On The Test

By Rick Cairns

Ronnie In Las Vegas

On February 15, 1954, the future United States president opened at the Roman Room of the Hotel Last Frontier for a two week engagement. It was a gamble, for Reagan was no song and dance man, but it paid off in capacity crowds and rave reviews. Wrote one columnist, "Rollicking Reagan proves that singing, and clowning, complete with pratfalls." (We all know that he has a great song and dance act.)

Dog In Prison

Rarely in American history has an animal served a prison term. Incredibly, it happened as recently as 1924, in Pike County, Pa. Pep, a male Labrador Retriever, belonged to neighbors of Governor and Mrs. Gifford Pinchot. A friendly dog, Pep unaccountably went wild one hot summer day and killed Mrs. Pinchot's cat. An enraged Governor Pinchot presided over an immediate hearing and then a trial. Poor Pep had no legal counsel, and the evidence against him was damning. He was sentenced to life in prison. Pep became No. C2559 in the Philadelphia State Penitentiary.

The story has a happy ending: the prisoners all loved Pep and he became a celebrity. The prisoners shared him, and Pep stayed in a different cell every day. Pep died in prison six years later. (As usual, there was no attempt at rehabilitating him.)

Castrato

As recently as the nineteenth century -- the man believed to be the last castrato, Giovanni Battista Velluti, died in 1862 -- what the Britannica calls the "abominable practice" of castrating boys so that their voices would not change, existed. But it did. Mozart, among others, wrote operatic roles for castrati. They were quite common in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

However, it is hard to determine if they were all forced into the act. Castrati were often well paid and idolized, so it seems likely that some consented to the operation.

Seven Years Is Not Long Enough To Be Declared Dead

It is often assumed that anyone who fails to show up, or to be found after seven years is automatically assumed to be dead. This isn't true. It must be shown that a search has been made, or there must be corroborative proof, before any such assumption will hold up in court. Time alone is not enough.

We The Mediocre

By Kelly Holsten

What's this whole "JAH... RAS... IRIE" thing? Is this the NEW movement of all the DOOMSTRUCK of the 80's with little or NO sense of IDENTITY? Well, O.K., it's not the biggest reggae fan in the WORLD... but that's not the problem. The music sort of exists in a semi-catastrophic limbo, causing very low stimulus to the cerebral cortex. I have tried my hardest to like this stuff... but to little avail. Maybe it's because my heart rate doesn't hover in the mid-40's... I don't know. The problem is THE WHOLE MOVEMENT; it's in this whole proliferation of Jamaican impersonators who have probably never been beyond the South Carolina border, let alone Jamaica. Yes, these people may look the part, but what lies inside is usually a combination of MIDDLE-CLASS AMERICA and BOREDOM. If most of these JAH-ITES were actually to set foot IN Jamaica, they would probably be beaten to death with every loose and heavy object at close range. (The American White Capitalist does not rank very high on the Rastafarian totem pole.) What are we going to have to endure next? I can't wait for RAS YOGURT, JAH HAIR SALONS, THE IRIE COMPUTER COMPANY, JAH-RAS PLUMBING INC., and the next big item on the magazine presses--"JAH TODAY."

What about the bands? It's one thing to be exposed to authentic reggae... but what about these FLY-BY NIGHT reggae bands coming out of the woodwork? Who really can believe that "SUNJAH EXPERIENCE" has any real insights on the meaning of pure reggae after finding out they hail from Knoxville, Tennessee?

If any real Jamaican actually witnessed the dramatic metamorphic transition any one of these clones went through, he'd probably give up on the logic of mankind and start looking to livestock for guidance. What does it mean when Johnny Average quits his paper route, parks his Camaro in the garage, puts down his Molly Hatchet tapes, and proceeds to turn into Rastafarian Dreadlock Surprise? HELL, the kind of mutant, twisted energy involved in this "transition" could only come from some unknown force inside the MILKY WAY.

Actually, my biggest FEAR comes from that next horrifying step... what are these gimcracks going to be like at the age of 40? Let us pray that the "UNTHINKABLE" won't EVOLVE; what would happen if all the GRATEFUL DEAD MAGNET and this RASTA bunch suddenly mated with the JIMMY BUFFET PARADE? This mixture might cause God to consider the entire planet Earth as a BIG TAX WRITE-OFF!

Screaming Trees Invisible Lantern (SST) Ellensburg, WA.

After listening to Screaming Trees' last album, Even If And Especially When, I didn't think their next release could top it; well, I was right. "Invisible Lantern" is not as knock-you-down-on-the-floor as "Even If...," but it's still an excellent record. The band has turned even more "psychedelic" than evident on their first two LP's. "Invisible Lantern" has WAH-WAH pedal guitar all over the place. The production and engineering have also become more messy, which is fine except for the fact that the band sacrifices some power, punch and focus. The guitar is more HEAVY in tone but this does not create the feeling of punch exhibited on songs like "Transfiguration" and "Don't Look Down" on "Even If..." The drumming is also removed to background status which is unfortunate considering Mark Pickers' talent. Mark Lanegan's vocals are evolving past his Jim Morrison stage although there's still some comparison. It sounds as if I don't like this album too much... BUT I DO! It improves with listening; I actually think it one of the best release this summer/fall. I just had HIGH EXPECTATIONS.

L7 L7 (EPITAPH RECORDS) Somewhere in the depths of CA.

GREAT BE JESUS, who are these psychotics? L7 consists of four GIRLS who make THE PANDORAS sound like THEY were weaned from OREO cookies and THE BAY CITY ROLLERS! THESE BAR CHORD TERRORS sound like an ugly cross between testosterone B-52's and some METAL/TRASH/BUTTHOLE SURFERED JOAN JETT. I have a feeling they took no prisoners! This album is NON-STOP pump and scream. LET'S BRING 'EM TO WILMINGTON!

Visiting With "The Dead"

By Gina Winstead
Guest Columnist

I recently saw the Grateful Dead at the Capital Centre in Landover, Maryland--five intense days and nights of peace, love and understanding.

My friends and I arrived at the Cap. Centre on a Thursday night somewhat intoxicated and anticipating the events to come. It didn't hit me until we got there: We would be camping out in a dilapidated asphalt and gravel parking lot--certainly not the comforts of home or a campground for that matter. We pitched our tents a respectable distance from the row of port-o-johns, settled in for the evening, and immediately became aware of the Whooshooosh of the nitrous oxide tank that was situated to the left of us.

What looked to be an extremely long evening actually turned out to be quite peaceful. We heard one last Whooshooosh, then an even louder, but hollow, ka-thunk! as the guy sucking nitrous out of a balloon, collapsed--one too many whippers his.

We awakened to the name Whooshooosh, but who cared? It was Friday and The Dead were going to jam for us that night. The overall parking lot atmosphere was nothing short of amazing--anklets adorned with tiny little silver bells made an ear-appealing ching! ching! as folks tripped around in the dyes, and vendors sold or traded crystals, love beads, and a vast rainbow of clothing. Everyone skipped around giving out free hugs with larger than life smiles on beautiful faces. There were no negative feelings or actions among the crowd, because such behavior was not necessary. We all shared and cared in the spirit of the Dead. And life was wonderful.

The afternoon progressed, then it was six-thirty--an hour before showtime! My friends and I boogied on up to the coliseum filled with nervous energy and excitement.

Finally the house lights went out. It was the Dead's turn to boogie. The moment the guys walked on stage an explosion of energy overtook the crowd and gave us even more positive vibrations. Jerry Garcia, much to everyone's surprise, had chosen to wear a flowered shirt as opposed to his usual black tee, which further lifted us.

Note by note they took us on a journey through music until we were all one; it was as if each and every Deadhead were on stage and the Dead were the audience. I cruised along on the journey until I heard Jerry's opening riff into Terrapin Station, during the second set. My journey was then complete, my destination over because I had driven seven hours just to hear it. I felt as though each member of the band reached out and opened the tap to my unreleased emotions which gushed and shook me--I realized I was crying. The guy sitting silently beside of me hugged me tightly--he was crying too. My journey complete, I relaxed my mind and enjoyed the next three shows.

Over the course of the weekend, tent and all contained within, was soaked by an unexpected thunderstorm, and my car gave me costly problems; I remembered Jerry singing so sweetly to me Friday night and realized that no matter how vast or minute the adversity, someone is always there to help. The last sounds I heard before leaving the Cap.

Centre on Tuesday night were ching! ching! ching! Whooshooosh! Ka-thunk! And life is wonderful.

State to Win Recruiting War With "Package Deal"

Following many hours of research and an infinite number of phone calls to college campuses across the nation, I have finally prepared my first annual, long-awaited, much sought after, official, pre-season all-america prep basketball team for the up-coming 1988-89 season.

Though I'd like to be able to confide in you that this monstrous effort was performed sans assistance, thereby affording myself all of the much deserved credit, to do so, would be to slight the one man whose hard work and laborious preparation was instrumental in formulating this top-secret, highly credible, totally legitimate, coaches guide to guaranteed contracts and accessible tie times, and therefore would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to extend a most gracious thank you to arguably one of our nations finest basketball analyst's, and former player of the week at Charlie's 4th St. Gym, the king of the rainbow jumper, Jamieelle "Sweet Shot" Washington.

In addition to the five-player roster "Sweet Shot" and I have allotted ourselves this precious little amount of space for which we hope to informally introduce you to the rudiments of recruiting. ACC style.

Through Sweets, I have learned that, once more, Dean has been flashing baby blue to the baby-faced beach boys of the west in hopes of signing, yet another, franchise caliber player.

In keeping with tradition, those players who are more interested in playing in the ACC than the ACC is in having them play, there is always the afterthought of playing for Clemson.

Look for at least two of Jimmy V's boys to finish the season on the A.I.L. (Academically Ineligible List)

Though it is not the nature of this column to unjustly name names, nor wrongly condemn administrative decisions, I nevertheless must sadly confess that there still remains two schools who persist in signing the academically unclined. Perhaps that's why the two schools wear the shade of devilish red.

Wake Forest still maintain's the advantage of a great faculty to student ratio.

Georgia Tech should be forced to pay the city of Atlanta royalties for every prospective recruit the city lures in. Seriously, why else would anyone spend four years of their life playing in an industrial setting for a prematurely greying little old man?

The University of Virginia, in addition to Duke University, have recently announced that they will continue to post their player's I.Q.'s in place of their weights.

Now, without further interuption, are the six most highly recruited high school cagers in the nation.

Aurelius McCallister. William C. Jackson H.S. Pensicola, Fl. Expensive tastes. Heroes include Donald Trump and John Williams, of Tulane fame. Guarantees championship banners to any coach who can guarantee cash. Hates the color orange but loves the materialistic mentality of the Tiger boosters.

Octavious Holland. Courtland H.S. New York. As a senior he led the city league with a 34 ppg average. Asked about his name he replied "I was the eighth child, born right after Septavious and Hextavious, my two older brothers."

I.M. Caddaddy. Alcina Heights H.S. Lansing, MI. Coaches drool over the immense talent of the 6-1 playmaker. Led nation in points and steals. Currently serving PT (prison time) for the latter.

Erwin D. Kennedy III. Calico Prep, Oxford. Scored perfect 1600 on his SAT. Can't play a lick. Promises prospective school to personally carry the team academically in exchange for a uniform with his name on it. Seems Daddy wants his son to play at a major school. Recently seen wining and dining two ACC coaches during a small party at his Malibu-based 144 ft. yacht.

Jerome Washington. Ben Franklin H.S. Philadelphia. Coaches confirmed that the 6-11, 240 lb center is a tremendous inside force. So did the cheerleaders.

Isiah "Iceman" Coolridge. N.B.A. Prep. Harlem, NY. Averaged 44 points and 17 assists a game. No one is questioning his talent. Probable Prop. 48 candidate. Recently attended party in Malibu. Spent evening with fellow All-America Erwin Kennedy. Toe had heard of Kennedy's goals and hoped to talk him into a possible "package deal." When asked by one recruiter what he did on his SAT's Iceman replied, "Same thing I always do on Saturdays. Me and my homeboy Tyrone went to the gym to play some ball." Leaning towards State, the g.y.m. to play some ball." Leaning towards State,

By George, I Think They've Got It

By Patrick Fowler
Staff Writer

The Seahawks soccer team, led by scoring-threat Chris George, trusted a major step forward by finally hurdling the 500 mark this season. The Hawk's offensive exploded with power as it humbled and routed the hapless (1-7) East Carolina Pirates Saturday 5-0! Charlie Mitchell set the spark off first by converting a Mike Gerris pass into the nylon net pass a diving goalie. The rest of the half the Hawks just squandered several scoring opportunities. "We had several chances early, but got too impatient," Blackmore commented after the game.

However, no time was wasted in the second half as the offensive cash in on four goals. The Mitchell(Charlie) to George connection struck repeatedly for three goals and the hat trick, which turned those "purple" pirates faces' green with envy. Mitchell then administered the final goal of the day for good measure. Standout goalie wasn't hard pressed the entire game and recorded his second career shutout, pushing his total saves mark to 62.

Strong performances were given by fullback Marc Rose(Rosie to us) and midfielder Jimmy McManus. Both exhibited excellent defense tactics and thwarted ECU attacks throughout the game. They kept the bouncing ball away from the Seahawk's goal area. The Hawks' defense has come a long way since it's first game and is still improving.

The ECU Pirates were simply no match for the powerful surging Seahawk team who seemed to score at will in the second half. Perhaps they should take down some notes. George, who earlier this week climbed into a four way tie for fifth place in the conference in scoring with 12 points, extended his torrid pace and should move up with his now 9 points-9 goals. He possesses 24 points(10 goals, 4 assists) careerwise. This sweet victory, the fourth one in the last five attempts for the Hawks up the Seahawk's record to 5-4 overall and 3-3 in the CAA. It was the seventh victory over the Pirates and pushes the series mark to 7-1-1. Be sure to catch the next home game, October 8 at 1:00 against CAA rival William and Mary. The Hawks will try to taste the victory cup once again when it tangles on Coastal Carolina's own turf. Watch out! , the green machine is on a roll!

Houzer Named Pre-Season All-America

UNCW senior center Larry Houzer, bidding to become the most prestigious player in Seahawk history, received a major stepping-stone in that direction when Street & Smith listed the All-CAA performer as a pre-season honorable mention All-America.

"Larry's our go to guy in crunch situations," coach Robert McPherson said. "He adjusted very well last season and should be one of the better front line players again this year."

Last year Houzer earned first team All-CAA honors while averaging 16.1 points and 7.3 rebounds per game. He led the Conference in field goal percentage, hitting at a 57.8 percent clip. He was also named to the league's all-defensive team. The Seahawks will open their season, behind Houzer, on the road at Southern Georgia, November 25.

UNCW's men's golf team finished 12th out of 29 teams in the two day Hargrove B. Davis Invitational golf tournament played this past weekend at the Keith Hills Country Club in Buies Creek.

The Seahawks were led by Chris Spath shot a 74-79 - 153; Richard Kimble, 78-76-154; Ron Pontiff, 80-76-156; Eric Luckner, 79-77-156; and Hugh Harrell, 83-82-165.

The Hawk's Spath finished nine shots behind medalist Mickey Moore of Virginia Commonwealth who carded a two day total of 144.

Guilford College won the team title.

UNCW will host their next and final tournament of the fall season, The Seahawk Invitational, October 21-22 at the Echo Farms Country Club course.

After losing to Liberty University, the Lady Spikers regained their momentum by defeating Baptist Monday night. This explosive match started with the Hawks winning the first two games, 15-6 and 15-9, respectively.

Baptist challenged UNCW by winning the third game, 2-15. Ultimately, UNCW conquered Baptist in the fourth and final game by winning 15-13.

"Lisa Mills and Hannah Helton had the best game," remarked Coach McDaniel. The girls' volleyball record is up to 16-1. Don't miss their upcoming match against Campbell Thursday night!

UNCW's fiery-hot volleyball team finally came to an impasse against their fierce opponents, Liberty University, during the Winthrop Invitational Tournament.

The Seahawks began the tournament against Xavier, who aggravated them during the second game which UNCW lost, 10-15. Eventually, Xavier succumbed to UNCW's immense capabilities, winning 15-6 and 15-7.

The Lady Spikers continued to dominate the next two matches against Winthrop and Western Carolina, who never even scored above seven points. These wins brought the Seahawk's impressive record total to 15-0. Thus far, they were insurmountable!

Then on Saturday, UNCW entered what Coach Cathy McDaniel called "the most exciting match of the

Rowson Tries To Find An NBA Home In Charlotte

Ten thousand dollars and his first realistic opportunity at enjoying NBA success has changed former Seahawk Brian Rowson's mind once more.

Earlier this summer Rowson was reportedly on his way back to Indian, to join the team who originally drafted, and later dismissed, the 6-9 Columbus native. However, when a verbal agreement between his agent, Bill Blakely, and the Pacer management deteriorated, Rowson again expressed a desire to play another season overseas, in France.

Rowson was the Pacer's second-round selection and the 34th player overall taken in the 1987 draft. He began the season on the injured reserve, played infrequently, and was eventually cut to make room for guard Scott Skiles.

Following a successful season in France, where he averaged over 20 points per contest, he was excited about his chances of returning to the U.S. and more specifically, the NBA.

Several teams expressed an interest in the Seahawks all-time leading scorer and rebounder, most recent being the expansion Charlotte Hornets.

Rowson, in an interview with Star News reporter Chuck Carree, said he was turning down the offer from both the Pacers and the Dallas

Mavericks, who offered him a contract worth $100,000 per year. "I'm definitely going to Charlotte," he said. "Charlotte offered a little more money than Dallas."

Rowson will gain a decided advantage, in addition to the money, by choosing the Hornets. His former coach at Indian, Dick Harter, is now the head coach at Charlotte, and although his tenure with the Pacers was somewhat limited he confirmed that he felt comfortable because "I know Dick Harter and his system."

Assuming Rowson makes the squad, he will receive $110,000 a year, $10,000 above the new league minimum, and the same amount more than the Dallas offer.

The Hornets will open their season with the inaugural game at the new Charlotte Coliseum, November 4, against the Cleveland Cavaliers.

Hopefully, with a lot of hard work and a little luck, Brian will, too.

THE STUDENT NEWSPAPER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AT WILMINGTON

AT A GLANCE

Chandler to Give Biology Lecture

Dr. G. Thomas Chandler (B.S. cum laude with Honors in Marine Biology, UNCW Class of 1979) will give a seminar on October 21st, at 2:00 p.m. in FR 151 on the "Competitive Interactions Among Meiofauna Inhabiting Intertidal Mudflats of Northern Germany." Dr. Chandler recently completed this research at the University of Hamburg, West Germany while supported by a Junior Fulbright Fellowship. He is now a postdoctoral research associate at the Belle W. Baruch Institute for Marine Biology and Coastal Research, University of South Carolina.

Republican Voting Changes Discussed

Dr. John Florin of the department of geography at UNC-Chapel Hill will deliver a seminar titled "The Rise of Republican Voting in North Carolina," during the UNCW Department of Earth Sciences Seminar October 21, at noon in FR-251. Bring your lunch.

Murray Discusses Chernobyl Accident

"The Chernobyl Accident" will be the topic of a presentation by Raymond L. Murray, professor emeritus of nuclear engineering at N.C. State University, at 3 p.m., Friday, Oct. 21, in Bryan Auditorium of Morton Hall on the campus of UNC-Wilmington. Sponsored by the UNCW Society of Physics Students, the lecture is free and open to the public.

Learn Self Defense

A reminder—the UNCW Police Department is sponsoring two, two-hour seminars each week on self defense classes for ladies. Classes, offered each Tuesday and Friday 3-5 p.m. in the aerobic room of Hanover Hall, will emphasize basic self defense maneuvers and rape prevention tips. Free. Minimum enrollment of 16 is required. Call Lt. Lawson at 3184 for reservations.

P&R Colloquium Continues

"Ancient Classics Reinterpreted" will be addressed by Andrea Deacon, October 20 at 8 p.m. in King Auditorium. The talk is being held in conjunction with the Interdepartmental Colloquiums sponsored by the department of philosophy & religion entitled "The Mismeasure of Woman."

Conjectures on Renaissance Math Books

Dr. Kenneth J. Knoesel of the English Department at Georgia Institute of Technology will discuss "There's a Dragon on my Wall: Conjectures on Renaissance Math Books" during the October 24 Mathematical October 24 at 4 p.m. in MO-201. Also he will give a public lecture titled "Sir Isaac Newton and the School of Time" the same day at 8 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium. Dr. Knoesel, recently back from Cambridge University where he studied Newton's papers on Chronology of Ancient Kingdoms Amended, will present some of his findings.

Bookstore holds Halloween Sale

A Halloween Day sale will be held from 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. at the bookstore. The giant pumpkin sale will feature savings on UNCW clothes, posters and miscellaneous items. Also, a costume contest will be held from 3-4 with the winner receiving a $25 gift certificate. Everyone is invited to come by the bookstore and pick up their free trick or treat candy on Halloween Day!

Jaycees Having Haunted House

The Wilmington Jaycees will hold a haunted house on October 28, 29, & 30. The location will be 4308 Wrightsville Avenue, Wilmington, NC. The times will be from 7:30 to 11:00 P.M. each night. The admission will be $2.00 for everyone. There will be kiddie games provided for the little ones and the screams! There will be plenty of ghouls and goblins, so please come on out and have fun, but please be careful!

More on the Presidential Debates...

"Presidential Debates: Pitfalls and Potential," a presentation sponsored by the Department of Creative Arts/division of speech communication will be delivered by Dr. Ralph Towne October 26 at 8 p.m. in King Hall Auditorium. Dr. Towne, professor emeritus of speech at Temple University, is the author of a number of articles and books focusing on argumentation and debate and has served as consultant to political candidates.

Jazz Groups to Perform

The UNCW Jazz Combo and the 7 o'clock Jazz Ensemble, directed by Frank J. Bongiorno, assistant professor of music, will conduct its first concert of the 88-89 season at 3 p.m. Sunday, October 23, in Kennan Auditorium. $2.

Condom Machines Coming

By Rick Heymann
Staff Writer

Condoms are well known to effectively prevent both pregnancies and sexually transmitted diseases (STD) and now because of a motion originally made in the North Carolina Student Legislature, UNCW will very likely be one of several North Carolina schools to have condom machines placed in the residence halls.

UNCW Student Government Senator Kim Tracy originated the motion which suggested the placement of the machines around campus during the September 16 meeting of NCSL. "The legislation concerning the condom machines passed 115 to 33," she says.

"At the time, when I thought of the statewide press [the motion] would receive, I was certain the Wilmington area press would tear the issue apart, as did the editorial in the News and Observer," she comments. "But I knew our student senate would act responsibly and maturely."

"That same legislation passed with unanimous acclamation in the UNCW Senate the day before fall break," says Jeff Silverman, a former UNCW senator who helped Tracy present the motion to our senate.

Tracy expresses her surprise at the lack of opposition from the community on the matter. "I had really expected more community presence at that meeting. Fortunately, all the area press was there and the story was truthfully represented to the city."

The only stepping stone left to insure the condom machines' installment rests with the Board of Trustees, which will meet on November 16. "When it goes to the Board of Trustees, they'll make the yes or no decision, and that will decide the installment," says Tracy.

Many Seek Smoking Changes

By Scott Wheeler
News Editor

The current smoking policy of UNCW permits smoking nearly anywhere on the campus. Many students and faculty have dissented with this policy.

With cigarette smoke hanging around in every nook and cranny, it can present a problem for that fraction of the student body that, either does not smoke or is allergic to tobacco smoke.

"I can't stand it when I walk down the halls and the people on either side of me are smoking cigarettes and blowing their smoke right in my face as I pass by," comments Bruce Heath, a sophomore here at UNCW.

"I think that there should be designated places in the cafeteria and the student union for smokers and non-smokers alike."

"I also think that amending the current policy, so that the rights of the non-smokers on this campus are catered to as well as those of the smoker, is desirable."

"It's a good idea to limit the number of places where one can smoke, because smoke bothers me as I'm sure it does quite a few

An unidentified student takes a leisurely smoke in the Union. Many at UNCW would like to see smoking banned inside the buildings.

See Smoking p.2

UNCW students gathered in front of the Union from noon until 2 p.m. for those activities and free drinks. Wednesday's program of bands and other performers on the Union lawn was cancelled because of rain. Today's program was a Drinking and Driving Demonstration in room 100 of the Union.

In addition to these programs, displays and classroom presentations were made during the week.

UNCW is just one of the many schools nationwide who observe Alcohol Awareness Week, which is a nationwide effort sponsored by the Inter-Association Task Force, a group representing all college personnel staffs across the country.

For example, The University of Missouri-Columbia uses a creative marketing approach to sponsor one of the most successful alcohol awareness programs in the country. In 1986 and 1987 the university was selected as one of the top five institutions in the country for developing an innovative alcohol awareness program.

"We take a marketing approach to our alcohol awareness week. We develop events and programs around a fun, upbeat theme," says Kim Dude, assistant director of Residential Life/Programs who has coordinated the school's awareness programs.

Their 1988 program is modeled after the "M.A.S.H." TV show, but in this case stands for "Making Alcohol Sensibly Handled." Events throughout the week have featured familiar "M.A.S.H." scenes, characters and costumes. "Our awareness efforts started six years ago targeted at resident housing, the program quickly grew to encompass the entire campus and the local community," comments Dude.

Alcohol Awareness Week is intended to make alcohol education and information available for students, to try to increase the student's consciousness of the responsibility involved in alcohol consumption; it is not a condemnation of drinking.

Senator Kim Tracy and former UNCW senator Jeff Silverman smile and display the object which has caused so much stir across the state. The UNCW Board of Trustees will be examining Tracy's proposition to install condom machines in the residence halls. (Photo by Mr. Ed)

Silverman mentions that those who opposed the bill in the NCSL argued that condoms available in residence halls would promote promiscuity. "Other arguments opposing the bill concerned a fear for the loss of contributions made by alumni to the UNC-system and the fact that making condoms available is not part of a school's authority."

This legislation was obviously brought about by the life-threatening disease AIDS. Since the general public is more informed of the capabilities of condoms preventing AIDS, condom sales have skyrocketed.

"This legislation concerning condom machines will provide a great service to the students of UNCW," says Silverman, "thereby providing a useful means of protection against not only AIDS, but a whole host of other venereal diseases for those who choose to be sexually active."

Dr. Kate Bruce, a faculty member of UNCW's Psychology Department, reported that "almost 100% of UNCW students support the promotion of condoms through advertising." It is probably safe to say that those who support condom advertisements also support the availability of them.

She could not find any information on the effectiveness of condoms against sexually transmitted diseases, but she mentioned that "condoms are about 95% effective against pregnancy and are probably quite effective against diseases."

Career Day for UNCW's Ambitious

By Celeste E. Bulley
Editor-in-Chief

If you are one of the many UNCW students who are looking to get a head start on your career, Career Day '88 is the place to be.

Sponsored by the Career Planning and Placement Center, this year's Career Day will be held in Hanover Hall Gymnasium Wednesday, Oct. 26 from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. All students, faculty, staff and interested alumni are invited to visit Hanover Hall, view the displays and talk to representatives of the various groups participating.

"Career Day gives students and faculty the opportunity to learn about potential employment opportunities, career preparation needs and trends," explains Jim Braye, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

Attending and providing the Career Day displays will be employees from federal, state and local governments, retail and industrial organizations, all branches of the military services including Reserve and National Guard components, sales and marketing organizations, financial institutions, health care providers, and educational and social service agencies.

Students should attend in their school clothes. "This is not like a job fair, where resumes and suits are required. This is an opportunity to exchange

Questions Of Character. And American Politics

William J. Bennett
Former U.S. Secretary of Education

When I was a professor of law and philosophy, my area of special interest was ethics and political philosophy, and in particular, American political thought. In my undergraduate courses, my students and I always read at least some of the Federalist. One of the issues we inevitably discussed was the founders' view of the importance of character in government, what they unambiguously called the need for virtue. We debated whether men of good character could be active in politics, given the compromises so often demanded of those in politics.

I've since had the unusual opportunity to be a professor of political philosophy who has now lived for a time in the political world. And as I prepare to leave my government post, I find myself reflecting again on the questions of character and American political life that my students often asked -- that I often asked -- more than a decade ago.

"I find myself reflecting again on the questions of character and American political life..."

The founders were realistic people. They knew about human frailty, so they gave us a system of government to protect against the weaknesses and "duplicities" of human nature. "Enlightened statesmen will not always be at the helm," Madison conceded. But clearly he expected men of virtue -- he had before him, after all, the example of George Washington -- to be active in politics. The principle is summarized in Federalist 55: "as there is a degree of depravity in mankind which requires a certain degree of circumspection and distrust, so there are other qualities in human nature which justify a certain portion of esteem and confidence. Republican government presupposes the existence of these qualities in a higher degree than any other form."

During my academic years, I remember detecting in my colleagues and students a fair amount of suspicion about the founders' hope. Should Madison and company have presupposed even a modest portion of virtue in our leaders?

My government experience over the last several years convinces me that the founders' hope was well placed, their realism well justified. What one finds in Washington today is exactly what Madison found some two centuries ago: some degree of depravity, self-interest, and ignorance of the public good, but also a fair degree of honesty, character, and constancy. In short, some vice and some virtue.

"My government experience over the last several years convinces me that the founders' hope was well placed..."

I've seen public officials of diverse political stripes with the virtues the founders described: reliability, resiliency, integrity, a steadiness of disposition. These are individuals who can't be daunted or bribed, men and women who express in another part of the country, who don't change their views for reasons of self-interest, but only by force of sound argument and evidence. My observation stems not from partisanship, because I've seen vice and virtue distributed on both sides of the aisle.

Character is an individual matter, not a party or ideological matter. You will find character in individuals like Representative William Natcher of Kentucky and Senator Bill Bradley of New Jersey, both Democrats, and you will find character in Representative Henry Hyde of Illinois and Senator Alan Simpson of Wyoming, both Republicans. My dealings with these men have provided encouraging lessons about the very questions of governance that so worried my students a decade ago.

"politics is still the greatest and most honorable adventure..."

These individuals and others like them -- not only in Congress, but also in the executive and judicial branches -- prove that when you go to Washington you needn't leave your character behind. They also explode the myth that you can't be effective and decent and honorable at the same time.

My time in Washington has reminded me of the good sense -- the common sense -- of the American people. As Secretary advice is: do it. Do it with honor, do it with pride, and do it with a high sense of public duty. I haven't regretted my public service for a moment. On the contrary, I've had the time of my life.

of Education I've traveled up and down and back and forth across this country, talking to students, teachers, and parents. And everywhere I've gone, I've found our people to be thoughtful about their own lives and about national affairs. I suppose the thing that I've been most surprised by is how many politicians continually underestimate the intelligence of the American people. They think they have to speak down to them, to make political issues simple, to put everything in terms of slogans. But you can speak directly to the American people. You can tell them what is on your mind. You can engage in a vigorous public debate about important public issues.

Paul Buchan wrote long ago that "politics is still the greatest and the most honorable adventure." Public life affords you the opportunity to act on your convictions, to act on your ideals, to act on your ideas.

Take it, then, from a product of the academy. Don't pay heed to the cynics, many of whom make their home within the academy, who disparage or belittle public service and public servants. If you're inclined to enter public life, my

She also stated that "condoms drop only about 5% in effectiveness because of neglect by the user," meaning that most people use them properly most of the time.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services reports that condoms fail most often when they are used in "conjunction with oil-based lubricants which weaken latex" and when "a space at the tip of the condom is not left for the ejaculate."

The Department of Health also mentions that "diseases are transferred when the condom is not used before genital contact occurs." They further urge that a spermicide be used in conjunction with the condom in order to best prevent pregnancy and the transmission of venereal diseases.

As to the frequency of sexually transmitted diseases on this campus, the Health and Wellness Center reports that there were "sixteen notified cases of STD's in September of this year, most of which could have been prevented with a condom." The Wellness Center also stated that "free condoms, up to a reasonable limit, will be given to students."

Of the kinds of disease most often treated by the Center, venereal warts, which can lead to cancer, is the clear winner. Herpes and chlamydia cases run second in number with gonorrhea and syphilis coming in last. So far this year, there have been no cases of syphilis treated by the Center.

With the number of STD cases increasing on campus and the threat of AIDS looming ever-present, condoms seem a pragmatic deterrent. No one can be sure when or if the new machines will be in place in residence halls, but all evidence supports their debut on campus soon.

Tracy sums it up by saying, "the machines will be here for the student's convenience. It's an easy way to protect your health -- we hope everyone will take it seriously."

information for later reference," Braye said.

"Even though the primary purpose of the day is not hiring, conversations begun at Career Day usually lead to an interview and employment," comments Braye.

He relates the story of one girl who attended a previous Career Day. "The people she talked with from DuPont were so impressed with her, that although they were not hiring, they created a job for her. They recognized her as a pearl," he says. "That's what's known as the hidden job market."

He makes it clear that the people there will be on the lookout for highly motivated, forward-thinking people, with, surprisingly, no certain major. "Things are moving so fast in the world that a bank will hire a history major and within six months have that person completely trained."

In addition to the many local and regional organizations who have participated in the past, several new business will attend this year's Career Day. Among them will be Barnett Banks, Jacksonville, Fla.; Pfizer, Inc., Atlanta, Ga., and Pizza Hut, Washington, D.C.

Although it may seem that Career Day would be of most interest to seniors, the freshmen, sophomores and juniors are encouraged to attend. "This opportunity gives students a chance to work on career planning. Most students start too late; they should do themselves a favor and start the process early," emphasizes Braye.

Bush Nails Liberal In Final Debate

Jina Kraft
Treasurer,
UNCW College Republicans

The Massachusetts Miracle. Who is responsible? Not Mike Dukakis. Even last Thursday, Mike Dukakis asked the American public to let him do for America what he has done for Massachusetts. If murder furloughs, sewage dumping, tax hikes, and weak defenses are what he wants to do for America, I say, dump Mike Dukakis in Boston Harbor with the rest of the garbage. In last Thursday's debate, Vice President Bush dealt the final blow to an already floundering campaign. Mike Dukakis is down for the count. His own liberal policies, hatched and nurtured by other liberal extremists such as Teddy Kennedy and Jim Wright, have been his undoing. Dukakis, looking as arrogant as the Kennedy's out for a weekend at Hyannis Port, dodged Bush for only so long. In Bush's finest moment since the Republican National Convention, the Vice President exposed Dukakis and called him on the carpet on such issues as the deficit, defense, crime, and Dukakis' fascination with the Vice Presidential picks (He seems to be running against Dan Quayle instead of George Bush.)

On the deficit, Dukakis says he has balanced ten budgets in a row as governor of Massachusetts. He fails to tell America that, by Massachusetts law, he is required to do so. For some reason, he is against a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. If he's balanced all these budgets in Massachusetts, why is he so much against such an amendment? Doesn't make much sense Mike.

Also, on the deficit, Dukakis says that one way to say "help reduce," just "reduce" would be for the IRS to collect all the uncollected taxes. Not a chicken in every pot, but an agent for every wallet.

On the defense issue Mike Dukakis is extremely weak. He has had absolutely zero experience in foreign affairs matters, but, once again, said that we should cut present programs that will help to insure our present state of peace. Apparently, for Governor Dukakis, hind-sight is not 20/20. What has happened over the past eight years is that, America, under President Reagan and Vice-President Bush, has strengthened her defense and again become the most powerful and respected nation in the world.

The Soviet Union has taken note of us and taken steps to insure peace. Peace through strength has worked, but once again, the Duke wants us to believe that we need to return to a policy of weakness, one of unilateral disarmament, thinking that if we do, so will they. Remember the grain embargo and the boycott of the Olympics. Got us real far didn't it Mike! Let us not forget his declaration that all Massachusetts citizens of draftable age were to be excluded from the draft. Real patriotic Mike.

As for defense and the budget deficit. One of the ways Mike was able to balance all of those budgets was the huge influx of federal dollars into Massachusetts in the form of military spending. The Reagan Miracle, Mike!

'Crime is another area where Dukakis befuddles me. He says he is tough on crime. He says this, but he doesn't support capital punishment, even in the case of cop killers, rapist, murderers, or drug related murderers. PLEASE! All this on top of the great furlough program in Massachusetts. Ever hear of the convict who ran for mayor, AND WON! That was in Massachusetts. Yes, convicts can actually vote in Mike's world.

Now, on to the Vice Presidency. Bush supports Dan Quayle and always will. If we want to talk about silver feet, by all means. Mike and Lloyd aren't exactly paupers. Also, Senator Quayle has more experience than did Senator Bentsen in 1976, when he ran for President. Lets talk qualifications Mike.

Let us also discuss ideology. Mike evaded this question quite well in both debates, but the fact of the matter is, he and Bentsen disagree on so much, you would think he picked a Republican as his running mate, until now. Bentsen has flip-flopped on every issue that he had apparently held dear to his heart before his selection as Dukakis' right right hand man. Do we want a squish as Vice President? Senator Quayle, as the Vice President stated in the debate, is more than qualified, and should have the entire nation

In closing I would like to commend Dukakis for running a good, tough campaign. I wish I could say a clean one, but even when asked for a nice comment about Bush, after the Vice President's most generous comment on Dukakis' family, Mike still slung mud towards Mr. Bush. I just hope the American people saw the real George Bush and Mike Dukakis last Thursday. Already, the Wall Street Journal says Bush, because of the debate, has taken a strong lead. I guess the American people are smarter than the press gives them credit. I guess Dukakis will find out on election day.

View From The Left

Wendell L. Jones
Vice President,
UNCW College Democrats

Mike Dukakis was clearly not at his best last Thursday night in Los Angeles, yet he scored a decisive victory by forfeit. George Bush failed to show. For ninety minutes, Americans watched as Dukakis clearly spelled out his goals for a better America. An America where opportunity is afforded to every citizen, regardless of his/her race, sex, national origin, creed or ethnic birth. An America that is not satisfied with being a second rate economic power. An America that believes in God and country, but knows the preservation of both depends entirely upon the preservation and respect of individual rights and liberties as spelled out and implied in the Constitution. Governor Dukakis was eloquent in his dream for national health insurance. A policy that will save the integrity and lives of more than 35 million Americans who are currently unable to afford any for themselves and their children. Mike Dukakis was steady and unwavering in his support for the working men and women of our society; aiming to guarantee them a decent job at good wages. Mike Dukakis has one the mark in dealing with the sensitive issue of abortion, asking, "Who will make the decision?" He reassured the millions of Americans watching that he is not only a brilliant, well schooled, heavily experienced executive, but that he is a fair and compassionate man who believes in the "American Dream," the American way of life, and unlike George Bush and his "thousand points of light," Governor Dukakis believes in, "240 million points of light."

And where was George? Well that has been the question for the last eight years. Other than attending state funerals and sitting silently by as Ollie North sold weapons to the Ayatollah, no one knows. All George Bush could muster were a few silly jokes and few complete sentences. What George Bush did say however was telling and frightening. He established beyond a shadow of doubt that his intelligence is questionable, his values bent, his command of the issues minimal and his judgment nil.

In their first debate in Winston-Salem, George Bush said he would brand women seeking an abortion, criminals. In this debate he refused to back off of that McCarthyistic attitude stating his personal convictions on the matter and expecting Americans to immediately abandon their own. I personally am opposed to abortion as is Governor Dukakis, but neither of us would be so bold as to claim the right of making that decision across the board for every American female. The body is their's, the condition is theirs, their life is their own and therefore the decision must be their's.

Bush also sees a need for huge increases in military spending; his excuse? We must be able to negotiate with the Soviets from a position of strength. Question: If America's military is not strong after billions of dollars spent on strategic missiles, "Space Bells" technology, (a humorous parody of a film, and a parody for a not so humorous defense posture), and Pentagon contractors getting wealthy on our tax dollars; if after eight years of an administration whose attitude has been "damn the poor", let's spend it all on nuclear weapons...who's at fault? The Reagan/Bush administration's foreign and military policies have been at worst illegal and at best ineffective. Since it is they who like to select titles from space fantasies for their failed programs, may I suggest one, "Lost in Space?"

Then there is George Bush's judgement. Thursday night and in the past he has stated that Danforth Quayle would be a good president, if needed, James Watt was a good Secretary of the Interior, Ed Meese was a good Attorney General, Lyn Nofziger was a good and decent person, Ollie North is a true American and Robert Bork would make a good Supreme Court appointee. Were it not for the fact that a consensus of Americans disagree with those assessments, I would not have been so amazed and impressed by Bush's ability to make these statements with a straight face.

Finally there is this term "liberal." By Bush's continued use we can ascertain he considers himself a "conservative." Let us compare the records of the two ideologies. "Liberals" gave America: the GI Bill, the Interstate Highway System, Social Security, FHA Home loans, college tuition scholarships and grants, Reconstruction, (after the Civil War), Civil Rights, The Voting Rights Act, Medicare, the Environmental Protection Agency, the TVA, the Rural Electrification Program, the Securities and Exchange Commission, they bailed us out of the Depression, the civil war, slavery and last but certainly not least, it was

"liberals" who gave America, America... "The Declaration of Independence," and "The Constitution of the United States of America." That is probably why "liberals" want to protect your constitutional rights, and "conservatives" want to take them away. "Conservatives" on the other hand have given America: The Depression, The U-2 Incident, Watergate, Iran-gate and now they want us to accept George Bush and his colleagues on the political right-wing's lunatic fringe! No thanks, I'll just say no.

Soviet Expert At UNCW A Welcomed Addition

Special to the Seahawk
By Marc Kelley

Dr. Susan McCaffray is another newcomer to the UNCW Department of History. Although her family's living in the area has drawn her here for the past 15 years, she has finally decided to move here—great! Her Russian expertise will be a most welcome asset to our university.

Dr. McCaffray received her B.A. from the College of Wooster in Ohio in 1976. (It is famous in Ohio, but obscure in the South.) She studied in the USSR in 1982 for her doctorate, but did most of her research in Helsinki, Finland. "It was there that I found a strong Slavic library, especially in data relating to the Russian empire," she comments.

Dr. McCaffray decided to concentrate on studying the last decades before the Russian revolution. Completing her doctoral studies in 1983 at Duke University, her doctoral thesis concerned the labor relations and politics of the Russian steel industry.

Because Dr. McCaffray's father was an employee of General Electric, "our family moved often, especially in upstate New York and Ohio," McCaffray says.

It is unfortunate that this lady of the northern climes who "loved all that snow in Helsinki" is now in sunny quasi-tropical and that most famous of collegiate hangouts—the Wits End." By continually visiting her parents she got Carolinists, so it wasn't such a hard decision to move here.

1978 was the year she moved from Ohio to attend graduate school at Duke. "I met my future husband the very first day there." (That's a big plug for first impressions!) They were married during those graduate school days. Her husband has a degree in coastal management, so he obviously loves it here.

"After completing my doctorate I went to teach at Marquette in Ohio. After two years there, I taught at Wake Forest, where I have been for the past three years," she says. Now UNCW has her and she's not leaving until she develops a Russian foreign language program!

Dr. McCaffray views her colleagues as a lively and intellectual community of interested scholars. "It is one of the strongest history departments I have come across."

Wilmington. Fortunately, she grew to know the old Wilmington we fondly remember.

Giving equal time to the students, she finds her Russian history students knowledgeable and likeable. "Our student body has greater ethnic and socioeconomic diversity than other campuses I have been to," she says.

McCaffray feels our UNCW students would make great exchange students save for one major bozo-no-no—we don't speak Russian! Therefore, we need to get moving and not only learn Russian but possibly Japanese, Mandarin, and Cantonese.

"One nice thing about Russians knowing our language is that they can and do attend our colleges, and they buy our products," she explains.

"The recent INF talks in Geneva are another example of our ethno-centric position. The Russian side knew what our people were saying yet few, if any, of our side knew what the Russians were discussing," she comments. "Our only advantage was that the U.S. side had the use of computers to assist in the day to day preparations. The Russians had to hand write everything."

Dr. McCaffray sees glasnost (which means openness, or clarity) as too new to properly evaluate. "It takes time to view changes there. We're watching this large, enigmatic, inscrutable country change—yet, is it?" she asks. "Some might say they are becoming more like us. Probably not. For the answer take History 325 and 326!" (Don't you just love a lady that indistinctly plugs her class!)

On analyzing the Russian workforce, McCaffray says "It is a worker's paradise. You cannot be fired and you don't have to work free medical care, social security and more." She feels the down side of this paradise is the lack of drive/incentive (capitalism does have its good points), few amenities, longgg lines, (and when you finally get in the remaining shoes are all size twelve!)

She feels some of Gorbachev's tactical mistake are:

(1) No more boozing for Soviet people (many Czars and bolsheviks have tried this angle but that doesn't go over too well with a depressed populace -- sounds a little like "Alcohol Awareness Week in America")

(2) So, after really getting their attention what does Gorbys do next? "WORK HARDER, comrades," she says. "If he wants the people behind him all he has to do is offer basic foods, meats, quality shoes and toasters. He is not receiving heat from the higher ups, he's being set upon by the common people."

My last question of the day for Dr. McCaffray was her thoughts on Armand Hammer (who is one of the richest men in America, is the owner of Occidental Petroleum, and has been associated with Soviet leaders since Krushchev). He is of the old order. He's an interesting character and a story all by himself."

"For those of you wishing to take History of the Soviet Union 326, it is MW at noonish," finishes McCaffray.

Worrying Is Negative National Pastime

By Robert J. Kriegel
Ph.D.
CPS Guest Columnist

Worrying is the negative national pastime. Everybody does it and very few find it is a positive experience. You don't think clearly or perform well when you worry. Your main focus is the worry, the fear of "What might happen if..." which overwhelms you, makes you feel depressed, reduces your energy, and prevents you from getting your work done.

College students are big worriers. They worry leads to stress and college students are very big on stress. In fact, the Nuprin Pain Report, the first national study on pain in America, documented that more people 18-24 are likely to suffer stress and pain than any older age group.

Most of what we worry about is out of our control. You can't control other people's responses, a grade a prof will give us, whether someone will agree with us, what they think of us, the weather, traffic, roommates, money, control, the worse everything gets.

Remember this rule of thumb: You can't control other people or external situations. But you can control how well you prepare for and respond to them. In other words, you control your information, attitude and actions.

Worrying is made up of two words: what if. "What if...they say no, ...I don't get the money, ...the professor assigns, ...the traffic..." The key to beating the worries is to change the what if's to "if...then's." "If they say no... then I will..." "If I don't get the money then I will..." Always change the worry to anticipation. Concentrating your energy on what you can change, rather than dwelling on things you can't control increases your confidence and prepares you for any situation.

This strategy was used by President John F. Kennedy. Before his press conferences Kennedy and his aides anticipated any possible question or situation that might arise and developed answers for them. Whether a reporter asked about the Vietnam War, the economy or civil rights, Kennedy was prepared.

Likewise, in a job interview, instead of worrying whether or not the potential employer will ask about your grades, anticipate that he or she will. Then mentally list wins, accomplishments and qualifications that your course grades might not reflect.

Get into the habit of anticipating prior to any pressure situation, whether it's an exam, an interview, a date or a tennis serve. Make a "worry list," then change each worry (what if) to an anticipation (if...then). Leaving your worries behind by focusing on what you can control enables you to concentrate your energy and perform at peak levels.

Editors Note: This is the second of a five part series of stress by Dr. Kriegel.

Imagine the thought put into coming up with an increase in the minimum wage. Someone actually thought (and some still do) that raising it would do this country a great deal of good. Now think about what raising the minimum wage would do for your country.

First, it would provide those working for it a larger paycheck. Going from $3.35/hr. to $4.55/hr. is a substantial raise, and all those people who already received $4.55/hr. would want more money as well. It is fair to say that starting at the bottom of the scale, everyone above that minimum job level would want a wage increase. How would you like to receive a raise for good work performance from $3.35/hr to $4.00/hr. and then learn that the minimum wage just went up to $4.55/hr? I would be outraged, especially since they wouldn't have to earn it.

Second, the wage increase would force consumer prices up because the cost incurred in the labor of producing goods would have increased. Rents would go up because landlords would have to pay their work force more to keep up their repair and grounds work, food prices would go up as well because gathering the food and paying cashiers would cost more, and clothing prices would go up as a result of having to pay their textile work force more for their services. Not only would prices go up in textiles, but the wage increase might force textile companies to produce their goods in other countries since their labor force works for far less.

Knowing this, how would the American consumer be any better off? With an increase in his/her paycheck, the consumer would be faced with increased food, clothing and rent costs. How much better off would they be? They wouldn't. The plan looks good on paper, but the implications negate any good that the increase would provide. (And there is something to be grateful for in the fact that Congress did not approve the bill when it came up earlier this year.)

Thirdly, those receiving the increase (and those who would receive an increase due to those below them on the work force ladder) would be faced with another wonderful fact, that being that they would likely be candidates for an entirely new tax bracket, one rung up.

If one takes a serious look at this proposed increase in the minimum wage, then, and only then can they see what it would do to our economy on the global scale in trying to compete with foreign currency. It isn't hard to see that we would be at even more of a disadvantage by paying our work force more when other nations aren't. Their goods stay at the same price and ours would increase-- that isn't good competitive strategy, it's suicide. The answer would not lie in tariffs on imports either, but that's a different story altogether. Granted, the minimum wage isn't the only facet of economics that affect this competition in the world market, but it is, nonetheless, a factor.

In light of these insights, it is apparent that the only institutions that would benefit significantly from this increase would be the federal, state and local governments. They would receive income taxes from all those poor souls who would have entered that wonderful new tax bracket. They would also receive a fair amount of sales taxes from all those inflated prices brought on by the wage increase. What a plan!

Test-Taking For Idiots

I've noticed that many UNCW students aren't adept at taking tests. This column is not directed to you students who always receive A's on your exams. You wouldn't be reading this anyway. You'd be too busy studying. This is directed to students like me -- who "occasionally" have difficulty with an exam.

This school is suffering from what I labeled "the sigh syndrome" while taking tests. I first became aware of the problem in my Logic class last fall. I admit that the tests were tough, but I counted thirty-six heavy sighs spewing from students. Now, this is a mistake.

I understand the reasoning behind the heavy sighs -- it's a nonverbal message to the professor which says "thanks a lot worm features for giving us this killer test that I am going to flunk." Next time you have a tough test, count the sighs. I am here to tell you that sighing isn't cool. All you're doing is encouraging the professor. If you think that they don't count the sighs your crazy. They take great pride in multiple sighs. They take it as a nonverbal sign that they did a hell of a job on the exam. They love it. I'm not making this up; I talked to a professor, who will remain anonymous, and he enlightened me to this theory. I figured that was the way it was, so I've never been a sigher, but now I know it's a fact.

How you take a test is as important as the grade you receive. When you're taking a test, the moment is most important. If you don't know the answers, you can't sit there groaning and sighing -- that will not give you the answers. Worry about the grade later. Looking cool while taking the exam is most important at this point.

If you look at the test and you begin to wonder if you're in the right class -- don't panic. Answer the questions that you know. (If there are any.) Don't ever let out a sigh. I repeat, Don't Ever Let Out A Sigh!! Oh, you've flunked the test, but why let the class know that you're a minnult. Let them think that you've got it aced, and make them jealous. They don't have to know. All my class mates think I've aced every test I've ever taken. (I have.)

Rather than letting out any sighs, perhaps let out a short giggle, as though the test amuses you. You want to be the first one out of the class also. If forces everyone to take notice of the person who aced it. Timing is important though. You can't leave after five minutes if it takes others an hour. Get a feel of the test and the class, and you can get a good estimate on when to exit.

I think the late great James Dean once said, "Leave quick. flunk quick. Leave the room looking cool." Even the professor will be impressed. Of course, until he grades it, but what the hell. Live for the moment.

You can't just walk out of the room, you have to swagger a little. Make a little noise so you'll be noticed. Keep your head high and sneer a little, and just swagger on out. Don't give up the act until you're home, then you can bawl your brains out if you wish. It's best to just forget about it though and get psyched for the next exam.

The next time you're staring blankly at a test and wondering what language it's written in, think of these guidelines. It may lift your spirits and give you some hope of not looking like an idiot. Remember, looks can be deceiving.

Homophobia Afflicting The Uneducated

Watch out! Beware! You might have a serious social "disease." Eight out of ten readers of this article may well be afflicted with the social "disease" Homophobia.

Homophobia is a fear of, hatred of homosexuals, their sexual practices, lifestyles, and beliefs...or to such feelings/ideas within one's self. Homophobia is and has been a long term problem of our culture and is and has been a problem on this campus. Homosexuals know it is a problem and it is about time that we who see ourselves as being "straight" recognize the problem that it creates for ourselves as well as for homosexuals. From my perspective it is clearly a socially transmitted mental disorder. As simply as I can put it, it is prejudice and prejudice does damage both to the subject and to from our consideration as members of the human family. And we are doing that. Our prejudice is alienating, sensitive, caring, struggling, hoping, dreaming, human beings just like us from all

'the kinds of social interaction that sustain them-- and us in our attempts to become everything that we can be. Our prejudice, our homophobia, forces homosexuals the object. I get angry whenever I encounter a tendency like this to lump a whole group of diverse individuals into a category, label them, and effectively dismiss them to hide out in our very midst and almost deny what is going on in them. Many who are gay are quite content in their lifestyles and simply need the freedom to be themselves openly without fear of their lifestyle costing them careers and relationships. Many other are uncomfortable with their lifestyle but have no opportunity to explore whatever uncomformableness they feel in order to resolve it in whatever way that will bring inner peace.

I am not here raising any issue about the rightness or wrongness of homosexuality or anything like it. I'm pointing to the problem that so-called "straight" people have. Homophobia is our problem in two ways, at least. First, we participate in the social oppression of a whole group of people and we need to face up to it. My hope is that since so much of this is social prejudice, that many of us might be at the point in our lives where we are willing to explore the unreasonableness of feelings that have been taught to us all our lives and which we have absorbed without any thoughtful reflection. We can give up our prejudice. We can choose to seek knowledge and understanding and compassion.

Secondly, feelings and acts of hostility, verbal abuse, angry sarcasm, and put downs are unchristian and wrong by any standards of human decency. You may never agree with the homosexual lifestyle, you may always feel it is wrong. But, where does all the ugliness in you come from.

Pay attention to yourself. Watch how your fear of being misperceived affects the way you relate to someone of the same sex. Watch your reaction when you discover a friend is gay or when homosexuality is treated in some manner in the public media or is part of a discussion in a group of which you are a part.

The climate around homosexuality is negative, harsh and you can help change it by reflecting on your own feelings, attitudes and giving up your supporting role in an oppressive system. We need a change.

"Rubber Relief" Smuggled By UT-Austin Democrats

(CPS) - Call it Rubber Relief or maybe AIDS-Aid, but some University of Texas students plan to smuggle a valuable commodity to their counterparts at Southwest Texas State University:

Condoms. Students at Southwest Texas have been unable to buy any contraceptives at the campus health clinic since the summer, when the Texas State University System Board of Regents banned contraceptive distribution of any kind on the campuses under its control.

In protest, the UT-Austin University Democrats have been collecting condoms from students at a campus booth since Sept. 26. They'll soon take the contraband condoms in a "Contraceptive Caravan" to Southwest Texas in San Marcos.

"We've filled a large jar with condoms," said UT University Democrats President David Brown, who estimates there are a few dozen condoms in the jar.

"The Contraceptive Caravan," said University Democrat Doug Irving, is a way to show support for SWT students. "This is not a partisan issue." He called the ban on contraceptive distribution "inane" in light of heightened concern about sexually transmitted diseases.

Their effort some at a time, moreover, when officials at the Center for Disease Control report that the AIDS scare has not markedly prompted students to take measures -- such as using condoms -- to protect themselves during sex.

Many schools, of course, are conducting seminars, distributing pamphlets and installing condom machines to try to educate and protect students -- whose relatively promiscuous lifestyles have persuaded health officials to warn heterosexual collegians are more vulnerable to AIDS infection than everyone except homosexuals and intravenous drug users -- about the disease.

Some campus critics claim such efforts actually encourage student sex.

"Unfortunately, some will see it as the university encouraging sex, and that's bunk," said Rick Morgan, a student at Michigan State University, where the student government has convinced wary officials to install condom vending machines in five dorms on a trial basis this fall.

"We're not trying to encourage sex, and we're not trying to discourage sex. We're just trying to protect people."

At the University of Maryland, which also installed condom machines this fall, health center director Dr. Margaret Bridwell thinks the anti-contraceptive forces may be dangerously naive.

"Anybody who thinks that young people aren't sexually active doesn't know what's going on," she said. "And at this stage of the game, with AIDS as a fatal (sexually transmitted disease), even asking the question is just sort of begging the issue."

In fact, the majority of schools seems to favor Bridwell's approach.

The University of Arizona's health center, for example, provided 300 free condoms and safe sex brochures for tow fraternities to distribute at a Sept. 17 party attended by 1,000 students.

"Everyone was walking around with condoms behind their ears," reported Gregory Usdan of Zeta Beta Tau, which cosponsored the party with Delta Chi. "They were everywhere. It was great."

University of Colorado at Colorado Springs officials said in September that they, too, will install condom vending machines after renovations to several campus buildings are finished.

"I wouldn't be surprised if some students were offended" by the decision, said Dean of Student Life Roy Wisner, but it's a minimal effort to help prevent the spread of a horrendous disease."

Contracting Can Eliminate "Date Rape"

By Roy U. Schenk, Ph. D.
Guest Columnist

Date Rape? There's a lot of furor, especially on university campuses, about men's response to the ambiguity of women's "No's" when involved in sexual situations. In actual practice, she likely has said NO about 150 times by the time sexual intercourse occurs, if it does, since Warren Farrell (author of Why Men Are the Way They Are) estimates there are that many steps from the start thru coitus. Certainly most men are vividly aware that most women will say NO regularly along the way, and then permit the "objected to" step proceed.

Why do women say NO so much, even when they evidently don't really mean it? Simply put it is because they have been socialized to protect their reputations and to let men take all the responsibilities and risks. This boils down to retaining their socialized image of moral superiority. And saying NO is an important part of that sexist attitude of superiority. Actually, the women often are in a state of conflict with themselves, wanting to be sexual, but also burdened by wanting to live up to society's expectation of their female role.

It appears that a woman often can permit herself to proceed thru up to 149 of the steps, but not the 150th step. Stopping at that point might be alright if she were the only person involved. But she is not. There is also a man involved who may well develop a state of arousal that has an intensity which may be best described as similar to the intensity of severe cases of Premenstrual Stress Syndrome (PMS).

Let's call this Pre-Coital Syndrome (PCS). It is sexist to condemn men who respond inappropriately under conditions of PCS and not condemn at least equally the women who participate in getting them there (and also for that matter, not condemning women who commit violence under the stress of PMS). In other words, if women do not wish to proceed to sexual intercourse they should avoid becoming involved in intense sexual foreplay.

The reality is that so called date rape is not just a male problem. It is equally a female problem. So let's be honest and open on this subject and just put it bluntly: Women, don't let the process start unless you intend to let it proceed thru all 150 steps! Alternatively, if actual coitus is not acceptable because you "honor" is important to you or because you cannot rise above your socialization, negotiate an alternative such as mutual masturbation before beginning.

With all the talk about the importance of equality in other areas of our lives, why is this serious question being ignored? Why aren't women taking their share of the responsibility for initiating sex? The answer is quite simple. Women are insisting on maintaining their superiority attitudes and the power that goes with their control, rather than accepting equality with men in this area. This is sexism that is on a par with any macho posturing by men.

In short, it's time we men begin demanding of women that they give up their control by always being the ones who have the choice to say NO; and instead that they begin going their share of initiating, coming down off their sexist pedestal of being above being actively and honestly sexual.

Another incredible phenomenon in this age of "equal pay for equal work" and "affirmative action" is that women are still to a large extent expecting men to pay for dates. This custom made sense in the days when men were the sole wage earners. Can it be that women still believe that men should pay just for the honor of their presence on a date? That certainly carries a message of the superior value of women, and is sexism. Actually, if a woman just lets a man pay for dates, one of her implicit, silent but obvious messages is that he should be compensated more for his work so he can afford to pay for the dates. I think we should be quite open and honest about this. When a woman expects a man to pay for their dates, she prostitutes herself. She has used her sexuality to gain something of significant monetary value. (That is a reasonable definition of prostitution). And therefore the only fair thing for her is to be an honest prostitute. Unless there is a contract at the start that the woman will pay for the next date, the only honorable thing for woman to do is to deliver on the implicit contract.

Actually, there may not be a second date, particularly if the woman knows she will have to pay for it. So if one or the other is to pay for the first date, let it be the woman. This seems like the only way to avoid misunderstandings as to the nature of the contract. Alternatively let each pay for their own share.

This will save a lot of misunderstandings. Thus if a man and woman negotiate that they will each pay their own way, the contract is only for an evening together with nothing sexual implied. If the woman pays, she can decide later if she wants more to happen—still recognizing that one doesn't start what one is not ready to finish. And finally, if the contract is for the man to pay, the man should bring condoms along to assure that the contracted sexual encounter will be safe. The exception to this would be the rare occasion when the man or woman is truly giving a gift to the other person as on the celebration of a birthday, special event, etc. But that only works if both women and men give such gifts.

A safety valve is needed here, of course. Sometimes a date goes badly. In such a situation, the parties may mutually agree not to be sexual. What if a woman, or man for that matter, backs out of the contract? Obviously a respect for the other person's dignity as a human makes forced sex unacceptable. However, the offending person should be seen as lacking in honor and trustworthiness, and should be avoided in the future. Alternatively the person could reimburse the payer for the costs of the date.

With this kind of clear understanding between men and women, so called date rape can be relegated to a rare occurrence by either men or women. In addition, the relations between men and women should dramatically improve because a major source of misunderstanding will be eliminated.

Smoking Bans Proposed In Universities

(CPS) -Students at the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire and Metropolitan State College, a commuter college in Denver, may walk a mile for a Camel, a Marlboro or a Kool if proposed bans on campus cigarette sales are approved.

Smokers at Yale, moreover, may find themselves puffing outside this fall if state-mandated restrictions banning smoking from some university buildings are extended to dormitories.

The tougher measures and banning of cigarette machines suggest that many colleges, like shopping malls, airports, office buildings and other public places, also seem to be tightening their anti-smoking rules this fall.

"It's simply a matter of health," said Elliot Garb, assistant chancellor for student affairs at Wisconsin-Eau Claire, which will most likely remove cigarette vending machines from campus. "The University is just reinforcing what the surgeon general has already said about smoking."

"I'm not asking people not to smoke. I'm saying I don't want to be providing the cigarettes," said Gretchen Minney, the director of Metro State's book center. It's the same reason I don't sell drugs."

Scores of colleges -- including the universities of Illinois, Washington, Minnesota, Nebraska, California-Davis and Maryland -- already have restricted smoking or banned it entirely in campus buildings.

Georgia State University, for example, banned on-campus cigarette sales in 1986 and then last May set new limits on where students can smoke. The limits went into effect in September.

In March, Stanford even went as far as banning smoking outdoors when reserved seating is provided for events. Nassau Community College in New York removed cigarette vending machines from campus two years ago.

At Yale, Metro State and Wisconsin-Eau Claire, however, resistance to butt bans remains strong.

"If I don't have sex, I do not have the right to ban the sales of condoms," said Metro State student legislator Patricia Carris during a campus debate.

"We can not set a precedent that says: 'If I don't like something I should ban it.'"

"I'm 45 -years-old and I find it appalling that things are being decided for me," echoed Student Trustee Louis Kansas.

Nevertheless, the Metro State student government endorsed the ban.

Wisconsin-Eau Claire officials, too, say the proposal to remove cigarette vending machines will most likely be approved.

Opposition to smoking restrictions remains haphazard at best at Yale, but it doesn't mean smokers like the idea. "It make the college a more foreign place," said student smoker Kenn Wilson, "if you have to watch what you're doing so carefully."

Getting College Students To Vote

By J. M. Rubin
CPS Writer

Five hundred and fifty student leaders gathered in Washington, D.C., during the Sept. 30 weekend to try to figure out how to do something no one's ever done before:

Get college students to vote.

They're not alone. The Chancellor of the City University of New York (CUNY), the student president at the University of Idaho, Public Interest Research Groups, the National Student Education Fund, the U.S. Student Association (USSA), the Grassroots Organizing Weekends Project, both major political parties and scores of campus groups nationwide are trying.

On Oct. 3, moreover, the student leaders were scheduled to start a month-long bus tour of eastern and midwestern campuses to try to register students to vote.

"We need to get students excited to vote," said University of Arizona student President John Fees.

"This is a watershed year," argued Catherine Crane of the National Student Campaign for Voter Registration, which held the weekend conference of student leaders. "This election will define the direction our country is going in."

CUNY Chancellor Joseph S. Murphy appealed to students' wallets: "There is a direct relationship between the amount of student-aid dollars available and the number of votes in the ballot box. You can be sure that elected officials understand both the cause and the effect."

But ever since 1972, when 18-year-olds first got the right to vote and observers predicted a huge monolithic liberal Student Vote that would transform American politics, collegians generally have failed to cast ballots at all.

In 1984, less than half of the country's 26 million 18-to-24-year-olds even registered to vote. Fewer than 41 percent bothered to vote.

"(Students) tend to participate less than people in their middle years," reports Dr. Matthew R. Kerbel, a political scientist at Villanova University. "Students are less settled and their minds are on other things."

"And they feel their votes don't make a critical difference," Kerbel said.

"Students are busy with other things," concurred John Carmichael, a University of Alabama-Birmingham associate professor of political science and public affairs.

"If they are away from home, the logistics of registering may create difficulty. If they are not married, not homeowners, they don't feel a vested interest (in voting)," Carmichael added.

Kerbel figures there's not much chance of getting students interested in registering at least until "the World Series is over and the election is the only major sporting event in the country."

"It's more of a challenge (to try to lure students to voting booths) because the elections aren't exciting," conceded University of Oregon activist Karen Gafney.

Students do, in fact, turn out in greater numbers than nonstudents of the same age, noted Kevin Harris of USSA.

Harris added they do so in spite of often not knowing how to register or where, of registrars who tell them "you can't register unless you pay taxes in New York," or county clerks who will not deputize a registrar to serve the students.

So far, at least some students have responded to efforts to register them.

"Education issues, the disadvantages of being a student, the need for higher education funding," persuaded Gina Olsen, an Illinois State University sophomore from Palos Heights, Illinois to register.

A registration drive at the University of Illinois' main Champaign-Urbana campus netted 1250 new student voters in one day in September.

University of Oregon sophomore Cassie Curtis decided to register because she cared deeply about an initiative on the state ballot and because she wants "to prevent Bush from becoming president."

"This is an important election for students," said Angelis Vlahou, a grad student at Illinois' Sangamon State University who registered for the first time because he was upset by state education budget cuts.

Moreover, a special program made it "easy to register. You enter the door in the cafeteria, and they were there. You didn't have to spend the day to find the (voter registration) office," Vlahou noted.

Even failures aren't deterring the optimists trying to organize the student vote.

When bad weather and alight turnout netted only 50 new student registrants at Indiana University in mid-September, student Vice President Andy Potts, taking aim at his drive's goal of 10,000 voters, commented, "only 9,950 more to go."

So student leaders at Idaho's public campuses organized a statewide registration drive, while faculty members at Broome Community College in Binghamton, N.Y., handed out voter registration forms to their students with the goal of registering 40 percent of the student body.

USA's 30-campus bus tour "will reach about one million people," Harris hoped.

The Illinois Student Association has tackled up posters reading, "Lawmakers think students don't vote. Surprise them. Register to vote" on campuses around that state.

But history is hard to buck, and "there is a general malaise in the population," asserts Alabama's Carmichael. "People may be satisfied with the way things are."

Leadership Center Exposes Potential

By David Vaughn
Staff Writer

The University Union is home to a new program designed to expose the leadership potential of the UNCW student body. The Leadership Center, located in room 212, is the brainchild of William Bryan, vice chancellor of Student Affairs. Seeing a lack of leadership emphasis on campus, he and his task force set out to create a comprehensive leadership program. The Center expects to meet several leadership goals during this, its first year of existence at UNCW.

Last Thursday in an extensive interview, Cathy Birmingham, director of the Center, spoke on the diversity of programs offered and progress expected to be made this year.

"A lot of people are saying there's a deficit in leadership and leadership is important to help solve world problems," says Birmingham.

The purpose of the Leadership Center is to enrich the campus community by strengthening student organizations and offering programs emphasizing this, as well as personal development and awareness of present issues in leadership.

"Everybody has the potential" is one phrase that sticks in her mind. People don't necessarily have to be leaders to become part of the Center; it's for the entire student body, catering to freshmen with its Emerge program, or to those already in leadership positions with Building Blocks. Also there are connections with groups outside the University.

Aside from teaching and improving on students' leadership skills, the Center also explores being a group member. Being a follower as well as a leader is one branch of the programs; everyone needs to know how to enhance an organization no matter what department they serve in. Truly, the Leadership Center wants its members to "be the best they can" no matter what they do.

Currently, the Emerge program is doing very well. It is meeting 6 weeks per semester and has an enrollment of seventeen students. Students are required to join a campus organization and meet key members of the faculty and staff. The program includes sessions in team building, stress management, communication skills and other valuable studies. Next year it will be open to the first 40 students who apply, due to limited space. Future programs include Ropes, an outdoor recreation and team building class, and a campus wide Leadership Retreat to Fort Fisher for all students, staff and faculty so they can get to know each other as human beings and not just in their University roles," says Birmingham.

Cathy has a high opinion of her staff. She says they are "a well-balanced, well-rounded group of students, motivated (and) wanting to take on more responsibility." All of them are involved in extra and co-curricular activities. The staff consists of Tina Butler, Jim Humphries, Karen Jenkins, Melissa Byrd and Kevin Collaner, who receives classroom credit for his work there.

"I think part of being a leader is being the best person you can be and encouraging others to be the best they can," says Birmingham.

Under her guidance and with her exceptional staff, the Leadership Center has the potential to become one of the most powerful training centers in this community.

KICKIN' BACK

Goode Pleases Kenan Crowd With Unique Dancing

By Meredith Serling
Staff Writer

Although many students headed home or just wanted to get out of Wilmington during Fall break last Wednesday, some of us like myself stayed in Wilmington and had the privilege of attending an unforgettable performance at Kenan Auditorium.

Joe Goode, dancer, choreographer, and director of his own performance group, among many other honors and talents along with special guest Liz Carpenter from his very own dance company in San Francisco put on a wonderful three-piece performance.

The evening began with Goode's introduction and his brief introduction and his unique style of dance and his first piece entitled "I'm Sorry." Dressed in fashionable tapered, cotton slacks, accompanied by shirt, coat and tie and black dance shoes.

Goode began with grunts and groans along with dance movements and extremely dramatic facial expressions. "I'm Sor" was a combination of many sounds, many apologies and various dance steps and expressions to follow the rhythm of the sounds; then the music by Brenda Lee cut in about three-quarters of the way through the piece.

His second work was called "Marsha and Me" (my favorite). Goode and Carpenter performed this piece together. It was dancing accompanied by rhythmic conversation between Marsha and Jerome, who were "in love" but arguing. They danced using two metal chairs and were even on the floor sliding around the stage.

On the last piece performed "29 Effiminent Gestures" was perhaps the most unique due to Goode's use of a chainsaw on a wooden chair and the electronic drill that was used descended from above. Goode was appropriately dressed in a bluish gray jumpsuit like that of a garage attendant. It was topped off with a tool belt, and a red cap. Also included were his combination of various dance movements which fit the title well.

As the performances came to an end, dance instructors, present dancers, left over students, and Wilmington residents applauded loudly. We all left that night, not only enlightened and fully entertained, but we all left with our personal interpretations of what each piece meant.

Steve Vernon and Karla Stith make a toast in A.R. Gurney's Dining Room" which was performed Oct. 5th through the 9th, at Kenan Hall's S.R.O. Theatre.

By Kim Cairns
Guest Writer

I had the opportunity to see a wonderful play last week. SRO Theatre presented "The Dining Room" directed by Terry Theodore. The cast consisted of six UNCW students: Caroline Lewis, Allen Rav, Karla Stith, Steve Vernon, Juli Brockman, and John Panichello.

The play spans the course of a day in a slowly deteriorating upper middle class dining room. The overlapping scenes jump from one decade to another in no apparent order, and cover over fifty years of changing values. Each actor plays many roles, varying from a bratty birthday girl to the grouchy family patriarch who grudgingly supports his family's expensive habits.

The scenes melt together with virtually flawless choreography. My only complaint was that I really had to concentrate to catch every line of the overlapping conversations. All the performers were superior, but Karla Stith showed particular poise in every scene she graced. I was also impressed by the versatility of Julie Brockman.

Unfortunately for those who missed it, this play is no longer running, but I should advise you to watch for the opening night of "Noises Off," if it's half as good as "The Dining Room," you're in for a treat.

LOVE IS...
By Dorothy McMullan
Student Surveyor

We asked 161 students at EivWell Day what love is-this is what they said "Something which you can't explain!"

*Worse than cocaine...you feel it's bad for you, but you still want to keep coming back!

"A four letter word!"

It's essential for insecurity!

*The smile of a child that has just accomplished a new task!

*Waiting, wondering, worrying.

*It's giving more that you think that you can give!

*The silent language of the heart!

*An extension of respect!

*An everlasting dream that never fades away!

*A warm fuzzy!

*Accepting others just as they are!

*Heaven! When it isn't a pain!

*God!

*Sacrificing your own self for someone else's good or benefit. (1 Corinthians 13!)

*Questionable!

*Something that requires hard work, faith, and a little luck!

*Caring 22%

*Trust 14%

*Commitment 2%

*Happiness 5%

*Sharing 13%

*Respect 4%

Only one person thought it is meaningful, and one person left the paper blank.

Wilmington native Peggy Payne will read from her novel "Revelation" at 8 p.m. Thursday in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall, on the UNCW campus. Admission is free.

This Won't Be On The Test

A U.S. City Bombed?

In 1921, Tulsa, Oklahoma, became the first U.S. city to be subjected to aerial bombing during a race riot. Over seventy-five people, mostly blacks, were killed during all the fighting. Two square miles of property, including more than 1,100 homes, were destroyed.

Before the riot, Tulsa blacks were so successful that the black business district of the segregated city was known as "The Negro's Wall Street." Envious white hatred of the black population of 10,000-in a city of 100,000--was running high.

On May 30, 1921 a white female accused a young black male of attacking her. The suspect was jailed and a lynch mob was formed. All hell broke loose, and the police dropped dynamite from private planes. Eventually the National Guard was called in and martial law declared.

The police arrested over 4,000 blacks and interned them in three camps. All blacks were forced to carry green identification cards. When the city was zoned for a new railroad station, the tracks were routed through the black business district, thus destroying it.

Lucky This Isn't On The Test

Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrwlllantysiliogogoch, is a town in Wales. It was originally called Llanfairpwllgwyngyll, which meant "St. Mary's pool of the white hazel." The name was lengthened by an eighteenth century cobbler who wanted to pinpoint further its location near St. Tisilio's church and red cave.

Americans believe these diseases pose the greatest threat:

|               |     |
|---------------|-----|
| AIDS          | 68% |
| Cancer        | 14% |
| Heart Disease | 7%  |

But the disease that causes most concern is responsible for the fewest deaths:

|               |              |
|---------------|--------------|
| AIDS          | less than 1% |
| Cancer        | 22%          |
| Heart Disease | 37           |

Coffee consumption is on the wane. In 1962, 75 percent of Americans were coffee-drinkers. By 1987, the figure had declined to 52 percent. Most former coffee-drinkers have switched to soft drinks, which have become more popular than ever. In fact, soft-drink consumption has risen 300 percent since the 1950s.

We The Mediocre

By Kelly Holsten

9:00 AM: phone rings... I am informed that I should drive an aging Buick to RALEIGH to attend the annual STATE FAIR. All expenses will be paid for this fun-filled quest. I hesitate, but finally agree.

11:00 AM: After two stops at various Gas Worlds and a doomed visit to HILLS for 6 C batteries to power the GIANT BOOM BOX, we strike out inland.

11:05 AM: swerve to miss extremely unhappy and unwise pedestrian who attempted to cross road within sighting distance. Buick lacked the much-needed pickup but managed to flatten the dropped bag of groceries.

12:13 PM: pass 18-wheeler because of slow progress and passengers screaming in the back seat. Narrowly miss two road signs as pass was attempted to the right of truck on grass shoulder. More screaming from passengers in back seat.

1:00 PM: ENTER RALEIGH city limits in record time. Am confused by the presence of foot-high median impeding my head to execute a finely crafted U-turn. Buick owner in back seat in drunken stupor. After front seat passenger encouragement (No relation to Buick owner), attempt median jump at 35 mph. Muffler, 2 feet of pipe, and rear rocker panel left on median. Buick's steering now wanting to make a permanent left turn.

1:30 PM: ENTER STATE FAIRGROUND "Free" parking lot, man attempting to collect $5.00 parking fee at entrance not quite fast enough. Left ugly grease hand print on left corner of windshield. Also small crack where ring on 3rd finger hit at the speed of a .22 caliber bullet.

2:00 PM: ENTER FAIR grounds. Am struck by the number of deformed human figures walking about. Am informed that these are fellow citizens attending the FAIR. Depression soon follows.

2:05 PM: Mount a ride called "THE ZIPPER." Have my intestines twisted like a baton.

2:07 PM: Mount a ride called "THE SKYDIVER." Lose four dollars in loose change and have my intestines twisted like a baton.

2:10 PM: Mount a ride called "THUNDERLOUP." Lose all sense of time, space, proportion, and dignity as my head is bounced about the cabin like a Ping-Pong ball.

2:15 PM: Venture into the MUTANT ANIMAL TENT. Overcome by the foul, rancid air of the five-legged sheep, the two-headed squirrel, and the GIANT ELEPHANT RAT. THE MIDGET COW and PYGMY GOAT appear to be very angry. They attempt to take a chunk out of the back of the head of an innocent five year old. Things turn ugly when I attempt to coddle the PIT BULL LLAMA. My life feels meaningless.

2:20 PM: Exit the mutant animal tent. Have strange sensations resembling chronic Bronchitis. PONDER the idea of visiting DUKE Hospital for an early retirement from LIFE after Contracting an unknown DISEASE from contact with the six horned RAM.

2:30 PM: ENTER LIVESTOCK & Swine Exhibit. 2:31- 4:15: unable to recall over an hour & half of ugly details while with Swine & Cattle. Friends are reportedly unable to tear me away from a prize winning Heifer named "HELGA." She is to be sold at top dollar. I WANT to set her free but am convinced otherwise by the sight of her owner WITH a tire iron from a '57 Chevy.

4:16 PM: Am carried back to the Buick and locked in the trunk for the Journey Home. As a last request, I'm given the boom Box with a tape of THE SCREAMING TREES. The name "Boom Box" takes on extra significance on the journey home.

6:45 PM: Am deposited on my doorstep. I am utterly defeated. I have no knowledge of my name, age, or social security number. Am numb from the wait up. I can only kiss the ground and thank YAIWEH for my DELIVERANCE from the True Pit of Doom...

Way Out In (W)right Field

Chris Wright
Sports Editor

Dr. Faithhealer Heals All

I have often wondered what compelling force drives human beings to participate in athletics. This weekend, following a peaceful day of tennis with some of my former high school buddies, I believe I discovered the reason.

Sports is the only outlet whereby its participants can openly pursue the thrilling pleasure of telling others exactly how terrible you feel and still be accepted. Injuries are the primary culprit. Every partner I hit with this weekend suffered from at least one life-threatening ailment, in addition to, of course, the standard "old football injury." I was forever offering advice, myself being tolerable to these "loss pacifiers," as in "I would have won, but my foot was broken in at least 12 different, equally painful, places."

And after screaming "icy-hot!" continually to the disdain of my perential grippers, I decided I was wasting my time and wealth of knowledge. However, I realize that there are probably some of you who are suffering from at least partially legitimate medicinal ailments and will therefore, offer my advice in an all-consuming effort to ease your pain during your time of need.

It's a relatively painless procedure (my fault, I forgot you want pain—you demand pain). The outcry was overwhelming, forcing me to renege my promise of publishing every letter. However, if you feel that strongly about seeing your question in print then by all means insure it. Simply enclose a couple of bucks along with your letter and Dr. Faithhealer will personally guarantee publication.

—Dr. Faithhealer,
I'm writing because every time I walk, my shins writhe in pain. My doctor told me I have a simple case of shin splints and that a week off from tennis will allow my body time for a complete recovery. I told him cancer of the shins runs deep in my family and that within weeks I will be doomed. Who is correct?

"Can't Walk In Courtland"

Dear "Can't Walk",
Of course you are correct. What does some bone-headed practitioner know about the harmful elements about the disease that is referred to simply as the "netter's nightmare." Cancer of the shins is a current ailment of over 78% of all tennis player's worldwide, ranking it just above tight shoes as a primary cause for defeat. You can take solace in the fact that following your death, the losses will become less frequent.

—Dr. Faithhealer,
Every time me and my 320 lb wife get to wastring, I experience these tremendous pains and loss of breath. The doctors can't explain it. I'm fearful I have the incurable BIGFIG syndrome.

Dear Billybob,
It's simply amazing that a man of your stature could have precisely diagnosed the often crippling "Breathloss Incorporated due to Gastrointestinal Pressure applied by Insurmountable Grossoverweight Imperson." My only advice is to shoot the old beast and then run for the county line.

—Dr. Faithhealer,
Yo, Doc, I got this problem, man. When I'm playin' ball my body feels fine but when I got studyin' to do, I be gettin' all tense, and my brain starts to hurt. Can you help me doc? My mom says it's just a matter of redefining my priorities. I think it's much worse.

"Can't play ball in the Study Hall"

Dear "Can't Play"
Yours is a common inner-city problem. The answer is obvious. Quit school. Tell your mother that Dr. Faithhealer said your priorities were in order and that she is not to tamper with the instructions I have given. The headaches will cease immediately. Once you fail to make the NBA, your headaches will return, but you'll be too bombed from drinking MD 20/20 to notice.

—Dr. Faithhealer,
While playing tennis the other day at the local country club, I felt a twinge of pain in my right arm. I'm pretty perplexed because I do not play tennis with my right hand. Can you please explain this amazing phenomenon to me?

"Playing Singles in Sucatan Valley"

Dear "Singles"
I'm truly outraged that you would needlessly bother me with your "problem" when there are so many deserving patients who rely on my insight to aid their recovery. However, you did comply by sending cash so I will solve your dilemma. You better cut that out immediately before you go blind. Do you realize how difficult it must be to try and hit a tennis ball without your sight. You should be ashamed.

Editor's note: "Singles" wrote again stating that he has found a mixed doubles partner to play with and the pain he was experiencing has subsided, but his sight, as attested by the very sight of his partner, was permanently damaged.

Hawk's Lose Game, Winning Season

By Patrick Fowler
Staff Writer

The Seahawks lost an opportunity to capture its winning record in the CAA conference by falling to the Tribe of William & Mary 2-0 Saturday. The defeat drops the Seahawks final record to 3-4 for the '88 campaign in the CAA and 6-5 overall. The game was a well fought, highly physical contest that contained no true star but instead a genuine team effort.

The Tribe's leading scorer, John Tuttle, scored the lone goal of the first half on a long 15 footer that just eluded goalie John Pinter's fingertips. The rest of the half showcased a defensive struggle with few shots on goal. Marc Rose led the Hawk's defense and acted as the field general for the team the entire game.

The second half the Hawks picked up the intensity another notch but to no avail as apparently the elements (wind) and the bouncing ball had other ideas. Facing a stiff head wind in the 1st half they gained the upper hand with the wind now at their backs. They pushed the pace and hustled after most balls but couldn't seem to find the mark. The defense, led by Rosie, played with tenacity and scrappiness! Frankly, it wasn't pretty by any standards but effectively neutralized the Tribe most of the game.

The offensive attacked vehemently but often attempted one extra pass rather than taking a shot on goal. "We had the half-shot chances in the box but tried to make the extra pass to have a clear shot on goal. You won't get that open of a shot against a good team," commented Blockmore. When the time grew short the Hawks tended to bunch up near the goal mouth frantically kicking the ball between one another in a vain attempt to score.

The Tribe, however, managed to penetrate the net again when John Tuttle headed a ricochet ball inside the far pole for a garbage goal. However, our team refused to cave-in and continually pressed the Tribe to the end. Both coaches agreed the wind was a factor to be dealt with out there. William & Mary coach Al Albert felt the game was well played but didn't care for the referees' calls and complaints throughout the game. Blockmore praised his team's "never-die" attitude but acknowledged some defensive mental mistakes. "We had some breakdown on defense but their goals were nice shots."

The Hawks will be in action next on October 15, playing at home against Davidson.

Devoley Named Player of the Week

UNCW Dede Devoley was named CAA Player of the Week after leading the lady Seahawks to a 3 win week that raised their league leading record to 20-1. Devoley is a two-time All-CAA performer.

UNCW's Lisa Mills, a senior co-captain, was named the CAA volleyball player of the week for the period ending Oct. 7.

Mills' 24 aces helped the Seahawks post two wins while raising their record to 17-1. Earlier, Mills was voted to the all-tournament team for her play in the Winthrop Tournament.

UNCW's Lady Spikers raised their seasonal record to 21-1 by pummeling Methodist College, 15-3, 15-8, 15-6, Tuesday night in a match played in Fayetteville.

UNCW's Lady Seahawks fired their 2nd consecutive 312 total to edge Methodist College by two shots in the first Spot Invitational played at Topsail Greens.

Methodists Joy Benhurst won the individual crown by shooting a 2 day total of 150, including a final round at 72.

UNCW's Paula Brozotowski rode her 2nd day' round of 73 to second place, finishing with a total of 151.

UNCW's Paige Cribb 158 Nina Van Drumpt 159 Mary Thomas 160. Methodist finished senond in the two-tem event.

Sophomore Nina Van Drumpt carded a final round one over par 73 to lead UNCW to an 8th place tie with Louisiana St. during the three day Beacon Woods Invitational Women's golf tournament in Tampa, Florida.

The land Hawks total of 939 was 33 shots behind champion Oklahoma who was led by individual medalist Nadia St. Marie who shot a 222, including a 3 under par, 69 Sunday.

Van Drumpt's total 233 tied her for 21 overall. UNCW Van Drumpt 233 Paula Brzotowski 237 Paige Cribb 237 Laura Covington 239 Mary Thomas 240.

Lady Hawk's Spike Camels; Await Showdown

By Mai Nguyen
Staff Writer

The Lady Hawks once again swept up a smashing victory over their ever so feeble Campbell opponents on Thursday's October 6th match. It was apparent in the first game that the weaker, submissive Camels would be easily ousted. Although Campbell displayed good defense maneuvers and passing techniques, their offense proved to be the ultimate downfall.

As the two teams plunged into game two, the action began to heat up. One of the most disturbing, yet highly comedic displays of confusion occurred when a Camel return splashed onto Seahawk territory as four Hawks stared in consternation. This peculiar show was remedied quickly as star player Lisa Mills retaliated with three powerful, consecutive aces. Angered by this blatant show of superiority, the Camels retorted by slamming the ball over the net and giving Mills a blow to the head as she valiantly tried to make the save. After a brief rest, Mills reentered the scene and dominated for the latter part of the game, which she ended by recruiting the 1st point, winning (15-5).

The third game only resulted on a series of entangling nuisances for both teams. Coach McDaniel noted that "Campbell's weaknesses allowed us to make many substitutions." This was immensely beneficial to Christy Monford who was allowed to show her budding talents.

Then at the pinnacle of Campbell's momentum, the second referee stopped the game to check out an improper Seahawk rotation which resulted from the numerous substitutions. The Hawks received no penalty due to a side out. Campbell never truly recovered from that brief interlude as UNCW overtook them in the remainder of the game ending it (15-8).

Player Heather Kimbler thought the match proceeded just too "slow and the substitutes caused a few problems." Needless to say, McDaniels believes that the Lady Hawks are quite prepared to duel George Mason and American Universities as they host the CAA conference Saturday October 8.

Polo Tourney Goes Swimmingly

by Patrick Fowler
Staff Writer

The Seahawk's young, inexperienced water polo team got its feet wet in a hurry as it swam away with the Southern Conference Invitational this weekend in Fredericksburg, Virginia. The team consisting of eight freshmen & sophomores outscored its opponents 55-20

The victorious Hawks started their way to the top by swamping Hampden-Sydney 24-8, Friday. Tournament MVP Mike McGinity, a sophomore from Northbrook, Illinois, slipped the ball pass the Washington floundering goalie for the winning margin (his 6th goal of the game) as the Hawks ducked pass Mary Washington 9-8 to reach Sunday's title game.

Their opponents, the Virginia Cavaliers, never had a chance and drowned miserably 22-4 to our Hawks. Mike McGinity accounted for 21 goals that the Seahawks scored. They will be in action next on October 23, when they will host the Southern League Tournament. Come out and root for the young Seahawks when they try to extend their winning ways.

THE STUDENT NEWSPAPER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA AT WILMINGTON

8 PAGES

AT A GLANCE

"Indoor Radon" Presentation

The UNCW Society of Physics Students will present James E. Watson, Jr., professor of environmental sciences and engineering at The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, discussing the controversial subject, "Indoor Radon," Friday, October 28, at 3 p.m. in Bryan Auditorium located in Morton Hall on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Following the talk, Watson will address students on "Career Opportunities in Health and Medical Physics."

All interested individuals are invited to attend. Refreshments will be served at 2:30 p.m. in the lobby of Morton Hall.

Atlantis Submissions Wanted

ATLANTIS, the literary-arts magazine of UNCW, seeks submissions of poetry, prose, graphics, and photography for publication. Submit to the Student Activities Center or to UNCW Box #3229. Fall deadline is November 14. Next staff meeting November 20 at 6:00 p.m.

Foreign Film Series

A German epic entitled "Ironhand" will be shown Sunday, October 30, at 2:30 p.m. in Randall Library Auditorium. Sponsored by the department of modern languages, the movie is free and open to the public. For more details call Dr. Lepaire at 3825.

"Ascent of Man" Series Continues

The 6th installment of the "Ascent of Man" series, The Starry Messenger, will be shown in the library auditorium at noon on Friday, October 28. For details call Dr. Davis at 3469 or Dr. Schneider at 3117.

Museum Of World Cultures

The UNCW Museum of World Cultures will sponsor an auction on Thursday, November 3, at 7 p.m. in the Onslow and Guilford rooms at the Ramada Inn located on Market Street. Previewing of items will be conducted from 5-7.

"Southern Women Writers"

A lecture on "Southern Women Writers: Reflections on Civil Rights," will be held Thursday, November 3, at 3:30 p.m. in MO-104. The program constitutes the second in a series of speakers being brought to the campus by UNCW's Distinguished Visiting Foundation Professor Will Campbell. Participating in the lecture are Beverly Farris, Betty Furstenberger and Faye Angelo, staff members of the journal, Teaching English In The Two-Year College and Camaraderie, a regional literary journal. Open to the public.

Daylight Savings Time

Daylight Savings Time changes this Sunday, October 30, at 2 a.m. Don't forget to set your clock back one hour.

Writers and Readers Series

The last program in the Fall 1988 Writers and Readers Series will be held TONIGHT at 8 in Bryan Auditorium. William Harmon, professor of English at UNCW-CH, will be the featured guest. Sponsored by the creative writing program, all faculty and staff are invited. Reception to follow. The Community Appearance Commission, Peoples Bank and Trust and Wilmington Parks and Recreation Department cordially invite you to meet the clean up crusader, a lovable litter-fighting chipmunk, on Saturday, October 29 at Independence Mall. Dave Risley and Gary Nunnelee will present a free magic show at 2:15 and 3:15 in honor of the clean up crusader. For more information call Wilmington Parks and Recreation at 341-7860.

Senior Class Meeting

Nov. 2, 5:00 p.m. RM 207 UU
To discuss plans for December and May graduations and report on Convocation Committee meeting.

"Collegians For Socialism"

"Collegians for Socialism" will be meeting Thursday, Nov. 3 at 4:00 p.m. in Union Rm. 210. All faculty, staff, and students are welcomed. For information contact Denny Best 343-9827.

Hanover Gymnasium was packed with men and women in business suits and ambitious students with hands full of literature when Career Day 1988 went into full swing Wednesday.

Sponsored by the Career Planning and Placement Center, Career Day coordinated the presence of 76 federal, state and local organizations and businesses in a job fair for UNCW students and faculty. "This has been the most successful Career Day ever," said Jim Braye, director of the CP&PC. "Chapel Hill had 92 groups at their career day; proportionally, that's an excellent turnout for UNCW."

Several of the representatives for the groups expressed their pleasure with the turnout of students and the organization of the whole program. "Over the last 12 to 14 months, I have been able to hire six people from UNCW," said Dorothy Moore, the representative from Wachovia Banks. "We keep coming to Career Day because it has a good reputation and we can find good people."

Sean Kilmartin of F. N. Wolf & Company, Inc., a brokerage firm from New York which was attending its first Career Day of UNCW's, was enthused about the entire program. "UNCW has done a tremendous job with this set up -- they are to be commended."

He added, "The publicity for this was very well done; we talked to freshmen and sophomores, who often don't come out to these fairs."

Ted Bodenschatz with BB&T commented, "It is great when you go to a school and sophomores and juniors come to the job fair-- that way they can assess their interests and take courses which will correspond with the requirements of the corporations they are interested in."

Jack Morgan, of Barnett Banks, Inc. commented on the value of the exposure business receive at career days. "A non-threatening environment like this is extremely beneficial to our exposure." He also talked about the kind of experience most companies are looking for these days; "A liberal arts, basic education for two years is important. That gives a person a feel for different fields of life," he said. "Any corporation you talk to will want that."

The FBI was represented by Chuck Richards, who called UNCW "a fine school" and discussed what the FBI looks for in its people. "We require a four year degree and three years of working experience in any field," he said. "We have especially good luck with military personnel and investigative reporters, because they are already semi-acustomed to the kind of work we do."

"Working for the FBI is a challenge--not many people still like their job after 20 years," Richards commented. This tied into Kilmartin's view on hiring; "If a person majors in something they love and they get a job they love, they will probably stay with that job, whether it relates to their major or not. We can't teach someone to learn."

"The real evaluation of Career Day will be how many people follow up on who they talked to today," said Braye. "In the next few weeks we'll see who contacts the organizations, or calls us, and we'll know if they are really interested."

"But for next year's Career Day, we'll have to move to Trask...we are outgrowing this place!"

New Student Union Annex Progresses

BY MELISSA AMBROSE
SEAHAWK STAFF WRITER

Over the last couple of years UNCW has seen rapid growth. This increase in population had led to a decrease in space. The administration, being aware of this, has made plans for a new university annex.

The annex will be where the current university warehouse is now located. When completed, it will be two times the size the warehouse is now.

"The annex will consist of six major parts," said Anne Devaney, Associate Director of the University Union. A gameroom three times the size of the one currently in the union is one of those parts. "We plan to have video games along the walls and eight to ten billiard tables and a couple of table tennis games," said Devaney. As with the information center in the Union an attendant will be on duty at all times to check out pool sticks and to make change for coin-operated games.

A new post office will make up another section. "The new post office will be 1/3 larger than the one now," said Devaney. "The boxes will be moved from the union to the annex and hundreds more will be added."

A new feature that will be in the annex will be a "Coffee House." The Coffee House will have a limited menu of deli subs and pizza. There will be no deep fryers "so french fries and onion rings will not be on the menu," commented Devaney. There will be a projection television to watch the "big game" and rental movies. The Coffee House will also have a small built-in stage for performances such as stand up comedians.

A new post office will make up another section. "The new post office will be 1/3 larger than the one now," said Devaney. "The boxes will be moved from the union to the annex and hundreds more will be added."

"Another feature of the annex will be a huge lobby just right for soliciting tables. It will also make an excellent meeting and greeting place for conferences," added Devaney.

She emphasizes, probably the largest and most important feature of the new annex is the large multipurpose room. "It will be around 6,000 sq. ft., four times as large as Room 100 in the union, with a high ceiling to accommodate an upstairs movie projector, so people coming and going will not block the picture," said Devaney.

This room will also be used for catering dances, banquets and receptions and will be able to hold almost 600 people. It will be able to be divided into three unequal parts. Half of it will make up one part and the half will be divided again into two unequal parts, the largest of which will be a lecture room that will hold 40-50 people.

The University personnel office and the quick-copy function of the print shop will be in the annex as well.

What will happen to the Union? Well, some changes will be made in it as well. The information center will be moved to where the post office is now and the administration will move downstairs. Part of the Hawk's Nest will be used for a catering area and Career Planning will move upstairs.

Construction to Bring Changes for Residents

These apartments behind Hall '85 are hoped to help the housing crunch which occurs every year at UNCW by providing an additional 400 spaces. Construction is expected to be done in time for it to open this fall '89.

Picture this. A student gets the word that the didn't make next year's housing lottery and will be forced to find housing off campus. This scene is burned into the memory of all too many UNCW students, and it is a problem that will not be resolved easily, although the university is trying to meet the housing demands of the students with a new on-campus apartment complex.

At a cost of $7.4 million, the new apartments located behind Hall '85 will be a welcomed addition to UNCW when it opens in the fall of 1989. The new coed complex will house 400 students and will significantly reduce the deficit between the housing available and the students' needs.

The new, unnamed apartments are more like suites in that each apartment building will house 30 people, with 10 people on each of the three floors. Charles Maimone, associate Dean of Students/Residence Life, reports that "each suite will have a living and dining room area, a kitchen and 2 full bathrooms. There will be 4 double bedrooms and 2 single bedrooms in each."

"This new apartment complex will certainly help," comments Maimone, considering that Belk Dorm, Graham Dorm, and Hewlett Dorm only house 200 students each, while "the new complex will be as extensive in space and capacity as the existing campus apartments."

There is no doubt that the new complex will help serve the housing needs of students wishing to live on campus but "obviously won't solve the housing problem," reports the Office of Residence Life. There exists a great demand for on campus housing as evidenced by the fact that students are already "tripping up" in residence halls.

Although UNCW has a growing student body, which increases the demand for on campus housing, our problem is trivial compared to other universities. College Press Service reports that the University of Miami had 200 students living at a local Holiday Inn for a semester, due to overbooking of students hoping there will be some "no shows." Students had legitimate complaints concerning this unorthodox dorm, the best of which argued that the students were isolated from the campus.

Some may remember when a similar situation occurred at UNCW; but for different reasons. When Hall '85 was to open for the fall of '85, the Residence Hall wasn't completed on time, forcing students to live in the Quality Inn Hotel on College Road for several weeks.

On the brighter side, Charles Maimone commented that he is "excited about this new 40K student complex. When completed, campus will accommodate 2000 students and approximately 4500 will live off campus."

New Science Club Formed

I.S.I.S. (Interdepartmental Students in Science) is a multi-disciplinary association for anyone interested in the natural sciences. Dr. Jack "Rocks R' Us" Hall is our advisor. We plan to discuss topics such as toxic waste, water quality, de-Rainforestation, space colonization and more. Contact UNCW box 20120 or come to a meeting next Tuesday at 2:30, Snackbox; or see Beth Orlando, John Walston, Jodi, or Marc.

"Costume" Volleyball Tournament

Coastal Outdoor Volleyball and Wrightsville Beach Parks & Recreation Department is sponsoring a Mixed Doubles "Costume" Volleyball Tournament on Sunday, October 30, on the sand courts at Wrightsville Beach Park. Players must arrive and play in costume, although costumes may be adjusted for safe play.

The entry fee is $10/per team and registration will be held at 9:30 a.m. Prizes and awards will be presented for Division Winners, Best Overall Costume, and Best Team Costume.

For more information, contact Ray Sugg at 256-4744.

Mock Election Results

The Political Science Club held a mock Presidential election on October 24, 25, & 26. The election was held in the Student Union and votes were taken between 1:00-2:00 p.m. each day. The results of the election are as follows; out of 161 votes, George Bush received 99 and Michael Dukakis received 60. Two voters went in names which were not on the ballot.

Computer Classes Offered

Classes in "Lotus 1-2-3" and "Desktop Publishing" have been added to the series of computer classes being offered through the Office of Special Programs at UNC-Wilmington. The classes, to run the first week in November, will be taught by Dr. Jake Halford who has served on the faculty of The Citadel and U.S. Naval Academy and has been a computer instructor for nine years.

The series includes "Desktop Publishing," 8:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Monday, October 31; "Introduction to the IBM PC Computer," 8:00 a.m.-Noon, Tuesday and Wednesday, November 1 and 2; LOTUS 1-2-3, 1:00-5:00 p.m. or 6:00-10:00 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday, November 1 and 3; WordPerfect, 8:00 a.m.-Noon, and Beginning dBASE III, 1:00-5:00 p.m., Thursday and Friday, November 3 and 4.

Fee is $109 per class but will be discontinued to $99 for early enrollment.

For more information, call the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Bowling Tournament

A bowling tournament will be held in association with the Halloween season and is scheduled for 1 p.m. this Saturday, October 29, at Cardinal Lanes. Sponsored by the UNCW Association of Nursing Students, the event is part of a state-wide effort to help the homeless. The entry fee is $10 which includes $3 for bowling three games and a $6 donation to the homeless. Prizes will be awarded. Deadline to enter is 12:30 p.m., Saturday. Call Ron Schnell at 799-3023.

R.O.T.C. Cadet Of The Month Announced

SUBMITTED BY
TERRANCE CARTER

The cadet for the month of October is Steve Maxner. He is the UNCW ROTC cadet battalion commander. He was selected for this position on the basis of his academic record, previous military science grades, and his performance at the 1988 Advanced Camp. Maxner is a junior majoring in History, and is an army veteran where he ranked E-5.

While in the army, he was with Special Forces at Ft. Bragg, N.C. Maxner was one of three cadets to receive an academic scholarship in October. He won out over all other applicants for the United States Automobile Association National Scholarship.

This recognition and his demonstration of leadership qualities in organizing the cadet battalion for the 1988-1989 year led to his selection as the cadet of the month.

Second Annual Trip To D.C. Planned

SUBMITTED BY
TERRANCE CARTER

On October 12, 1988, the Department of Military Science and the Political Science Department joined hands to host a trip to Washington, D.C. This was the second annual trip of this nature to our nation's capital. The trip consisted of various activities which included a tour of the national monuments, a VIP tour of the White House, and visits to the Capitol Building, Pentagon, Supreme Court, and the Library of Congress.

The students had a chance to talk with N.C. Congressmen Charlie Rose and Martin Lancaster who answered questions on various current topics. Among other things that were seen on the trip was Bull Run. This group of students was probably among the last to see this site as a bill is now in Congress on whether or not to appropriate funds for building a shopping mall on this site.

As of now, the spaces in existing residence halls are currently occupied by approximately 60% freshman and 40% upperclassmen. "The ratio of freshmen to upperclassmen will not change," reported the office of residence life. The ratio might not change "but the lottery system has," stated Maimone.

The new housing lottery has recently been changed to allow and guarantee housing for freshmen the remainder of their education at UNCW once they obtained a dorm room. The upperclassmen must still use the old lottery system.

The $7.4 million price tag of the new apartment complex sheds light on the real reason why new housing is hard to come by for UNCW.

"The cost of construction has soared over the past decade or so," said Maimone. UNCW still owes money to the backs for every residence hall except Galloway, which was paid off this past year. "It takes at least 10 years to pay off a major construction project like that," said the Office of Residence Life. He also mentioned that the rates charged for housing are "self-serving." This means that all the money collected for the resident hall space is used to maintain and develop all of the on-campus housing projects. Maimone further maintained that there is "no profit involved for the university."

While UNCW may admit to a housing problem, it is still not as pressing a problem as it is on other campuses across the country, and we can be thankful for that. The real problem with on campus housing stems directly from the availability of funds and space to build on, with no resolution in the near future. And in the midst of these problems, some students will look back in the spring of '89 and remember when they didn't make the lottery the semester before.

Reunion Response Was Excellent

SUBMITTED BY
SARA SCHILLING

The office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs recently held reunions for all summer orientation participants. The reunions held in the University Union and sponsored by Pizza Movers of Wilmington were very successful with over 300 students participating. "This is the first year we've held the reunions on such a large scale and we're delighted with the turnout. The responsiveness and candidness of the students and orientation leaders was excellent," said Dr. Richard Mullendore, Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

The goal of the Orientation Reunions is to get feedback from new students on their experiences in the first few months of school. Preliminary results indicate that a great percentage of the students plan to stay and complete their education at UNCW. Students' concerns were centered around parking, food services, Student Health and Wellness and noise in the residence halls.

An inventory assessing new students' satisfaction with UNCW is being scanned by the optical scanner in the computing center. A formal report of results will be available in December from the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs.

PRESENTS THE

THE UNIVERSITY PROGRAM BOARD

Master's offerings increase here

by SCOTT WHEELER
NEWS EDITOR

As the needs of UNCW's students continue to grow at a very swift pace, the University strives to accommodate them. The latest step in UNCW's struggle to keep up with the needs of its students is the addition of the seven new graduate programs.

The master's degree in geology (which has four enrolled students as of now) has already been started and is being offered for the first time in the history of the school. This graduate program complements the other programs currently offered; which are, marine biology, business and education.

The other six programs will be offered to students for the first time in the fall of '89. They include: teaching, chemistry, biology, English, history and mathematics. The biology portion of the new master's programs will add a general biology option to the present more specialized courses offered for the master's degree in marine biology.

"In 1985, after receiving the okay from the board, we had to examine which of the departments would best be served by a graduate program" says Dr. James McGowan, once acting Dean of the Graduate School and a major force in bringing it to UNCW.

The new Dean of the Graduate School, Dr. Eric G. Bolen, comes to us from Texas Tech University, a school of approximately 23,500. At Texas Tech he was the Associate Dean of the Graduate School. Bolen was chosen from a field of over 140 applicants from around the country, all of whom are in the forefront of their fields. Biology happens to be Bolen's love.

"I'm delighted to be here. It's a challenge and a tremendous opportunity for me and the university to develop these programs into successful master's degree level graduate schools" says Bolen.

One of these degrees, the Masters of Arts in Teaching will apply to all disciplines. This discipline will require the student to take twenty-four credit hours in the individual's chosen field while taking twelve additional hours in the graduate level education curricula.

"The M.B.A. offered by the Cameron School of Business continues to be a strong attraction for students who wish to pursue an education in the field of business administration," adds Bolen.

"In the beginning, the individual departments that were selected to receive the new graduate programs had to develop a prospectus which examined the need for the graduate level courses and the capability of the department to carry graduate level curricula," comments McGowan, who is now the Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

"The prospectus is then transferred over to the planning board, where it is approved by the Chancellor."

"After winning approval, it is then sent to the General Administration in Chapel Hill. They go over it with a "fine-toothed comb" and make recommendations for any improvements to the university."

"Finally, the Board of Governors grants authorization for the prospectus (which is a request for authorization) and we bring it back here to begin the planning stages," adds McGowan.

These "new" programs are not as new as they may seem. The origins of the infant master's program date back to 1985 when the UNC Board of Governors authorized the planning stages of the whole process. The individual departments started planning their curricula shortly after the authorization was handed down.

"We decided to take our time so that we could develop a top-notch graduate level program," adds McGowan.

Even though there will be an increase in enrollment for graduate students and undergrads as well, we will not see a mass influx of new faculty members at any time. This is because, "the university has been hiring the professors for its new graduate courses over the past four or five years. Choosing the highest quality personnel to take the new positions which are constantly becoming open as a result of the rapid expansion of the university over the last few years," remarks McGowan.

Currently the university has 265 graduate students enrolled; but, with the addition of these new graduate schools, that number is expected to increase dramatically in the near future.

Annex from p.1

"Perhaps the most important change that will take place in the Union will be that SGA, Student organizations and Leadership programs will be integrated into one area. That area being what is now Room 100 and Career Planning and Placement." Devaney feels this is a good move, "It will allow the different groups to work closer and get to know each other better."

There will be approximately seven new meeting rooms created in the union. Therefore, with the new meeting rooms in the union and the new annex, student organizations and students will have more space.

Construction of the Annex will begin in late spring or early summer. It is "hoped" that it will be completed around Spring 1991. Devaney sums it up with the opinion most at UNCW hold: "with the University growing as it is, the annex will be a tremendous advantage."

This blueprint is the ground site plan for the new Union annex, to be completed in the Spring of 1991. It will include more meeting rooms and eating places, and many changes will affect the existing Union in the meantime.

A Month of SGA Madness

by David Vaughn
SGA Correspondent

It's autumn for the SGA money tree, and the leaves are certainly going fast. With less than three thousand dollars in their budget for the remainder of the year, our Student Government more than likely will stop funding of new organizations.

Thanks to further distribution of moola there will only be $1703 left unspent in the SGA account if all the Finance Committee budgets are approved. It will be set aside for emergency spending. Monday night the senate managed to allocate nearly $9000 to six clubs and the emergency fund. Three clubs' budgets were unapproved because they failed to go through proper channels, but money is still there for them if they hurry. Club Rugby's funds were frozen when it was discovered that they were not a registered club, but if they register they can still receive their cash back, so ground hasn't really been won there.

The most interesting feature of the Monday debate was that every single budget was heard by the senate, instead of the usual mentality that goes "consent!" Robert Smith commended the senate for hearing the budgets that they were voting on. (One organization, the UNCW Surf Club, was heralded as being "more impressive than SGA itself") Except for the Atlantis, all the budgets were discussed. However, it seemed to be the same few senators encouraging the debate over and over, which says something about senate participation. It's another good reason for students to sit in on SGA meetings... few do.

Still, the SGA will persevere, unless one of our organizations goes over budget again. Then SGA will have to forget that organization until the next year (assuming they will again fund them) unless there remains enough money within SGA's general fund to bail them out.

Not so with the Fledgling, though. The students will have a yearbook this year. In a nearly unanimous vote during the October 11th meeting, the Senate approved the Fledgling's $13,500 budget. Kristine Solomon said that if it had come through the Finance Committee it would probably have passed by consent. Sadly, there were NO students at the week before last's meeting to support the yearbook when the discussion turned to its request for funds, a fact Tim Lee brought up in his debate against it. There weren't many things he could say, since Ed Shiffler, the editor, had all his facts ready for the Senate to look over. Lee has not been present at the meeting of the Finance Committee for the past two weeks, and this week he would not enter the room where his presence would have allowed the committee to have quorum. There has been talk of his impeachment or resignation in the Senate.

Aside from this the SGA has continued to be active. There have been several speakers who have addressed the Senate, four new senators have been added, and Monika Mohr was chosen to be the new Parliamentarian. Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Bryan Holler, has been busy keeping up with the attendance records and the spahy within the SGA was shocking. He said he would "take this [attendance] policy seriously. If you can't make the meetings, get outta here." The Constitution has been amended to the effect that the treasurer, attorney general or Senate secretary can now run for President of the SGA without previously having been a senator. Todd Shaver also criticized the Senate for increasing the number of senators on the Media and Publications Board without having any senators to fill those seats. Two seats have been filled since that statement was made, up 200%.

Robert Smith, SGA vice president, appoints people to the MPB. Monika Mohr's motion to force senators to serve on at least one committee as part of their SGA duties failed. The senate did not speak to the Supreme Court nominee presented to them. The University Program Board's name was changed to the Association for Campus Entertainment (ACE).

Next week's meeting will convene at 6:00 p.m. in room 100 of the UU, students are encouraged to attend these meetings as the decisions made there directly affect them in some respect.

"The Great Balancing Act", a workshop presented by Veronica Olesby and Tina Butler at a conference at the University of South Carolina for the Association of College Unions International, (ACUI) was named the best in Region 5, and will be presented at the International Conference in Columbus, Ohio in March.

Olesby, a building manager and Butler, an office assistant were prepared for the workshop by Deborah Haywood, coordinator of Liv Well. They organized the workshop to deal with "Campus activities, a social life, studies, exercise, work nutrition, etc., etc. How do you begin to find the right mix for you of all these demands on your time? The session presented some guidelines and provided time for discussion and personal assessment." We wish them the best of luck when they go to Ohio.

SDI, The Alternative To Mutual Assured Destruction

David A. Rose
Executive Director,
UNCW College Republicans

On March 23, 1983, President Ronald Reagan unveiled a revolutionary idea. A concept which would eliminate the threat of nuclear war. It is called SDI.

Many students are unaware of the importance of the Strategic Defense Initiative.

Opposition to SDI is the result of ignorance that someone has of the concept. However, the opposition has begun to crumble as the public becomes concerned of the possibility of a frightening accidental or unauthorized missile launch or perhaps a surprise communist attack.

Until the proposal of SDI, we relied on the theory of Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD). This simply said that if you blow us up, we blow you up. Unfortunately, some Soviets think they can win a nuclear war. The Soviet Union now has the first strike capability which means that if a surprise attack occurs, they could wipe out our missile silos before we get the chance to launch. The threat of destroying the world several times over doesn't apply if the ability is destroyed.

To enforce the idea that the Soviets are not concerned with MAD think about this. For 19 years they have been developing a strategic defense system of their own. In 1960, the United States began working on the concept of SDI. Our system was based at Grand Forks and around 1976 the government dismantled it. However, the Soviets continued with theirs. Today, the Soviet Union have a country-wide anti-ballistic missile system, a violation of the ABM treaty (and now we trust them with the INF treaty?)

Let's answer some questions from the liberal-peace activists who don't understand the process of SDI. Once someone sees the facts, support for SDI is easy. To begin, we are not talking about Star Wars. It is called Strategic Defense Initiative or simply SDI. We are not talking about taking war into space. These devices are defensive. They only go into action if the Soviets launch an attack to destroy us or if a missile is accidentally launched. All parts used are non-nuclear with one exception—an X-ray laser.

There will be no nuclear explosions in space. There will be no clouds of radioactive dust and no damage on the ground. Since most bombs won't even explode, the "nuclear winter" effect is greatly diminished.

The campaign implying a nuclear war in space directly supports Soviet propaganda. SDI will not trigger an arms race in space. The Soviets are already racing ahead on missile defense as fast as they can.

Critics' main attempt to discredit SDI is convincing Americans it just wouldn't work. Examine their advocates. Only four scientists in the entire country with full access to information on missile defense say that. This goes against 50 leading missile experts, the brilliant weapons experts Lowell Wood at Livermore and Gregory Canaran at Los Alamos, and thousands of scientists and engineers actually working in missile defense. Even if SDI only stops 90 percent of the missiles, the communists will know they can't knock out our retaliatory power. Their homeland would lie in ruins. They would never attack under those circumstances, thus, a 90 percent defense against Soviet missiles gives 100 percent protection.

Cost? For the basic two-layer defense is $60 billion spread over five years, or $12 billion a year. For the advance three-or-four layer defense, the cost is roughly $12 billion a year for 10 years. The figures of $1 trillion tossed around by Soviet communists and domestic opponents of SDI are off the wall. Each year, with new technology, costs are reduced. These figures might sound high, but note that we are spending more than $40 billion a year on nuclear weapons of destruction designed to keep the Soviets out of our backyard by the threat of retaliation.

Keep in mind closed minded liberals: 2 years ago a Soviet nuclear sub was on fire and sinking. It housed 16 missiles with 32 nuclear warheads. What if they had been accidentally launched? We cannot intercept any ICBMs at this time...

Economic Reliance, Not SDI, Answers Nuclear Threat

Wendell L. Jones
Vice-President,
UNCW College Democrats

It would be naive foolery to presume that Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) would either put the United States in a position of strategic superiority or provide an adequate defense from nuclear attack. In fact, the only foreseeable and certain effect it would have in global politics would be to accelerate an already overburdened and crazy arms race between the two superpowers. There are, that I can see, only two defenses against all-out nuclear war: unilateral disarmament and mutual economic reliance between ourselves and the Soviet Union. Since the former is impossible in that technology cannot regress, we are left with only the latter. All other equations equal ground zero.

Gore Vidal once said that the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. are the most natural allies. I agree. Unfortunately, the current administration cannot seem to pull its feeble head out of the sands of a rapidly changing global political situation and see the advantage of increased inter-dependence with the Soviets. They have in the last two elections emphasized the grain embargo levied against the Soviets in 1980 by President Carter as a cruel and useless blow serving only to break the weakened back of the American farmer. Yet they have failed to go beyond on two counts: first, they have done nothing in terms of increasing trade and dialogue, and second, the current Republican nominee, the most vocal of current embargo critics, has as his foreign affairs advisor the man who gave us the embargo, Zbigniew Brzezinski.

SDI itself is a dangerous and not so humorous joke being played on the American people. Though many Americans think their defense and stability would be protected from the unthinkable, that is not at all the case. According to Jerome Slater and David Goldfisher, two international affairs experts, the Reagan administration has acknowledged the primary purpose of SDI is not the protection of the population. Instead, its primary mission is the protection of U.S. retaliatory forces and their command, communications, and control networks. (Political Science Quarterly, 101:839-56). It is impossible to protect the population as there is not so much as an optimistic clue of sufficient technology on the horizon. In other words, if the Soviets attack, aiming towards our population centers as opposed to our strategic offenses, (which most experts agree they would if in fact we were to deploy SDI), you and I would die. Reagan, Bush and the boys would survive—at least long enough to destroy every innocent man, woman and child on earth. Further survival by them would be unimaginable for two reasons; first, they would sit on the throne as Caliban did, king of himself, second the official policy of MAD (Mutual Assured Destruction) which guarantees all-out destructive force by the attacked using all weapons still available. Both countries currently retain MAD as their last deterrent.

To further the fallacy of SDI, consider, again according to Slater and Goldfisher, "the judgement of most nongovernmental scientists and other experts on BMD (Ballistic Missile Defense) is that the defense cannot win, for any system deployed by either side...can be destroyed, overwhelmed or circumvented." The theory of most foreign policy and defense specialists is, in the event of nuclear war by either side, the first target would be the others defense systems. Also, the system can be easily circumvented by expanded use of Trident submarines, long-range strategic bombers and even heavy megaton weapons carried in by a single individual and left in a suitcase in the desired locale.

Other threats posed by anti-ballistic missile systems is that they would have a destabilizing effect in the event of serious superpower crises. Regardless of which side is superior, the threat of a preemptive first strike would logically increase. From the point of view of the greater defended position, a quick first strike would likely lessen the arsenal of the other decreasing significantly the workload for the ABM systems. From the point of view of the full capacity, effectively overwhelming the other's defenses.

Probably the most frightening aspect of SDI is the opinion of George Bush that with SDI the United States would be in a position to win a "limited" nuclear exchange. The idea is horrifyingly absurd. Once again, referring to Slater and Goldfisher, "...a limited launch of nuclear weapons could trigger a spasm exchange between the superpowers, turning a horrible catastrophe into apocalypse." The thought that Bush would consider such foolery leads me to question the depth of his understanding of lesser defended, a first strike would get their weapons off the ground in the desire to launch at nuclear war, world politics and the Soviet mindset. His continual reference to his "record," if one may call it such, thus reflects the words of other western diplomats that Bush was "often befuddled and confused." SDI is a "Pyrrhic technological triumph, a weapon in search of a rationale," (Slater, Goldfisher). Continued waste of billions of taxpayers' dollars on a dangerous, nonproductive system is a major issue in 1988. Reason brings peace, futile defense ends in death.

College Education Not Needed To Reproduce

Dear Editor:

Some thoughts on the commentary of October 6, 1988: I would not label myself a feminist either, perhaps you or others would.

I do realize that other people are mistreated in this world and that I, as a woman, am not the first. However, I do not see what that has to do with the injustice being done. In effect, you imply that it is okay that I am being mistreated since I am not the first, or that my cause is less important than that of the black man or the homosexual. Or, it is necessary that all "minorities" band together in some sort of feminist-black-homosexual-Jewish-and whoever else feels wronged movement. If one group of people is being treated unfairly it hurts all people, regardless of place and time.

I am supposed to forgive those who mistreat women because they are misinformed? That is like using ignorance of the law as a defense. I am to forgive this person because he was a part of a high school survey that shows he believes there are races of people with subnormal intelligence? We will just have to wait until the "technology" (whatever that means) catches him up? When will that happen? Just what is this mysterious technology?

Although you do not specifically state that you abhor stereotypes, you do say that they hurt all people. Then you go on to state that the people "who can provide a comfortable life...are the ones who are not having children, and...[those with]...starving children are having an abundance." Surely this is an absurd generalization.

I certainly feel sorry for the women on 20/20 who find themselves without a husband or enough time to have children. However, it is they who made their choices in life; the feminist movement did not choose for them, but only provided the choice. No one is telling me to get a high paying job and drive a BMW or else. It is nice to know though, that if I had such goals I would have some chance of achieving them.

There are only two women in my calculus book's "Honor Roll," a list and short biography of people who have made contributions to this vital subject. One, a Russian woman who lived in the late 19th century, found herself barred from attending any Russian university. She married a man (platonically) to be able to travel. Once in Germany she learned of the great mathematician Karl Weierstrass, but found she would not be allowed to attend the university in Berlin either. Fortunately he gave her private lessons. How lucky I am to be able to freely attend any university. I think I can thank the feminist movement for that.

Finally, I must wonder why you are here, at UNCW, if your goal in life is to "be a mother first". Your use of a number in this phrase suggests that you truly believe that you can be more than a mother and not, as you state earlier, have to choose between marriage and career. In any case, you certainly do not need a college education in order to reproduce. In addition, I agree that the family structure is a good one, but I am not convinced it is the only one, or that the duties (the running of the household) cannot be shared between all members of the family.

Perhaps it is indeed better to be at home, taking care of children, than to be out "chasing dinner". Thanks to the feminists, I can try both; I have a choice. Maybe I will find, like my aspiring physician friend who tells me that her husband is the more nurturing, patient parent, that I have talents which lie away from home and hearth. And perhaps I can contribute something unexpected to the world.

Candidates Are Being Sold Like Artificial Cheese Spread

This morning I sat in the Dixie Grill and drank coffee and listened. Listened to the regulars, a diverse group of businessmen, truck drivers, blue collar workers, and professionals, express their dissatisfaction with the current presidential campaign. My unscientific poll revealed that most of these average Americans couldn't stand George Bush or Michael Dukakis. The only person who was excited about either candidate was the grill's owner who happens to be of Greek origin.

What is happening to American presidential candidates? They are being homogenized, processed, and sold like artificial cheese spread.

Did you catch the debates? If you did you saw two men reciting carefully prepared and memorized statements to the questions given them (even if their answers had little to do with the actual question). What about detailed proposals on how to reduce the federal deficit? It may be the biggest problem facing our nation, but you won't hear any real talk on that or any other issue. You will hear a lot of abstract talk about "values," "A thousand points of light," and "the best America is yet to come." What the hell are they talking about? Do they think that the American public is that gullible and stupid? Are we?

I don't know about you, but I want a little reality in this campaign. I'd like to hear a bit of reasoned debate on the issues. Issues? What issues? After eight years of Reagan's Dr. Feel-good presidency, we have been lifted into believing that issues are not important. We don't want to hear about problems. Instead, the public would prefer to hear the watchman tell us that all is well. Regardless of whether or not the ship is taking on water. A good bed time story is always preferable to a dose of reality which might be bitter.

Now that the media advertising gurus who told us "scrubbing bubbles" are in charge of both parties' campaigns, things will get worse before they get better. If you hear either of the candidates say something, anything, that sounds remotely candid, unscripted, or impromptu, please, vote for the poor sod. Let's put an end to "flag-factory" politics before it's too late.

A few weeks ago you may remember a short report on CNN and other national networks about the discovery of three California Grey whales trapped underneath ice in Alaska.

According to locals, whales become trapped beneath the ice every year and thus perish. This is assumed because whales wash ashore in the spring every year preserved beneath the ice until the thaw. At any rate, these whales were found and therefore capable of being saved.

Within a few days, scientists had arrived on the scene to maintain breathing holes for the whales. The news stories became more prevalent and America's heart went out to them. Money came to those trying to save the whales, and an aerator was donated by someone to keep the ice from freezing and engineers came in to try breaking holes in the ice at intervals of about 50 yards trying to make some progress toward the open ocean and the whales responded.

American public weeped for it. Two were left and the effort continued.

To the rescue an unlikely hero; the Soviets. The Soviet press was not in the dark about the whales and their hearts went out as well. According to news reports the Soviet public was asking where they could send money to assist the noble effort at hand. Instead the Soviets sent one of the most advanced icebreakers in the world to the scene. Within three days they freed the whales.

A cooperative effort between the two most powerful nations in the world freed two whales. Yes, this was an amazing task, politics were put aside and the job got done. It wasn't a Republican effort or a Democratic effort.

More facts to add the stew: 1) Iceland recently approved the killing of 25 whales for whale hunters. 2) Killer whales are currently hunting off the coast of British Columbia and Washington state. These whales hunt in packs and have little mercy for their cousins, the greys, at dinner time. 3) The Japanese, a nation very dependant upon its fishing industry, uses nets that extend for up to thirty miles in width. These nets have no preferences in what they trap, and kill everything they ensnare.

In short, if the world is so concerned with saving whales then why not make it a unilateral effort? If the Soviets and Americans can save two whales trapped beneath the ice of Alaska, then why can't they save twenty from being netted or killed? Hopefully this heroic deed will not be the last in the never-ending fight to preserve something in this world for future generations. If not, then let Darwin's "Survival of the Fittest" prevail, then we will tell our grandchildren what whales were.

Nature, in her indifference to the world, took one of the whales, the smallest, and the

Fixation On Finding Answers

It is in the questions; it's all in the questions! I think that our university life gives us a fixation on finding answers. And finding answers certainly has its place. But I am deeply convinced that our university years serve us better as an arena for identifying and exploring significant questions of our life.

My concern is that so many of us get caught up in simply fulfilling requirements that are set before us everyday that we do not even take the time to become aware of the deeper issues that are going on in our lives. We are graced with an incredible capacity for self-awareness, reflection and modification of our beliefs, values and behavior. Such is the wonder of our human condition! But, for many, simply getting up each day, getting our work done, dealing with finances, working on relationships, all take so much of our time and our energy that there is a tendency not to develop our capacities for reflection and growth.

Our very life and developmental process leads us to deal with incredibly significant issues and sometimes we make decisions about values, life partners, faith, etc. with no self-awareness at all. We simply buy into the values and attitudes of our immediate culture. In my experience, the more I have worked to identify the significant questions going on at any period in my life within me, the better I have been able to be intentional in making the things happen that I need for life to feel satisfying and significant.

Here are some questions that I think are valuable: What do I value? Who am I? What do I want to do with my life? What do I fear? What brings me joy? When am I in a state of well-being? How do I know God? What have I learned through pain? Who is Jesus for me? When and where do I feel safe?

We don't ask these questions with the expectation of finding some immediate answer. Their role is to direct our thinking and active exploring of significant issues in our life. The issues identified by such questions are the really important "stuff" out of which a meaningful life is shaped. To remain focused on daily tasks and concerns that pop immediately to mind as we wake up, is to risk living out our whole life without clarity or focus or any deep abiding sense of value and significance.

What are your questions? Identify them! Work on them! They are your avenues to a life of increasing depth and meaning and satisfactions.

Beer, The Unpardonable Sin

I recently heard a complaint that my column has been a bit on the whimsy side lately. It was a well timed complaint because I was thinking the same. I've been aiming my column towards "the real world" so I can try to impress some real newspapers when I graduate. (Lots of luck, right) I'm over due for a column devoted to bitching. So here it is:

Has anyone but me noticed that we are slowly losing our rights? (What an American thing to say.) The government is coming down on us "innocent" people because of a few trouble makers.

Since when has beer drinking become a crime? It became obvious to me during the Riverfest. Front street was warm and the streets were closed off for a big party. Music blared from all directions, and drinking a beer seemed like the thing to do under those circumstances. Hey, I'm an American. I notice the hundreds of beer commercials on the tube. Beer is the American way, right?

I walked over to the beer tent or actually it was the parking deck. I was greeted by four I.D. checkers and two armed cops. After my hand was stamped (I hate that.) I purchased a beer and sat among all the other drinkers. I suddenly realized that I was isolated from the Riverfest. We were caged in by chicken wire. I pushed my nose into the wire and watched the "good" people milling around on the outside. A little girl looked at me with a frightened face and asked her mom, "Why is that man in that cage?" Her mother looked at me as though I were an ax murderer and grabbed her little hand and shuttled her off while saying, "Don't look at him, he's drinking b-beer." The little girl began to cry.

Since the streets are closed, why can't they allow beer drinking anywhere during the festival? I don't think riots will develop, and what's the worst that can happen—an eighteen-year old gets a hold of a beer. Ooh—a big trouble.

A forty year old friend of mine didn't want to be caged in while drinking a beer, so he went to the Hilton for a drink. He was carded for the first time in his life. When he inquired as to why, they said that an ABC man was around. Now what has that got to do with the price of rice in Mongolia? If he didn't have his drivers license, would that mean that he couldn't drink? What does drinking a beer have to do with having a drivers license when he is obviously over twenty-one?

Another friend of mine who is thirty something showed them her drivers license, and they didn't want to allow her to have a drink because it was expired. Does that mean that she is expired? He was just a bartender not a cop pulling her over.

At the Chili Cookoff we were actually "allowed" to bring beer. I was just commenting to my wife that I couldn't believe that we were allowed to drink in public when two deputies came up to us and asked Kim for her I.D. We told them that it was in the car which was about a half mile away. They made her put her beer down and go get it. Why card a couple with kids who are minding their own business? Deputy Dog stood next to me and waited for her. It gave me the creeps for her to stand near me; I felt like a criminal. They finally went to hassle someone else, and by the time Kim came back with her license, they were gone. It pissed me off, so we left.

It's not just beer. There are other petty laws which I can't live with. I hate the fact that renting X-Rated video's is illegal here. I'm pretty sure that every other state allows it. Most people say, "I wouldn't ever rent one of those movies, but I think we should have the option to." That's such BS, I think that many people would rent them, but don't want to cause a scene because they are afraid to admit they watch them.

I can understand outlawing porno theatres because of the sleazy clientele, but who is it that decided I can't rent a certain movie and watch it at home? As far as I'm concerned, they can go to hell! On the national level, an infringement of our rights is occurring daily and most Americans don't even mind. I'm referring to urine drug testing. Not long ago, your job and your urine had nothing in common; you couldn't be fired because of your urine—unless of course, if you pissed on your boss! That's a different story though and you'd probably deserve to be fired. (Depending on the boss.)

This mandatory drug testing is a clear case of guilty until proven innocent. Drug testing has become common-place because too many Americans think that this illusion of solving a drug problem in America is actually working. The big drug problems don't have jobs! The attitude that "I don't have anything to hide" is what is ruining this country. I hope that these people don't mind Feds searching through their homes, because that is next.

There you have it. It's not very humorous, but our loss of liberties isn't a funny matter. If you agree with me on any of these issues, let yourself be heard. If you disagree with me on all of these issues—Big Brother is proud of you.

Remember the Truth about Pledging Greek

As the Greeks approach the non-existent hazing season one wonders what happens during the illustrious pledge education week. We know that hazing is not allowed at UNCW, we know further that chapters around campus wouldn't think of keeping their pledges up all night during their initiation period.

We also know that if a non-drinker were to pledge a fraternity at this campus, that he or she would have the fair chance to become a brother or sister.

Greeks also have many functions in which alcohol is not involved. These Greek organizations also have no bias in their selection of students for their membership. Their decision is based purely on academic performance, dedication to the organization and a keen sense of leadership.

The money put forth in dues is put toward good causes, not including anything vaguely related to partying or put toward the purchase of alcohol for minors, no never.

No field trips are ever planned to abduct pledges in the middle of the night for unknown destinations. Study sessions held by certain organizations are not to be associated with any form of slavery and those participating in them do so voluntarily in their own time.

There would be no way to associate the Greek community with disciplinary problems on or off campus.

So before anyone can think about criticizing the Greek community, keep these things in mind.

Career Day Another Success At UNCW

The Career Planning and Placement Center is to be commended for their job with Career Day this year. It was the biggest one yet held and will hopefully continue to grow.

Jim Braye, Director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, brought in 76 different businesses, firms, banks and agencies up at least 11 from last year.

Apathy was not running rampant at the event and those groups that did participate were very impressed with UNCW.

The event attracted people from Florida to New York and such Government agencies as the F.B.I. and Naval Intelligence were present.

If you are a senior and didn't attend then you missed your chance. Those of you that aren't seniors should take advantage of this event as it is held every year in October. Many careers are started there and it helps give those who participate a competitive edge over those who don't. It's not a waste of time.

Thanks again Jim!

"I Can't's", The Art Of Procrastination

SPECIAL TO THE SEAHAWK
BY ROBERT L. KRIEGLER
Ph. D.

Have you ever felt that you can't possible read four chapters, study for that philosophy test, write that paper, make dinner and call your girlfriend all in one night? Then instead of doing all the things you know you should, do you just turn on the stereo and avoid them all? Yes? You're among the majority.

Procrastination occurs when you think you have too much to do or when you imagine something is going to be too difficult or distasteful.

The "can't's" (I can't do all that, I overwhelmed us so that we do nothing but procrastinate).

If you are like most college students today, you feel increasingly overwhelmed. In fact, the Nuprin Pain Report, the first national study on pain in America, documented that more people 18-24 suffer from stress and pain than any older age group.

A skier with the can'ts looks down a steep, icy slope and is paralyzed. "I can't ski this," he thinks.

The trick for the skier is to find a "can do" — a first turn he can make. Once he successfully completes the first turn he can look to the next and the next. Each time he successfully makes a turn he gains a sense of accomplishment and builds confidence in himself and his skiing ability. The solution for the can'ts sounds pretty simple, and it is. Big projects are made up of small, do-able steps.

I developed the can'ts right after signing the contract for my first book: 65,000 words. I couldn't get started. I kept putting it off, overwhelmed by the size of the task, just like I used to do in college when I had a big paper to write.

Luckily I remembered my own advice: to look for a can do. I can write the outline—did it. I can write bullets for each chapter—did it. I can write an introduction—did it.

Ten months later the book was finished. Overcome procrastination by remembering to turn the can'ts into can do's. Ask yourself, "What can I do now?" And be sure that the direction you're moving in leads to your ultimate goal.

Can do thinking and the positive actions that follow increase your confidence and composure and maximize your effectiveness. Pretty soon you're on a roll.

Grade Posting, Risky Business

As students start to get their first grades of the year back, concerns about posting grades outside professors' offices or classrooms have arisen at the universities of Houston and Nebraska.

Student politicians at Houston and administrators at Nebraska say identifying the publicly posted grades with students' Social Security numbers may violate a privacy law.

At Nebraska, some professors are now dropping the first five digits of their students' Social Security numbers before posting grades, while Houston's student government wants students to be able to ask their professors not to post their grades at all.

Posting grades has gotten schools into trouble before.

At the University of California-Los Angeles, an economics professor was fired in 1981 for repeatedly leaving graded tests on a table outside his office, a practice that violated federal law and university privacy policies.

It wasn't the only time UCLA

The Buckley Amendment of 1974 restricts release of "personally identifiable records or files" to anyone other than appropriate school officials without student consent.

And while Leroy Rooker of Nebraska's Department of Education says the law is unclear when applied to Social Security numbers, the department now wants school officials to use only the last four digits of the number when posting grades.

"We haven't really addressed the problem of using Social Security numbers," he said. "Who recognizes a Social Security number besides the person? It's so implausible that it's never caused a problem."

No one has ever filed a complaint against a school for posting a Social Security number with a grade, Rooker said, but that hasn't abated concern at Houston and Nebraska.

At Houston, the school's legal counsel advised campus officials in July that posting grades with Social Security numbers could violate

Most students, however, don't seem to mind. The student had problems maintaining student privacy. In 1980, a computer printout with the names of students delinquent on their university loans was left out in public in a campus building. Three months before, confidential records were left in the basement of a residence hall. Also that year, the Dean of Students office was blasted for using cards with students' grade point averages as scratch paper.

In late September, 1988, moreover, someone stole a list of all the foreign students at Arizona State University from the Student Life Office. In July, someone snatched a printout of ASU students' names and used it to try to sell furniture to the students listed on it.

Letting such information out can not only be embarrassing to students, but is illegal for administrators and professors.

association has called upon the administration to continue posting grades with Social Security Numbers.

But students who don't want their grades posted with Social Security numbers could ask their professor not to do so, according to the student governmental proposal.

"It would be easier for students who don't want their grades posted to submit written information to their professors indicating their wishes" than to forbid grade posting, explained Michael Danke, who chairs the student association's Academic Affairs Committee.

"There are going to be very few students who will say they don't want their records posted," Danke said.

Some Nebraska professors continue to post grades with Social Security numbers because students haven't complained.

"This has been the traditional method," said Nebraska professor Paul Burrow. "I've never had anybody complain."

Theatre Group Comes to UNCW

BY RICK CAIRNS
STAFF WRITER

UPB brought the Alpha-Omega players Repertory Theatre of America to UNCW. They performed the play "Educating Rita" on October 19th. It took place in room 100 of the union. The term "Desert Theatre" had me curious, until I spied the many desserts and coffee pots in the rear of the room. The room had many tables and chairs and resembled a huge dining room. It made for a comfortable surrounding.

There were less than ten students present, but luckily many elderly citizens were wise enough to attend.

The Repertory Theatre of America, is a national touring company which performs more plays than any other organization yearly. It was obvious that they are quite professional by the show they put on.

Only two characters were needed to perform this nearly two hour production. Trey Birkhead portrayed Frank and Debbie Sheridan portrayed Rita. The setting is a first floor room in a university in the north of England.

The story involved Rita, an uncultured "live wire" who is quite outspoken. She's seeking to better herself by being tutored in the evenings, despite the fact that her husband is against it. Frank, by the luck of the draw, gets Rita as his student. Frank is a stuffy yet witty English professor who isn't a stranger to hard liquor.

As the play progresses we see the maturing of Rita, and the growing infatuation Frank has for Rita. He is initially enthralled by her apparent self-assurance and her unique talent of paraphrasing. He becomes increasingly flustered as Rita develops culturally and seems to change from the innocent wide-eyed girl to a proper woman. He can't handle the "monster" he created.

With only a simple set which had no curtains, they did an excellent job. It proved that acting is the true entertainment, not special effects or lighting. Their shadows appeared on the wall to the left of them, which was quite interesting to watch at times. I don't know if that was planned or just a result of the contours of the room.

Sheridan's character shows many emotions—excitement, hurt, flustered, sad and crying. She covers about every emotion and pulls it off flawlessly.

Birkhead's character is more subdued, but has the challenge of displaying mixed emotions. He successfully reveals the inner turmoil of wanting to educate Rita, but despises the fact that she is changing into a person he is not fond of. He ranges from pretentious and indignant to drunk quite effectively.

The blend of these two characters results in a delightful display of an interpersonal relationship which builds into a deep friendship, despite the fact the odds are against it.

Mason To Play UNCW Next Week

Comedian Taylor Mason will put on a show in Kenan Hall Thursday November 3.

(UNCW News) - Comedian and ventriloquist Taylor Mason will perform at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington at 8 p.m., Thursday, Nov. 3, in Kenan Auditorium. Admission is $1 for UNCW students with I.D., and $2 for all others. His visit is sponsored by the University Program Board's Concerts Committee.

Upon graduating the University of Illinois, Taylor Mason moved to Chicago and joined the famous Second City Theatre as a musical director of the touring company. Already an accomplished ventriloquist, Taylor began writing comedy material for Second City and started working on his own stand up comedy material. Taylor studied acting and improvisational comedy and soon began performing at Chicago area comedy clubs, becoming a regular at Zanies Comedy Club.

While in Chicago Taylor was awarded the Edgar Bergen Scholarship at Northwestern University where he graduated with a Master's degree in Advertising.

Taylor moved to New York and soon became a regular comedy performer at Catch A Rising Star and Dangerfield's. Blending the arts of stand up comedy, ventriloquism, and music, Taylor has appeared with Robert Klein, Tina Turner, Yakov Smirnov and Emo Phillips.

In addition to his appearances at comedy clubs and colleges Taylor's television credits include, "Comedy Tonight", "Nashville Now", "The David Susskind Show" and the premier of "Robert Klein Time" on the USA Cable Network. Taylor's original song parody "Psycho Santa" received wide airplay on the nation's FM radio stations.

Racial Tensions Rising at UNCW

BY RICK HEYMANN
SEAHAWK STAFF WRITER

Racial issues litter the headlines of Americas newspapers today, and all they do is report, not resolve, the pressing tension between blacks and whites.

Racism is not unknown at UNCW, yet goes unnoticed to students, faculty, and administrators alike. But on November 1, 1988, a landmark case of racism involving 3 fraternities, Tau Nu Pi, Chi Phi, and Kappa Sigma, was discussed at length during a Greek president's council meeting which included Pan-Hellenic and Inter-fraternity council members. The case involved the Pledge Talent show held on October 27, 1988.

Specifically, Amos Quick, President of the NAACP took up arms to fight racism depicted in the show, and voicing his opinion vehemently at the meeting.

Apparently, Tau Nu Pi pledges performed a rendition of the Jackson Five, complete with black make-up and "afros." Kappa Sigma "lip-synched" a Bob Marley song, with their pledges dressing up in make-up and dreadlocks. The complaint that Amos presented concerned the fact that the fraternities used afros and make-up in their shows, therefore offending many attending blacks.

The presidents of each fraternity were present, arguing effectively that the show was presented only in fun with an honest attempt to win the event, not to insult black people.

Furthermore, Quick and Rodney White, a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, accused Chi Phi of racism when Chi Phi had their pledges dressed as "Black Sambos" for their annual Halloween party Monday night. Chi Phi rebutted in a round about way, finally conceding that the action may have been racist after all.

The heated meeting adjourned later that evening, with both the fraternities and the NAACP relatively pleased that agreements were made, that apologies from both sides were accepted, and that resolutions between the predominately white fraternities and the black community could be attained. The resolution will be discussed at the next meeting of the Greek presidents council.

Scenes like this, where an area is dominated by one group of people are common at UNCW as well as most other schools. This kind of separation goes unnoticed by most, and is readily accepted. The question that has been raised by some here is, is this acceptance without change a kind of racism?

It is unfortunate that an issue like racism has to demand attention to this degree, but the truth of the matter is that the best of times often comes from the worst of times.

"Black and white relations are quite unstable," said Quick. He further maintained that, "The mood is to approach a white-with-exception." Quick seems to believe that blacks and whites should get along, that only color separates the two, but both groups approach each other with caution and a generally hesitant, possibly even fearful attitude.

These fears and tensions must be broken down in order to establish better black-white relations. Ralph H. Parker, director of minority affairs, emphatically stated that "communication would help ease the tension" but mentioned that UNCW is "not a utopia." Parker insisted that "progress is being made."

Black and white students studying together, eating together and socializing together are all examples of the progress that Parker cites. "While one on one relations between blacks and whites have

Gay & Lesbian Request Disturbs Many

BY BRUCE FOLEY
SEAHAWK STAFF WRITER

The student population at UNCW is a complex network of many diverse interests and beliefs, woven together to form one academic community. The university guarantees its students the constitutional right to organize and join associations to promote their common interests, even when a philosophy appears to be unjustifiable to many students.

Last week the UNCW Gay and Lesbian Organization was officially registered by the Student Organization Committee.

"The Gay and Lesbian Organization's constitution met all the guidelines specified by the Student Organization Committee, they followed all the appropriate channels and subsequently were accepted as an official organization," stated Todd Shaver, head of the Student Organization Committee.

"It is neither our job nor our place to condone or condemn any organization simply for its activities and practices," says Shaver.

However, the news of the Gay and Lesbian Organization's acceptance set off an aftershock of opposition by the UNCW College Republicans. An immediate petition was set up in the student union urging student signatures to help stop funding to the Gay and Lesbian Organization.

"Many people tell us it is a matter of blatant discrimination on the part of the campus Republicans. We do not see it like that. We are not saying they do not have the right to form. They have every right to organize according to the constitution," says Republican treasurer Jim Kraft.

"There are a lot of students on campus that do not agree with this organization's practices and the moral issues involved. They have no intention of supporting their cause with student money," says Kraft.

A $19 portion of every student's semester fees goes directly to the Student Organization Committee. These funds are then allocated to those clubs and organizations that qualify for funding.

The UNCW Gay and Lesbian Organization will not be able to receive any funds this year due to the recent freezing of the Student Organizations Committee's account, which is being reserved for emergency use only.

"If the SGA for any reason tried to stop us from receiving funds, for any reason regarding our practices or activities, then we could legitimately take them to court," states Vincent Thigpen, President of the UNCW Gay and Lesbian Organization.

Vincent Thigpen does acknowledge that the SGA has been supportive of their organization.

"The only problem we have experienced is with the campus Republicans. They seem determined to try and weaken our organization by defunding us. We may attempt to receive a seed account in April when we go before the finance committee, regardless of what Jim Kraft and the campus Republicans try and do," says Thigpen.

"People like Kraft and the campus Republicans believe that if they can weaken our organization by denying us funds, then maybe we will go away. This is not going to happen, we are not going away. Even without money we can still gather and talk," comments Thigpen.

Since the petition was circulated, the campus Republicans have obtained roughly 550 signatures.

UNCW 'Tots' have better Halloween

BY MELISSA AMBROSE

Halloween! That time of the year when kids get to act like anything they want and adults get to act like kids. Groups of children ravage their neighborhood, knocking on doors, smiling, and receiving candy. And in some cases playing tricks.

However, there are some children who are not as fortunate as others. They come from less privileged backgrounds, or live in neighborhoods that are not entirely safe for the door to door ritual of gathering goodies. This is where UNCW students get involved.

Every Halloween, on-campus students sponsor "Trick or Treat for Tots". Again this year, UNCW hosted approximately 50 underprivileged children from the Wilmington area. The United Way provided names of various agencies in town in which the students could locate children to invite.

"Trick or Treat for Tots" took place on Thursday, October 27 from 6:30 to 8:30 in the residence halls. All the residence halls were open for the event except for the campus apartments. However, apartment dwellers acted as escorts for the children and helped with their preparations. Some of the floors and lobbies were decorated as well as Hall '85, which also hosted a haunted house in it.

The children aged 5-10, were dressed in Halloween attire. Cowboys, witches, angels, cats, spiders, ghosts, and even a pumpkin skipped along from dorm to dorm, up and down the halls, excitedly gathering candy. Not only was it enjoyable for the children who had been given the chance to get special Halloween treats, but it was also enjoyable for the students who took part in the event.

"Trick or Treat for Tots is one of the most popular programs that UNCW students like to get involved with," said Carol Cooper, area coordinator for resident life at UNCW.

"Trick or Treat for Tots" was held in the residence halls again this year, and these children came costumed to Hall '85 last Thursday. Although not many children came to Hall '85, the residents enjoyed dressing up themselves.

Black Folk Heritage Tour to Entertain

BY LISA WELLS
ARTS COUNCIL

The best of North Carolina's traditional African-American performing arts will be showcased at Kenan Auditorium on November 5, 1988 at 8 p.m. That's when the North Carolina Arts Council brings to town the North Carolina Black Folk Heritage Tour, an exciting concert of spirituals, gospel songs, Br'er Rabbit tales, blues and buckdancing black folk artists.

The concert is presented by master dance instructor and Raleigh native Chuck Davis who opens the program with an exuberant demonstration of traditional West African dance styles performed by the African Acan Dance Ensemble. Davis explores the history of the black experience in North Carolina through story, dance and song.

Following the "roots" performance by the African American Dance Ensemble, the Badget Sisters of Yanceyville are introduced to sing the old-time spirituals and jubilee songs in the traditional unaccompanied style.

Another segment of the show highlights the blues music and buckdancing styles which began to emerge in North Carolina around the turn of the century. These traditions are ably represented by Durham residents John Doe Holeman and Quentin "Fris" Holloway, who performed for audiences around the world in behalf of the U.S. State Department. They will be joined by the remarkable favorite folk guitarist and buckdancer from Johnson County, Ms. Algia Mae one of her favorites Br'er Rabbit tales to the children in the audience. The concert concludes with a stirring program of gospel songs performed by the incomparable Mighty Wonders of Winston-Salem. They never fail to bring everyone to their feet to join in the joyous singing and hand clapping.

The Black Folk Heritage Tour was first organized in 1985 by the North Carolina Arts Council. It was so well received that funds from the National Endowment for the Arts were obtained to bring the program to nine more North Carolina communities in 1986 and now more communities in 1987 and 1988.

The concert at Kenan Auditorium is hosted by the Arts Council of the Lower Cape Fear with support from Jordan Funeral Home, the Folklife Section of the North Carolina Arts Council, the North Carolina Folklife Institute and additional funding provided by the National Endowment for the Arts.

"Noises Off" Laughs at Drama

(UNCW News) "Noises Off," Michael Frayn's collicious farce about theatre, will be performed at 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday, Nov. 17-19 at Kenan Auditorium on the UNCW campus. The UNCW drama production is the second of four plays for the 1988-89 season.

Advance tickets may be purchased at the Thalian Center Box Office, 118 Princess St., Wilmington (919) 763-9328. Tickets are $4.00; UNCW students with ID are free. For additional information and group rates call (919) 395-3440.

"Noises Off" is a peek behind the scenes of a play within a play, a simply dreadful sex comedy called "Nothing On." "Noises Off" depicts the shambles of a dress rehearsal to the last exasperated performance of a horrendous three-month tour of "Nothing On."

The twist occurs when the romantic entanglements of the actors parallel the characters of the sex farce they are performing. Anyone who has experienced bad theatre from the audience or the stage cannot fail to recognize or laugh along with the calamities of stumbling through forgotten lines, picking up the phone while it's still ringing, or locating a missing plate of sardines.

Those playing actors in "Nothing On" include Juli Brockmann as Doty Otley, the aging tv star; Steve Vernon as Gary Lejeune, the indecisive leading man; Karla Stith as Belinda Blair, British sex comedy star; Dan Wargo as Seldson Mowbray, a kind has-been; Russ Bowen as the well-meaning Frederick Fellows; and Amy Madura as Brooke Ashton, the obligatory dumb blonde.

Kris Rogers plays the ladykilling director, Lloyd Dallas; Kelly Brett plays the young assistant stage manager; and Cory Mitchell play Tim Allgood, the overworked stage manager.

Doug Swink is directing "Noises Off," with lighting and scenery designed by Tom Macie and costumes and makeup designed by Caroline DeMoss.

The 1988-89 UNCW drama season will continue with "Painting Churches" by Tina Howe Feb. 22-26, and conclude with the "Diviners" by James Leonard, Jr., April 12-16. These shows will be performed in UNCW's S.R.O. Theatre in Kenan Hall.

Chamber Singers to Perform

(UNCW News) The UNCW Chamber Singers and Concert Choir will perform a program of classical and folk music for chorus at 8 p.m., Friday, Nov. 4, in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of UNC Wilmington. Joe Hickman, associate professor of music and director of choral activities, will conduct.

The Nov. 4 concert will feature music from the 1580s to the 1980s, sacred and secular, serious (both sacred and secular), and some unusually beautiful single works of the choral art. Admission is free, and the public is invited to attend.

The evening will include something for everyone, and will provide the public an opportunity to hear the talented singers from UNCW's growing music program. "We have an unusually talented group of singers this year," Hickman said.

On Dec. 4 during the Old Wilmington By Candlelight Tour, the Concert Choir will again be featured in a program of seasonal music at 7 p.m. at the First Baptist Church.

Proposal Workshop Offered

(UNCW News) -- The Small Business and Technology Development Center at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington in cooperation with the N.C. Technological Development Authority (TDA), will sponsor a workshop on how to prepare proposals to TDA in order to participate in its Innovation Research Fund. The workshop is scheduled from 2-4 p.m., on Wednesday, Nov. 9, in room 100 of the University Union on the campus of UNCW.

The Innovation Research Fund, administered by the Technological Development Authority, provides equity financing of up to $50,000 to small North Carolina businesses for research leading to the improvement or development of new products, processes or services. For those businesses selected for investment funding, up to $100,000 in additional funding is available to those who qualify.

According to Ted Jans Jr., director of the UNCW Small Business and Technology Development Center, "The purpose of the Fund is to enable small businesses to provide technical and management assistance and to conduct research leading to the growth or start up of new firms, thereby, creating jobs."

Firms with fewer than 500 employees are encouraged to apply for funds, including but not limited to businesses engaged in agriculture, aquaculture and forestry. Of particular interest is research that is of special relevance to North Carolina's economic and industrial base, ranging from technical feasibility studies to prototype development.

The workshop is free and open to all interested persons. For additional information, call 395-3744.

Diving Tour Offered

The Cape Fear Sierra Club is sponsoring a fund raising diving trip to Crystal River Florida on December 28th through January 1st. Crystal River is famous for its crystal clear, warm water springs, tropical fish, and--most of all--its Manatee population.

The river is an excellent place for snorkeling or scuba diving for the beginner as well as the seasoned diver. Prices starting at $188.00 include round trip transportation, lodging, and water transportation. Options include snorkeling lessons and scuba certification classes for the beginner.

More information will be available at the general meeting on November 14th at 7:30 p.m. in room 501 of Cape Fear Community College, or call 799-5772 for more details. Registration deadline is Tuesday, November 15th.

Gay & Lesbian

"We are hopefully looking for a majority of signatures that we could bring before the SGA committee. We would need somewhere around 3297 signatures to qualify as a majority. We have witnessed the campus sentiment at our table, and believe that we can reach our goals," says Kraft.

The campus Republicans support their stand by accusing the finance committee of handling their funds without adequate consideration to where the funds are being allocated, in addition to attacking the student body senate.

The college Republicans take the position that the senate, at times, does not represent or act in behalf of the student body. Knowing the senate like I do, I feel that this issue will be one of these times. As far as we are concerned, it is the student's money, let the students vote on it," comments Kraft.

Senior senator Marc Kelley admits that the basis of the campus Republicans argument is structured around a misinterpretation of the role democracy plays in government.

"This is a classic example of why the US constitution and on a lower level, the SGA constitution protects the rights of the few from the voting power of the many," states Kelley.

Kelley explains that the campus Republicans see the student body as a democracy that possesses power to stop the funding of the Gay and Lesbian Organization, regardless of what the SGA decides on.

For a senator to vote for the approval of the Gay and Lesbian Organization would be to vote contrary to the students at large. "The student body takes the role of the lynch mob that may or may not know the whole issue," says Kelley. "The SGA represents the constitution—the law—and will protect the organization according to the guidelines of these amendments; the SGA protects the individual, not the masses."

"Under the constitution, if the Gay and Lesbian Organization or any other organization came up to me as a group, and they had valid grounds, I'd vote to fund them. According to the SGA constitution, which specifies no disparaging of minority groups on campus, I'd be derelict in my duties to vote against their seeking funds," says Kelley.

"I think Thomas Jefferson put it best when he said, 'Let me hear no more of the trust of men, but bind them with the chains of a constitution,'" adds Kelley.

The UNCW Gay and Lesbian Organization is not really worried about the opposition they face.

"The best thing for us to do at this point is to just let the petition issue ride and ignore it. We don't expect it to really amount to much," says Thigpen.

The issue of the UNCW Gay and Lesbian Organization receiving funds will undoubtedly continue to be a topic of debate with the coming new year. This organization, the first of its kind on this campus, is legitimately recognized by the university and the students and no one will deny them this step forward.

Racial Tensions

improved on campus, institutionalized racism is still a problem," say Quick and White.

The word "racism" usually brings to mind a typical white behaving prejudicially towards a typical black, but be aware that racism is a two-way street. Quick states that "a black who hates all whites is seriously criticized by the black community." Fortunately, for a white who hates all black, the same is usually true.

It is not often one stumbles upon a bigot who hates all members of a different race. So, "aside from those few who do feel that way, the majority of people must be sensitive to the needs and feelings of those who are a different race," says Parker. He further maintained that, "sensitivity is the key word here."

Parker mentioned one very significant way to help resolve the black-white tension, which may very well be the most pragmatic approach. Parker states, "student in key positions could provide strong leadership to others." Leaders of the Greek council, other organizations and the administrators of UNCW could theoretically change the attitudes of a significant number of black and white students alike, through the careful use of education, mutually benefiting activities and persuasion.

To put everything in perspective, blacks and whites are remaining segregated by choice. They still eat in the cafeteria and meet in the student union as separate groups. The same will continue tomorrow. All the work being done to integrate in vain? Absolutely not.

Integration, could prove to be invaluable to both the white and black community. Both groups have been proven to provide valuable contributions to each other, but there exists a chain that enslaves both whites and blacks on this campus. At UNCW, the consensus seems to feel that the chain is racism.

UNCW's Spring In England

BY CELESTE F. RULLEY
EDITOR IN CHIEF

Need another course for the Spring semester? Looking for a chance to see more of the world? Want the ultimate Spring Break trip at a very reasonable price? If so, John Evans has the opportunity of your college career. He'll be offering ENG 294, Writing in the Humanities, for the second consecutive year, and again his students will be traveling to Great Britain.

The students who sign up for ENG 294 once in class, will choose an area of interest concerning British culture, and spend the first weeks of the semester researching their specific field of concentration.

"When we started the semester, because there were four of us, we each picked one of the four countries of Great Britain and researched it," says Jennifer Martin, a student from last year's class. "Later, we shared our findings informally, and from what we heard from each other, picked another country and narrowed down our focus to a few areas from each country that we didn't know anything about but were really interested in." Areas such as art, theater and music are examples of the student's choices.

As with last year's group, the class will develop an itinerary to help meet those interests while in Great Britain. "We did all the things which were set up beforehand, and all the things which we as a class had decided to do, but we could explore where ever we wanted to," says Martin.

The students will fly Piedmont Airlines from Wilmington to London Gatwick. They will be staying at the Walton Guest House, a 9-room inn in Oxford, across from Worcester College and convenient to the Bus. The package includes a full English breakfast daily. Students will also receive a 7-day London Visitor card which is good for unlimited use of London's red buses and Underground (subway).

Included in the tour will also be the student's Orchestra/dance circle tickets to see CATS, and a city map of London.

Some of the planned sights the students will be seeing include Oxford University College, The Tate Gallery, and National Portrait Gallery, Hyde Park, Piccadilly Circus, Trafalgar Square, The Tower of London, the British Museum, Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral.

Evans plans to introduce his students to London and the surrounding areas for the first five days, then give them the remainder of the time to explore on their own, (in any of the countries of the United Kingdom) and collect the information they need to work on their papers upon return.

"We were encouraged to interview as many people as possible on the subjects we had picked while in [the countries] and keep our notes in a journal," says Martin.

The journal is an important part of ENG 294, because upon return from abroad, the students will start the real classwork part of the course. The students will write up their experiences in their specific areas and the writings will be published as a UNCW students' guide to British Culture. "John was adamant that we would do the writing for the guide; he only wrote the introduction [to the guide]," says Martin. "Our guide was the first to be printed; all others will be based on the precedents we established."

As other exchange and education abroad-oriented courses develop at UNCW, these guides will be invaluable for students studying in some of these countries. "It gave us the chance to contribute what we saw and learned in the UK to UNCW in a personal way," commented Martin.

If students are interested in taking the course, the cost of the trip is $875 per person. To join the class, contact John Evans at 395-3326 (office) or 762-3786 (home) or stop by his office in Morton Hall, room 152.

If you are looking for an unprecedented opportunity to travel and get credit for it, this is the deal for you. And, as Martin says, "The best thing about it was the opportunity it gave us to learn about ourselves through learning about another culture."

highschools by 25%."

Other school issues the candidate addressed were concerns about the gifted student program, the possible removal of the superintendent of schools, the issue of unqualified teachers with tenure, and, especially, the link between the UNCW School of Education and the New Hanover County school system.

Many teachers hired in New Hanover County are graduates of UNCW's School of Education. The state is implementing a program of teaching Spanish as a second language in elementary through high school, but due to poor planning, cannot find enough graduates with qualifications to teach Spanish. "The University and school board should have come together on this issue prior to implementing the program," comments Toplin.

He explains that the job of the school board is to "set directions and to select personnel and academic programs as well as pinpoint areas which need improvement." But he also believes that excellent leadership will "vigorously bring important matters to the front and improve the school system."

In conclusion, the candidate expressed his emotional concern for the school board issues. "These are exciting times with campaign meetings, and getting out among the voters," says Toplin. "I endeavor to keep an open mind on the issues and listen to the voter's concerns during my race for the school board."

The candidate wants to build the morale of area school teachers. He sees their problem as lack of respect in general for the teaching profession. "Teachers are caught up in the bureaucracy," says Toplin. "They receive little respect for their ideas and are, therefore, leaving the profession."

According to Toplin, today's new teachers have to be "driven, inspiring an interest in learning and communicating well with classes." He feels that often they aren't treated as professionals, adding that many don't get a break to, as he puts it, "get their juices running" until 1:30 in the afternoon, almost a "violation of basic labor laws."

"By meeting the challenge, we can have outstanding schools," says Toplin. He feels more efficient planning to be the only solution. "The consequences of poor planning are evident in the overcrowding of the schools today," Toplin says. "Converting to the Middle School Program increased the enrollment in the

The Democratic candidate for New Hanover County School Board, Dr. Bob Toplin, a history professor at UNCW, is speaking out on the concern for teacher morale in New Hanover County.

"The lack of enthusiasm in teachers is a problem that must be recognized," said Toplin. "He believes in 'stimulating, dynamic teaching' for the betterment of this county's schools."

Toplin's involvement in education has been demonstrated locally for ten years as a professor with the history department at UNCW. He earned his B.A. at Penn State University and his M.A. and Ph.D. from Rutgers University.

As a parent, Toplin has two daughters who have graduated from the New Hanover County School system. He feels adults have to "give something back" to the school system, and has, accordingly, served as president of the local PTA.

Toplin has contributed to the Educational Television Network by producing programming for PBS and the Disney Channel.

He sees a need for improvement in North Carolina's school system as statewide SAT scores put NC ranking 49th in the nation, second only to South Carolina. "New Hanover county needs to be more academically competitive," he comments, adding that "the system is not in good shape."

Band Clinic Has Special Guest

(UNCW News) -- Alfred Reed, noted composer and arranger of band music, will be a special participant at a band clinic from 9 a.m.-12 noon, Saturday, Nov. 6, at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington. Also during his visit, he will be guest conductor for the second half of a fall concert of the UNCW Concert Band at 8 p.m., Monday, Nov. 7, in Kenan Auditorium.

The band director's clinic, to be held in King Hall Auditorium, is expected to attract band directors from across Southeastern North Carolina and part of South Carolina. Clinic fee is $10, but includes a complimentary ticket to the Monday night concert. The public may also attend this clinic. For information, contact Harry McLamb at 919/393-3393 or the music division at 395-3390.

Under Reed's baton, the UNCW Concert Band will feature two compositions by Alfred Reed, "A Festive Overture" and "El Camino Real: A Latin Fantasy." The band will also perform two works arranged by Alfred Reed, "My Heart is Filled with Longing," by Johann Sebastian Bach, and "Concerto in C Major for Piccolo and Band" by Antonio Vivaldi with flutist Victoria Schack.

Admission to the band concert is $3 for general public, free to UNCW students with I.D.

Now on the faculty of the School of Music at the University of Miami, Alfred Reed has published more than 250 works for concert band, wind ensemble, orchestra, chorus, and various smaller chamber music groups. He is one of the nation's most prolific and frequently performed composers.

In addition to winning the Luria Prize in 1959, he has been awarded some 63 commissions. His work as guest conductor and clinician has taken him to 49 states, Europe, Canada, Mexico, Japan, Australia, and South America. For the past 10 years, at least eight of his works have been on the required list of music for all concert bands in Japan, where he is the most frequently performed foreign composer today. He has studied at the Juilliard School of Music, and his professional experience includes being staff arranger and composer at NBC, and subsequently, at ABC in New York, where he wrote and arranged music for radio and television as well as for record albums and films. He was also conductor of the Baylor Symphony Orchestra at Baylor University in Waco, Texas, in the early 50s.

Guest soloist on piccolo for the Vivaldi piece will be Victoria Schack, part-time instructor of flute at UNC Wilmington. Schack, who received the bachelor's degree in music performance from the University of Miami, has appeared with the Miami Beach Symphony, Fort Lauderdale Symphony, Boca Raton Symphony, Palm Beach Opera, Ballet and Symphony.

She has also been involved in musical productions featuring Luciano Pavarotti, Beverly Sills, Yul Brynner, Eartha Kitt, Henry Mancini and Sergio Franchi. Schack is a member of the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra.

In addition to the clinic and concert, Reed will hold a seminar for UNCW students at 2 p.m., Monday, Nov. 7 in Kenan Hall room 114.

Congress Prevents Peace In Central America

Jim Craft
Treasurer
UNCW Campus Republicans

During the past eight years, the Reagan-Bush administration has made great strides in securing peace around the globe. Peace through strength has worked, and we as a nation, and as a world are realizing the benefits. However, due to the flip-flop, non-committal role of the U.S. Congress, we have been unable to help secure peace in our own hemisphere.

In 1979, the Sandinista regime of Daniel Ortega ousted President Somoza in Nicaragua. Upon formal recognition by the Carter administration, the Sandinistas set up what has become, to some, a democracy. In actuality, this is just a front for the Communist funded, totalitarian state that has existed ever since the overthrow in 1979. Daniel Ortega has, on several occasions, visited with the likes of Mikhail Gorbachev, Fidel Castro, and numerous other influential Communist leaders.

At present, a civil war rages in Nicaragua between this Marxist government, and the freedom fighters that have been embraced by such people as Ronald Reagan, and yes, Lt. Colonel Oliver North. Unfortunately, the liberal left in Congress has seen fit to let the Freedom Fighters go from feast to famine, with them not knowing from day to day what will happen next. It is because of the Freedom Fighters love of freedom, that Colonel North took the actions that some leftists felt was illegal, but was actually what any freedom loving citizen, who feels that all men should be free, has a responsibility to do. The Freedom Fighters have made great strides, but, as Colonel North stated, their setbacks are the fault of the Congress. Colonel North stated it very eloquently in saying that "... plain and simple, the Congress is to blame because of the fickle, vacillating, unpredictable, on-again, off-again policy toward the Nicaraguan Democratic Resistance."

One area that also needs to be addressed is the present situation in Nicaragua. The Nicaraguan people are starving, the economy is in shambles, and the Sandinistas, with the support of the Soviets are continuing to assemble a military that, at present, is larger than that of any other Central American country's, with the ultimate goal of one larger than all the militaries of Central America combined. Their goal is clear, total domination of Central America. Not only is it obvious, but the Sandinistas have admitted it on several occasions. Yes, this also means Mexico.

The question is, do we want to take care of the situation now, or wait and fight it on the U.S.-Mexican border. I think the answer is clear. On top of this, we must also realize that Nicaragua is the only Communist backed government in Central America. Great accomplishments have been made in promoting democracy in such countries as El Salvador, Honduras, and Guatemala. If the Sandinistas have their way, these countries will become nothing more than puppet dictatorships backed by the Soviet Union, on our own back door. I think it's time that Congress get a real spine and take a stand on Nicaragua, before the Sandinistas try again to invade Honduras. Do we want the Soviets on our back door? To once again quote Colonel North, "It's sort of like a baseball game in which you [Congress] are both the player and the umpires. It's a game in which you call the balls and strikes and where you determine who is out and who is safe. And in the end you determine the score and declare yourselves the winner." Unfortunately, Congress is playing a deadly game, and unless it does something soon, it is one that it will soon be unable to win, no matter who makes the rules.

To address Panama and the presidential race. Mr. Dukakis has mentioned that we should NEVER deal with drug dealers such as Panamanian ruler Manuel Noriega. However, he has also stated a willingness to work with the government of Columbia to help end the great influx of drugs from that country into the United States. I agree that we should never, under any circumstances, negotiate with drug dealers, but doesn't Mr. Dukakis realize that any Columbian leader who has discussed such a topic has wound up swimming with a cinder block around his ankles. Columbia is controlled by drug dealers, not ruled by them. The major influence of their economy is the tremendous influx of drug money. No leader in his right mind would work with the U.S. on this issue out of fear for his life or the fear for the lives of his family members. At least seven members of the Columbian supreme court have been assassinated for their positions on drug issues, the ones that are left are, in essence, terrified puppets. But remember, Mr. Dukakis still feels he can negotiate with these people to oust Mr. Noriega as he stated in an interview last week with Ted Koppel on Nightline.

Oddly enough, Mr. Dukakis' running mate, Lloyd Bentsen, has voted numerous times, as a member of the U.S. Senate, in support of Contra funding, both humanitarian and militarily. It is also known that Mr. Dukakis opposes any form of funding to them. If Mr. Bentsen plays as great a role as has been said he will, where will a Dukakis presidency stand on contra aid. (They should have reached a consensus on this one before they ever started running together.) It leaves the American people wondering if Bentsen will have to sacrifice his views for his new boss, and where does that kind of sacrifice stop?

THE ODD COUPLE

Current Policies Failed In Central America

Wendell L. Jones
Vice President
UNCW College Democrats

When I sit down to write these articles, I try to anticipate what the other side will say. I put my brain on a right wing set and develop their arguments as I would present them, then in my own column, refute what I have thought of. Such was the case with this article on Central America. I pretended I was Jesse Helms or some other ultra-conservative mind vacuum. I thought hard about how I could put a positive light on the Central American policies of the Reagan/Bush administration. I failed. Short of outright lying, there is nothing good one can say about the tragedy Reagan and Bush have inflicted upon our neighbors.

Have their policies failed? According to the DEA they have; the importation of cocaine is up 300% since 1980. According to the INS they have; the flood of illegal aliens doubled between 1980 and 1986. According to the USSR they have not; there are now two fewer democracies, (Panama and El Salvador), and the Soviets have two more footholds in the region, (Panama and Nicaragua.) For eight years this administration has bungled, broken the law, lied to the American people and broken a series of international treaties. For eight years this administration has tried to overthrow a government, one they say does not have the support of the people, (Nicaragua), they propped up another government in the face of popular unrest and a national movement to replace an oppressive right-wing regime, (El Salvador.) They supplied funds, weapons and military expertise to the world's largest drug cartel, (via Manuel Noriega), and all in the name of democracy.

The history of Latin America would suggest there are no easy answers to this abhorrent situation. Common sense would suggest, however, that there are several plausible steps that can and should be taken.

To begin with, we must understand the region. For the most part, Central and South America are steeped in poverty and illiteracy. Infant mortality rates are enormous, famine and disease widespread, and crime lords are in abundance along with graft and corruption in government. And the biggest current problem, a population explosion throughout the region. The first Reagan fallacy is the naive idea that democracy can easily be exported. Historically we can show democracy strong only where literacy is high. In other words, there is a positive correlation between literacy and strength and stamina of democracy. Whereas Costa Rica, where the illiteracy rate is extremely low at 7%, has a strong democratic government, Nicaragua, where illiteracy is at 13%, never has and Panama probably will not for a very long time.

Every time Reagan parallels the contra rebels with our own founding fathers I want to vomit. At the tender age of twenty-five I have voted roughly a half-dozen times; I have never seen an M-16 toting hoodlum at the ballotbox watching me. The contras have never made a claim of democracy, they have shown no intention of instituting it, nor would they if they gained power. It is unlikely, however, that an administration with such great 'humanitarians' as Jeanne Kirkpatrick would ever withdraw their support. After all, it was Kirkpatrick who stated that a right-wing dictatorship was preferable to a left-wing dictatorship. I would like to interview those fortunate souls who have had the opportunity to be tortured by both styles and see what they think.

Approaching the solution is the first step. From where we begin will dictate our chances of success. To begin with, the approach is not though the Kremlin as Reagan seems to think, it is the schools and on the streets of the United States. It will be impossible to make any positive changes in Latin America stick when the government is under the influence of American drug-habit-made millionaires. We must begin a program of education and enforcement in military in interdiction measures to the fullest legal extent, while at the same time protecting constitutional rights.

There are additional steps we can take in Latin America that would have an immediate positive influence. First, we must desert in all terrorist and covert activity in the region that is intended or designed to sabotage the autonomy and power of the individual states. We have already helped drive Panama and Nicaragua into the Soviets realm, let's try to save face with what's left. Second, we must recognize and respect the Arias peace plan. It is a good plan, a sound approach, and given a chance, it may work. Then there is the poverty and lack of education. Until we address these dual problems we can have no hope of any positive changes ever taking root and becoming permanent. We must take the lead in this regard and direct our energies at the root of the troubles and not at the ideology of the troubled.

Finally, as fortune would have it, the U.S. and Mexico will both be inaugurating new Presidents at about the same time. No plan for peace and stabilization can be successfully undertaken until the United States develops a meaningful and mutual relationship with Mexico. She is a tremendous country in people, spirit and resources. We must seize the opportunity to once and for all secure our southern neighbor as ally and friend. It is immeasurable, the advantage we would have in this regard if our own President and Vice President could speak Spanish. That opportunity exists as well.

Your Choice, Your Pollution

What do you think of where you live? Is it clean? Do you have garbage piled up in your front yard or dorm room? Odds are you don't unless you had one hellacious party last night.

Most of us don't think about waste products or pollution. Yes, we might think about it for a minute or so, and then we figure that someone will do something about it. Wrong, dead wrong!

Currently, the U.S. is facing a terrible problem with air pollutants, acid rain, waste disposal, radioactive waste and chemical waste. We've got it in our oceans, which ends up on our beaches; we've got it in the air we breathe, leads and carbon dioxide; we've got it in our rain which is just acidic enough to kill forestation and upset the balance of ponds and lakes from coast to coast.

Nuclear waste doesn't go away for hundreds even thousands of years, and chemical wastes kill straight out. About ten years ago, the state government in North Carolina sold off thousands of gallons of P.C.B. to the trucking company that would rid the state of the toxic chemical for the lowest price.

The trucking firm that did purchase the chemical proceeded to fill their trucks up with the fuel, and in the middle of the night they opened the valves on their trucks while traveling at fifty miles an hour and let it flow out along the sides of several different public roads in North Carolina. One of those roads was highway 87 which runs right next to 421 in Sanford. It took years for the government to finally send someone out to scrape the first two feet of dirt off the side of the road and dump it somewhere else.

We, the supposed elite of the animal kingdom, are killing ourselves. We've known this for years, one answer to the pollution is just to give up. This way we've chosen our own destiny and we get to drown in our own waste and take every other species with us, we in essence become a planetary mausoleum.

We could, as a nation, commit ourselves to actively cleaning up all the crap we already have and get other nations to follow suit. While in the process, we should explore every major alternative energy source possible. We have solar, wind, alcohol and water(hydroelectric) at our disposal and they don't pollute. These sources of energy are all within our technological grasp, we need to seize that chance and forge ahead or die trying.

There is no easy answer to solving our current waste problems. Berkely is recycling most of their waste. The whole community is getting involved. By doing so these people have cut back their waste output anywhere from 20 to 75 percent.

Paper, aluminum and glass can all be recycled, yet it gets dumped in home trash and then in our quickly diminishing land fills.

Get involved, people! Wake up! You may want to get a degree and get a job in some elite high paying position, but it's not going to do you whole lot of good if you don't have an office to work in. This is your planet and you have to live on it-- you're stuck. Someday it may involve you whether or not you want it to or not, but then it may be to late.

Where Does Student Gov. Funding Stop?

The SGA has delegated money to many diversified groups on this campus including; the Seahawk, the Fledgling, WLOZ, the political science club and the toastmasters. They furthered their interest by delegating money to such political organizations as the College Democrats and the College Republicans. They even gave money to the NAACP. They will soon be faced with a new decision, that being whether or not to give a seed account to a new organization, namely the UNCW Gay and Lesbian Association.

Oddly enough, the campus republicans were the first to respond to this with a petition to stop them from receiving this money.

It may not seem that odd, but reflect for a moment. The Gay and Lesbian Organization is open to any member of campus, as are the College Republicans and College Democrats as well as the NAACP.

If the SGA wants to give these ethnic and political organizations money, they must also give that money to this sexual preference organization, not because they want to, but because they have set a precedent by giving money to the aforementioned groups.

The Student Organization Committee (SOC) has approved UNCW Gay and Lesbian Association as a legitimate and registered organization at this campus, therefore they should not be discriminated against by the SGA in regards to funds, unless the SGA also intends to discriminate against such groups as the College Republicans, College Democrats, or the NAACP. All of these groups are special interest groups that cater to political or racial preference. So the SGA cannot reserve the right to discriminate against an organization's sexual preference, regardless of an individuals feelings about that organization.

If this practice of delegating money to special interest groups continues then what is to prevent a group of political group such as the Campus Palestine Liberation Organization or such ethnic groups as Polish Catholic Women Against Birth Control to receive money. Either give all of these racial, ethnic, political and sexual organizations money when they ask for it or give none of these organizations money.

Currently, regardless of how you, the student feels, student money is being spent on the aforementioned groups and may be spent on more that are purely special interest groups.

Dismiss Past Success and Highlight Failure

BY ROBERT J. KRIEGL, Ph.D.
SPECIAL TO THE SEAHAWK

Most people forget how good they are. They dismiss past successes and have a tendency to highlight failures, losses and weak areas of performance. I call this highlighting the "uh oh's/nos."

Say you got 20 evaluations on a presentation you made in class. Seventeen are very good, three are very poor. What do you dwell on? If you are like most people, you dwell on the poor evaluations, convincing yourself you did a lousy job. You downplay the 17 great evaluations.

Dwelling on past failures, especially when they are not representative of your total performance, will cause your stress to climb and confidence to fall, and serve as a rehearsal for poor performance.

And college students are experts when it comes to reliving past failures and creating unnecessary stress. In fact, the Naprin Pain Report, the first national study on pain in America, documented that more people 18-24 are likely suffer from stress and pain than any other age group.

To avoid stress caused by "uh oh" thinking, review your current situation realistically. Did you really do a lousy job or are you highlighting and exaggerating the negative? If you did a poor job, learn from it. Examine your thoughts and behavior that caused the poor performance. Plan and rehearse how you will approach the same situation the next time. When a similar situation comes up again, review your past successes, not failures. Visualize yourself doing well.

Have you ever walked out of an exam and remembered the answers to the questions you left blank or guessed on? That indicates that it was stress, not lack of knowledge, that caused you to blank out on the answers. This is the "mental block."

If the first question on an exam is difficult, you might begin to think, "Uh oh, I don't know anything; I'm going to fail." Stress builds, confidence decreases. You begin to feel like a failure and dwell too long on that first question. The stress and panic will likely remain and prevent you from concentrating on the rest of the exam.

Instead, start off a test with a victory. Look over the exam and find a question you do know a "can do." Answer that one first. Starting out with a win will build your confidence and start you off on a roll.

Winners, prior to a pressure situation, plan for every eventuality. They will anticipate anything that may arise, including the unexpected and undesired.

I was sitting in my office on a gray Monday morning, wondering what to write and wishing it was Friday. As I looked out my window I saw that a small maple tree had turned orange and red and gold over the weekend and now stood out as a splash of color against the green background of other trees. I reflected on that ordinary scene for a few moments and it brightened my morning.

Then I became mindful of other moments during this past weekend that, in the grand scheme of things, were also quite ordinary. We had dinner out with a couple, who are close friends, and enjoyed simple conversation about ordinary things. We watched "Dumbo, the flying elephant" with our 10 year old daughter and felt very close. In church we sang two of my favorite hymns and the choir sang a wonderful anthem that really stirred me. We went to breakfast with seven friends and laughed with the two who had arrived an hour early. I went sailing with a group of students and had the starboard rail in the water in a brisk breeze with two students getting happily sopping wet as the bow crashed down into the waves. I watched my daughter's excitement as my wife went out of her way to make a special costume for Halloween.

All of these are very ordinary activities. And as I look ahead to a week that is filled with a variety of responsibilities and some concerns that tend to generate anxiety and stress within me, it is easy to let these events go as simple, ordinary occurrences that take their place among a long list of daily activities.

Instead, I find myself thinking about them and how special each of these ordinary events seems to me. Taken in reflection, I become aware that in these moments I have been connected in some simple and profound ways with people I love, with the beauty of the natural world and with God. And these are at the heart what I value in my life!

What strikes me is that most of us easily remember and tell stories about extraordinary and special times that we have had. Trips we have taken, people we have fallen in love with, conversion experiences or whatever. Yet it is the ordinary stuff of life that truly sustains us personally, spiritually and emotionally just as surely as the daily food we gulp down nourishes our bodies. There is not a lot of highly exciting stuff going on in my life right now, but when I let myself reflect and become aware that I am rich in all of the ways that are truly important to me even though my checkbook tells an entirely different story.

I covet such reflection and awareness for you. I bet that if you will find a few moments to sit back and think about some of the encounters, be it ordinary encounters you have had with friends, a conversation you have had with a roommate, those few pleasant moments you spent by yourself enjoying a nice day; you can deepen your sense of pleasure and satisfaction with your life as you are living it right now.

Our immediate and long-term future lays on us whole lists of tasks, responsibilities and worries. By increasing your awareness of the pleasure of the ordinary in your life, you can find yourself touching into those people and occasions that truly sustain you.

Bigfoot's Son Is Actually Elvis

Bigfoot's son is actually Elvis and he works at Sea World. I don't care if you don't believe me. If the Midnight Sun prints it--it's the truth.

Sensationalistic tabloids are the epitome of the American way. It's freedom of the press taken to the extreme. For many Americans, it's their only source of news.

I can honestly say that I have never purchased one of those checkout line impulse items. If you don't believe me then you can take a flying leap.

I'd be too embarrassed to buy one of those rags. I'd be less embarrassed buying rubbers, a Hustler magazine, or deodorant tampons. I feel that anyone who has an enquiring mind has teeth which resemble Goobers or Raisinettes and only change their underwear when they get too crusty.

It's okay to read someone else's newspaper just for a few chuckles, but to actually own one is equivalent to owning a Ronco Egg Scrambler or a Mr. Microphone.

The fact that these rags exist is bad enough, but the fact that millions of Americans buy them is an embarrassment. Many Dweebes believe the ridiculous stories! Isn't that a scary thought?

I've seen the editor of the Midnight Star on Letterman, and he swore that all the stories are the absolute truth! He said that a woman in Canada has Satan in her toaster, and a baby born in the U.S. was singing Christmas carols during delivery. I guess if he denied their authenticity, he couldn't be the editor.

Many buy these rags for the useful hints they provide. Did you know that Preparation H is useful for removing facial wrinkles? Perhaps it would work for a buttface. Chewing gum removes peanut butter from hair. Or is that the other way around? If you turn your underwear inside out at the end of each day-- you'll get twice as much wear out of them and you'll save on laundry bills.

What would a new year be without a cheap tabloid prediction? John Travolta has yet to land a 747 after the pilot died of a heart attack. There's still a couple of months left in 1988, though. You never know. I wonder if Michael J. Fox will divorce and remarry an alien. I tend to doubt it. It wouldn't be a wise career move.

These so-called psychics make a million predictions and if one happens to come true, they live off the money they make from talk shows. I think that there are currently 761 talk shows in America. That's a pretty good living.

I have my own prediction for 1989. A person with bad teeth will purchase a Midnight Sun and will go home, pop open an Old Milwaukee, scratch their genitals, turn on Mr. Belvedere and belch loudly. I know I'm going out on a limb with this one, but what the hell.

If there is a use for these tabloids, besides me being able to goof on them, I certainly can't think of any. I wonder how much money these writers make, and if they ever have to leave the office for a story. I wonder if they even have offices.

Can you imagine standing in line at the grocery store and seeing your name dragged through the mud on the cover of one of these rags? I could picture me standing in the express lane with an apple and a gallon of milk and see a dweeb in front of me reading his Enquirer which has the headline "Rick Cairns Has a Sex Change and Is Now a Gorgeous Lady of Wrestling." Hopefully most people wouldn't believe it. People that know me are aware that I hate wrestling. Maybe in the future when you pick up an Enquirer you will see the lead story: "Boy Raised By Wolves Becomes a Speech Major at UNCW and Maintains a 3.0 Average." By Rick Cairns, Editor-In-Chief.

We all have our dreams.

If I Were Commissioner...

It has never been the nature of this column to idly fill space by saying "I told you so," but if you will graciously allow me this one week to reflect on my insightful intuitions concerning this past baseball season, I would be forever in your debt. Besides, my birthday was earlier this week, and this is my opportunity to say "happy birthday."

"I told you so," George Steinbrenner. When you signed "expensive" agent Jack Clark last winter with the hopes of securing a divisional title in the talent-laden A.L. East, I wrote in my journal for Eng. 290 (Baseball in Literature) that your acquisition would allow only two positive things to happen in New York: by removing Clark from the otherwise hapless Cardinal offense, you positively assured the Mets of a divisional title, and secondly, I said you thrilled perhaps two million fans. Unfortunately they attend the ball park on the other side of the river and would rather wheel for Soviet leader Gorbachev than attend a Yankee game. I also stated that Clark would not hit 25 home runs. He barely surpassed that mark with 27, the final four coming in the last month when the race was already virtually decided.

"I told you so," Michael Spinks. While people were actually pondering with the ridiculously remote possibility of Spinks actually winning this one-sided mismatch, I from the very onset, correctly predicted a first-round knock out. In the process, I almost managed to pay off my omnipresent Citibank debt with the revenues received from gracious well-wishers from the Spinks campaign.

I could go on, but I think you get the point. Besides since this is my birthday issue, I have several concerns and wishes that I would like to witness in the very near future.

As a gift to myself, I will, heretofore, forever ban any further needless, redundant, columns that laborious detail exactly what the writer would do if he were fortunate enough to be baseball's "Commissioner for a day."

However, I must admit that I, too, have fancied the notion and have several ideas that would greatly improve the game, both on and off the field. Without further hesitation, "If I were commissioner for a day I would..."

"Ban all female reporter's from the men's locker room. The players have the right to shower and dress in the confines of the dressing room which is designated by the "Men's" sign that usually adorns the entrance door. All women wishing to reject this rule on the basis of discrimination there is always a solution. Mine is for the women to enter the lockerroom donning towels. I think that would sufficiently curtail any further needless interrogation involving sweaty, unclothed athletes because, simply put, I don't think the female reporter's have the, uh, guts to conform to wearing "birthday suits."

"Prohibit patrons weighing in excess of a Volvo from entering stadium grounds. Fat people, excuse me, I wouldn't want to offend anyone. Stockholders in Hershey Chocolate, Inc., are always more concerned with concessions than on the field events.

"Reimburse season ticket holders who patriotically visit Fulton County Stadium in the hope of someday seeing the city produce a major league caliber team. No one should be forced to pay that amount of money to see minor league baseball.

"Seriously, abandon the DH, remove artificial turf, allow brass buck pitches, and for God's sake, remove that ridiculous asterisk that mars Roger Maris' incredible feat of 61 home runs in a single season.

Thinking aloud: Jose Canseco, I have been confidently told by many a female classmate, is in fact a Greek God. Although I can't confirm this report, I can, with confidence, tell you that he is the positively the best player in the game. How in the world he failed to garnish MVP honors for his league series achievements borders on insane.

In the you can quote me category, Mike Schmidt will return to club 30-plus home's and challenge for MVP honors. I'm fortunate in that I have enjoyed numerous opportunities to see the greatest player of my generation, and will certainly be in attendance when Michael Jack receives his curtain call ovation at Veteran's Stadium.

And finally, when Robin Givens climbs into the divorce court ring with heavyweight champion, Mike Tyson, my money is on the witch. Why? Because she is the only human alive who has claimed to be hit by the Catskill Crusher and remain standing.

Hawks Unveil 88-89 Squad Players Express Optimism

BY CHRIS WRIGHT
SPORTS EDITOR

UNCW head basketball coach Robert McPherson wasn't talking so his player's and assistant coaches took advantage of Wednesday night's scheduled press conference to interact with the local media and share team and personal expectations for the upcoming season.

Larry Houzer, an All-CAA performer from one year ago, and pre-season All-America this year, quickly stepped in the limelight during the first scheduled glimpse of the '88-89 Seahawk squad.

The 6-8 senior from Alabama alluded to a possible CAA championship, saying "every year our goal is win the conference and get an invitation (to the NCAA tournament)."

Houzer was honored by his high billing. "I'm excited. I'm excited about the new season. This is my last season and I want to go out a winner. I've worked really hard this summer to improve my game, both in the gym and lifting weights. I'm looking forward to leading us to the championship."

Assistant coach Mike Elbe, in his inaugural season with the Hawks, looked forward to coaching a player of Houzer's aptitude. "He's so good now," Elbe said. "But he's going to get even better. I think Larry has a legitimate chance of playing in the NBA. He just needs to improve his perimeter jump shot a little bit and add maybe 20 pounds. He'll definitely be our leader this year."

McPherson, before leaving, did answer a few lingering questions about the Seahawk program. However, he declined to go on record as trying to predict success saying only that "we approach this season in the same manner we approach any new season. We have some capable talent and we have some question marks. Larry is our go to guy in the clutch, but we should also have help from two or three others."

When asked who that help would come from, McPherson smiled and said "I don't go into a season with a preset starting lineup. No one's job is secure. Whoever performs in practice will play. It's that simple."

Hopefully, during the next month, Houzer and McPherson will find that supporting cast before they open play against Rio Claro, at home on the 19 of November.

Report Cards Are Out, Hawks Receive Passing Marks

by PATRICK FOWLER
SEAHAWK STAFF WRITER

The final exams are over and the grading books are officially closed on Seahawk Soccer (101) '88. However the final semester marks will have to take a backseat momentarily as I began to judge the finals.

The Seahawks failed gaining any bonus points on a 2-0 defeat at Campbell Thursday. They were once again handed the old zippo "0".

The sometimes potent offensive spark fizzled, giving no drive or charge to the Hawks' attack. Maybe we weren't ready for Campbell after a relative victory over Francis Marion (5-1). Perhaps fatigue played a role in our demise. Was the goal tank so empty from the Marian contest that we had no goals left for Campbell? Did we underestimate our opponents. They didn't us! In fact, the Camels' coach was present at several Hawks home games. He watched, conversed with UNCW opponents' coaches and players after their game, and took down both written and mental notes. He must have done a excellent job because the Camels dominated the field of play Thursday. I'll grant some lenience though for our men did hang tough. I mean 2-0 score isn't too bad. I'll give a C- for effort.

Nothing but sweet AS for the Hawk's 3-0 victory over touted Virginia Commonwealth. The offensive revived from Thursday's humbling effects and got back to basic give and go passes that resulted in 3 goals. Defenseman Sean Wallace ended the Seahawk's one game drought by connecting on a Dean Marnell (Deno) pass for his second goal of the season. Jimmy McManus followed next booting a screamer in the pole. The Hawk's led comfortably with 2-0 at half. John Hoffman scored the lone goal of the second half receiving another Deno offering to obtain our final tally. Goalie John Pinter recorded his fourth shutout this year stopping 10 shots.

Ok, you've seen the finals turned in by the Seahawks. Now let's get down to the nitty-gritty of individually grading areas of the Hawks' game. Remember these are my opinions and mine alone, but I'm the prof. today. So without further adieu here is the Seahawks' report card.

The Hawk's offensive earns themselves a C+/B-. It was an explosive scoring force at times but way too often went into early hibernation. Six times the 1-2 punch of the Hawks was shut down completely. Despite CAA leading scorer Chris George (13 goals), David Cresswell (3 goals) and Charlie Mitchell (5) efforts, I can't bring myself to award a higher rating. The defense on the other hand obtains a well-deserve B+ from yours truly. Marc Rose (Rosie) and company kept their opponents in check enough in every game so that the Hawks weren't more than 2 goals from tying up the game. Sophomore stand-out goalie John Pinter had a great year recording 82 saves, 4 shutouts, a 1 goal game average that earned him the sixth place finish in CAA goalie rankings. That impressive performance earns a extra credit A. Strong defense talents like Sean Wallace, Jimmy McManus, and Dean Marnell helped make Goalie Pinter life easier.

Bench Support grabs a A- in my book. Toward the end of the season the Hawks sustained numerous key injuries (like to defensive gem Marc Rose) and coach Blackmore had to call on his reserves. No problem for these 12th men, who were ready for the challenge. They just step right into the shoes of their fallen teammates and did a top-notch job. The 9-7-1 winning season record captures a B rating for third year coach Jackie Blackmore. He managed to mold nine sophomores and two seniors (starters) into a up and coming power in the CAA. Although the talents of seniors Dave Cresswell (38 points in 4 years) and John Hollenbach (Team spirit leader) will be sorely missed; the future looks bright. A couple of new faces and another year of maturity could pay dividends of a CAA title. Blackmore has improved his track record dramatically in only three short years. He was 4-11-1 his first season, then jumped to the brink of the .500 mark last year with a 7-8-1 mark and finally boasted a winning mark of 9-7-1. He even threw in a major upset stunning a CAA favorite American 2-1. Despite his accomplishments a dismal 3-4 CAA record only earns them a C. Hopefully they can remedy this problem.

Ok gang, you've seen the Hawk's raw score. If you want to know the overall final grade of our team follow these simple steps: add the G.P.A. scores, multiply by 17 games, divide by Blackmore's total win record over three years, and just apply into Eistein's Theory of Relativity E=MC<sup>2</sup>. Or, you can save the burning off of extra brain cells and take my word for it when I say B- GUYS!

Pesky Pirates, 27th Victim

BY MAI NGUYEN
SEAHAWK STAFF WRITER

The Seahawks encountered a powerful foe as they combatted East Carolina Wednesday, November 2. ECU's coach Judy Kirkpatrick employed several tactical strategies to impede the Hawk's continual momentum early in the first game. The Spikers ignored the commonly used time-out technique to win the first game.

In the second explosive game, the Hawks were able to handle the ball with smooth precision. The transitions between each player as they passed the ball were highly accurate and polished. The Pirates retorted with deadly offensive moves executed by Kerry Weisbord. Weisbord sent many rocketing topkins which were dealt with accordingly.

The Hawks suddenly became disoriented in the third game as they were unable coalesce to handle the strong Pirate strokes. The Lady Spiker's experienced a series of energy gains and losses which allowed ECU to get a foothold by winning the third game(15-9).

Fortunately, UNCW recovered from its momentary lapse of reason as the team plunged into the fourth and final game. Luckily, the game was devoid of thrilling plays and the Hawks swept up 15-12.

Hannah Helton "had not anticipated what a tough match it would be"

and Coach McDaniel felt that "the team was not at its best." The UNCW team benefited immensely by using substitute Diane Lynn's sets and saves.

The Spikers raise their winning streak to an awesome twelve games as well as bringing the record to 27-1.

Houzer, Bender Earn Pre-Season Honors

BY CHRIS WRIGHT
SEAHAWK SPORTS EDITOR

Now that Larry Houzer has more than adequately manned the center position vacated by current Charlotte Hornet, Brian Rowson, Coach Robert McPherson's 1988-89 edition of the Seahawk basketball team seems poised to acquire its first twenty-win season and post season appearance.

McPherson entering his third year as the Hawks head coach has piloted UNCW to upper division finishes in each of his previous two seasons and views this squad as one of his more talented teams.

"This is the best group overall that we've had coming back," he said. "Larry and Antonio (Howard) are very talented and Greg (Bender) gives everything he's got every time out."

"Experience will be a strength for us. We have a lot of experience and more quality depth back. We have a lot of players who have been through the program and the schedule. They know what they have to do and what the coaching staff expects from them."

In addition to the high quality of returning talent, McPherson also expects several incoming freshmen to play an important role in determining the team's overall fate.

"We have good depth and I think we brought in some quality freshmen who can play and contribute to our success."

UNCW's first recruit was a much needed big man, Matt Fish, 6-10 center from Washington, Iowa whose per game average of 10.7 rebounds ranked him second among Iowa's prep cagers.

That support on the boards will come as a relief to Houzer who despite averaging a team high 7.3 rebounds, often found himself outmanned on the front line, perennially the Hawks strong point.

"One of my concerns is the lack of a proven front line," McPherson noted. "With the exception of Larry, we don't have a lot of inside power coming back. Guys like Scott Tierney, Matt Fish, and Major Wiggins have to come through for the front line to control the glass at both ends of the court. We have to do that to become a championship (caliber) ball club."

Houzer, an All-CAA selectee last year and a preseason All-America candidate this season, was an impact player who the Hawks continually looked to for offensive out put. And as his team high 11 points per game average would suggest, he often delivered.

"Larry's our go to guy in crunch situation," said McPherson. "He can flat out score. He adjusted very well last year and he worked hard in the off-season. A years experience will certainly help him."

Houzer's relief will be provided by Wiggins, who after only acquiring 21 minutes of playing time last year looks to play a prominent role this season, and Fish, the bulky freshman whose talent has yet to be tested in the collegiate ranks.

Three year starter and a Rhodes Scholarship candidate, 6-6 small forward Greg Bender is back for his final season. His leadership will be instrumental, both on and off the court. Freshman Brian Withers and senior Ricky Griffin are expected to spell the Ohio native at that position.

"We must get better production out of three position," McPherson confided. "Greg has carried the load by himself for the last three seasons. We need to get more production out of that position for all 40 minutes."

As the only player to start all 29 games last season, Bender averaged over 11 PPG and 5.2 RPG, both 2nd place finishes. And for the second consecutive season, the sociology major earned academic All-CAA by virtue of his 3.7 GPA.

"Greg is a very steady player who knows his way around," McPherson suggested. "I look for him to have a good senior year. If he can go out and get us 12 or 14 points a night, we'll be much better offensively than we were last year."

Freshman Ed Chesney is expected to battle 6-7 freshman Scott Tierney for the starting nod at the power forward position. Tierney possesses a nice outside touch and his year of grooming may provide an edge. Wiggins, additionally, may split time between power forward and center.

"Scott made some freshman mistakes last year and needs to be more consistent," McPherson noted. "He showed some flashes of great things to come at times. He's the most natural player because he's a good passer and rebounder."

"Ed is a good rebounder and shoots the ball well facing the basket. We're pleased to have him because he's a very good shooter."

One key loss that might slow the Hawks transition game occurred when starting point guard was declared academically ineligible. Even so, the Hawk's have an excellent backcourt returning, showcasing senior Antonio Howard.

At shoot guard, Howard averaged 10 points per game last season, the last of three Hawks averaging in double figures. And like Bender, he was also an All-Academic CAA performer.

"Antonio's scoring will pick up this year," said McPherson. He has excellent quickness and scores well from the 14 to 16 foot range. He's also the best penetrator on the team."

Newcomer Mark Eaton and senior Kenna Mickens will relieve Howard. The 6-3 Eaton averaged 27.8 points last year, earning All-State recognition in Ohio. Mickens is a defensive specialist and back for his fourth season in green and gold.

The point guard position is easily the most competitive, with all three candidates possessing a wealth of talent. Brannon Lancaster saw considerable action last season as a freshman, often relieving Williams. The Fayetteville native scored a season high nine points in his lone start, a 84-71 victory over Appalachian State.

Adam Porter, returns after being red-shirted following a debilitating leg injury last season. He started seven of the Hawks first nine contests last year.

Joe Cherry carries an impressive high school portfolio into his first collegiate season. As a prep standout, he averaged over 31 points a contest.

McPherson, hesitant to predict an exact finish, admits this season is his most promising.

"We might have a better team than last year and not have as good a record because of our schedule. When you go down through it, we don't have any 'weak sisters' anywhere. It has to be one of the toughest schedules in the school's history. We might finish fifth and have a very good ball club."

UNCW opens play with an exhibition game against Brazil, November 19, in Trask Coliseum.

Fraternities Investigated

Three Cases Closed; One Pending

BY CELESTE BULLEY
& CHAD ADAMS
EDITORS

As a result of questionable activities at the pledge talent show on Oct. 27, and two separate incidents on Halloween night at the Chi Phi house and Airline Gardens, UNCW has processed four investigations against Greek organizations.

On Oct. 27, the members of Tau Nu Pi and Kappa Sigma dressed as the Jackson five, and The Bob Marley Group, respectively. Following the Pledge Talent Night, the NAACP attended a Greek President's Council Meeting and voiced their opinions regarding the pledge's choice of subject matter as racist.

"As a result of the Greek Council meeting, where issues were raised, both fraternities submitted statements to my office indicating that they understand that, by what happened, they were in violation of the discrimination guideline in the code of student life, but that there was no intent for that to happen," said Dean of Student's Pat Leonard.

On Halloween Eve, a group of eleven UNCW students, including five Delta Tau Delta brothers and two pledges, were arrested for trespassing in Airline Gardens. A question of hazing was raised as the Wilmington Morning Star reported that it was suspected they were there for an "initiation ritual."

"Based on this, the University felt the need to conduct a preliminary investigation," stated Leonard.

"And based on my interviews with Delta Tau Delta members and information I have received from the New Hanover County Sheriff's Department, there is no evidence to indicate that there was an attempt to haze nor to perform any type of ritual."

However, this does not negate the other charges. According to Leonard, "the charge of trespassing is between [Airline's owners] and the seven individuals." Dan Belcher, president of Delta Tau Delta confirmed that charges were being pressed.

A Greek President's Council Meeting like this one was the place where much of the outrage about Greek activity started. Held this week, this meeting concerned other issues of importance to the Greeks.

It is important to clarify that although rumors abounded on the presence of Delta Tau Delta's National representative in town at the time, he was not called in especially for the incident; his visit had been planned in advance.

Also, on that night, the pledges of Chi Phi were dressed for an "invitation only" party as blacks. After the meeting of the Greek President's Council, the NAACP decided to file charges against Chi Phi with the Office of the Dean of Students on account of the Chi Phi's actions Halloween night. A statement from the University followed.

It stated, "The University registration of the Chi Phi fraternity has been temporarily suspended by William A. Bryan, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, pending investigation of allegations of an incident which occurred at the fraternity house on

A Week Examining Rape Awareness

BY MELISSA AMBROSE
STAFF WRITER

"Intimacy, pleasure, or pain? The Reality of Sexual Assault" is the theme for this year's Rape Awareness Week to be held November 14-18.

Rape Awareness Week is sponsored by the Dean of Students, Department of Public Safety, and the Wilmington Rape Crisis Center.

"The Purpose of Rape Awareness Week is to educate staff, students, and faculty on issues of sexual assault," said Jacquie Skinner, assistant Dean of Students.

She stresses the fact that they are trying to "do away with myths about rape, such as: a rapist is some stranger you meet in an alley late at night. Wrong. It could be a friend, boyfriend, or neighbor."

During Rape Awareness week there will be discussions on how to avoid rape by better communications between boyfriends and girlfriends, control of alcohol intake, and how each party feels about sex. "Men and women should both take responsibility so that rape does not occur. Don't send mixed signals. If you say 'no,' mean 'no.'"

The main focus of the week will deal with date or acquaintance rape, which is, "the most common type of rape on college campus," stated Carolyn Brown, of the Wilmington Rape Crisis Center.

"We want to make students aware that it could happen to them, or to a friend," said Brown. She too stresses that communication is a major key to avoid date rape.

There will be a workshop dealing with relationship communication given by Debbie Haywood, of LivWell, on Thursday night from 6:30 to 8:00 in Room 100 of the union.

Every day there will be an information table set up in the Union as well as other daily activities. There will be a video tape dramatization of acquaintance rape also.

Special daily workshops will be presented by different individuals, starting Monday with "The Reality of Sexual Assault" in Room 210 of the union from 3:30-5:00.

This workshop will be presented by Jacquie Skinner and Regina Lawson of Public Safety. Self-defense class will be taught in Hanover Gym from 4:30 to 6:30.

Tuesday's workshop will be a repeat of Monday's "The Reality of Sexual Assault," presented in Relac from 8:00-9:30.

Greeks Doing Good Things for Community

SCOTT WHEELER
STAFF WRITER

The Greeks here at UNCW do a variety of things aside from the one activity that attracts the most attention from the media, partying. They help some of the local charities with a variety of services including fund raisers.

One of the largest efforts put forth this year by the Greeks was the "Trick or Treat" for canned goods in which all fraternities and sororities participated with good success. The different Greek organizations from UNCW went through local neighborhoods asking for canned goods for the needy. These cans of food were then donated to the Salvation Army for distribution to those in need.

This project was the brainchild of two very dedicated Greeks, Jeff Clark of Chi Phi and Beth Lynde of Alpha Delta Pi. Clark, who has recently resigned his position as President of the Interfraternity Council because of his fraternity's temporary suspension, was a driving force in the organization of the Greek's fall philanthropy project.

Lynde, who is currently President of the Panhellenic Council on campus, deserves equal credit in the organization of this project. Her dedicated perseverance in contacting the representatives of the various Greek organizations and planning the entire effort with Clark, is an excellent example of what Greek leadership consists of.

The event was advertised well in advance with flyers going out to the area neighborhoods and ads in the Star-News as well as the Seahawk.

"The collection went extremely well," said Clark, "an average of one-hundred cans of varying foods were collected by each organization, with the entire amount given to the Salvation Army."

In all, eleven fraternities and four sororities participated, with Xi Delta Phi collecting the most cans.

"The Greeks of UNCW were very proud to contribute their time and efforts to such a worthy cause, and we had a lot of fun doing it," added Clark.

The Greeks are currently planning to have a clothing drive for their spring philanthropy project.

Many UNCW fraternities and sororities participate in projects designed to help community organizations regularly throughout the year.

The Chi Phi fraternity helped to move the hospice from its old location, next to the Cape Fear Memorial Hospital, to its new location in the historic downtown Wilmington area, on October 15. They are also involved with the Muscular Dystrophy Association here in Wilmington.

Another very busy Greek organization is the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity which sponsored a 5k run to benefit the Shriner's Crippled Children's Fund with overwhelming success. This fraternity also cleans up a two mile section of South College Road four times a year

What will we do with them all?

Jeff Clark and Beth Lynde look perplexed over a stack of cans collected in the Greek Can Drive. The cans will go to area organizations for distribution.

Cadet's Achievement Recognized

(UNCW News) -- Three cadets in the UNC-Wilmington Seahawk Battalion were recognized recently for their academic achievements. Each year cadets in the ROTC Advanced Course are offered the opportunity to compete for scholarships provided by nationwide organizations who support the academic excellence of ROTC cadets.

Cadet Major Stephen Maxner of Waltham, Massachusetts won a $1500 national scholarship from United Services Automobile Association, San Antonio Texas. In addition to the cash scholarship, Cadet Maxner received an all expense paid trip to Washington, D.C., from 16-18 October. Cadet Maxner attended the Annual Convention of the Association of the United States Army and received his scholarship from COL John Walker, Jr., retired, Director, Member Relations and Military Affairs for United Services Automobile Association.

Cadet Major Sam McAdoo, Augusta, Georgia, won a $1000 scholarship provided by Pentagon Federal Credit Union, Alexandria, Virginia. Cadet McAdoo was the winner for First ROTC Region which included schools from Maine to Georgia and west to the Mississippi River.

Cadet Captain Jeffrey Cole, New Hampton, Iowa, won the First ROTC Region $1000 Scholarship presented by United Services Automobile Association.

Competition for the scholarship is especially keen due to the large number of schools with ROTC programs in First Region. By winning three of five scholarships open this year, these students won out over many highly qualified applicants. These three scholarship recipients join a list of 15 other UNCW ROTC cadets who are currently receiving 2-, 3-, and 4-year full ROTC scholarships.

Playboy Enrages Catholics

(CPS) -- Administrators at six Catholic colleges are outraged that Playboy magazine plans to recruit women at their schools for a pictorial entitled "The Women of the Big East."

"We were shocked to learn that they're planning such a feature," said Martin Healy, a spokesman for St. John's University in New York. "Public nudity is against our morals. They will not be permitted on campus."

The Rev. J. Donald Monan, president of Boston College, called Playboy "symbolic of the exploitation of American women."

At New Jersey's Seton Hall University, spokesman Michael McGraw said the magazine's representatives would also be barred from campus. "We're not supporting them because it's not consistent with the teaching of the Catholic church," he said. "We doubt they'll be very successful here. Most of our students who go to school here have strong values."

But Playboy spokeswoman Elizabeth Norris said the men's magazine doesn't seek the cooperation of administrators at any of the colleges it visits. Instead, it advertises its search off-campus and in student newspapers.

"We don't do our interviews on campus. We do them in hotels that are convenient to the students. The administrators should have no part in this."

Playboy annually descends on a group of campuses to find college women willing to pose for it in varying states of undress. The magazine then publishes the photos in its September issues under the rubric of "Women of a certain athletic conference."

The visits typically amount to a publicity bonanza for the magazine, often provoking pickets protesting the exploitation of women and stem warnings from administrators.

During last spring's Playboy swing through schools belonging to the Southwest Athletic Conference, Baylor University President Herbert Reynolds angrily warned women they'd regret posing for the magazine.

Student newspapers at Texas Christian University, Harvard and California-Berkeley have refused to take recruiting ads from the magazine.

Catholic schools, Healy said, have a special obligation to object. "We may communicate with the student body and point out to them that this would be offensive to everything we stand for. This really is designed to exploit women, and that's another reason we're unilaterally opposed to it."

Playboy officials say the one school they've visited so far—the private, secular University of Pittsburgh—was successful, with more than 100 women "interviewed."

Playboy photographers were scheduled to visit their first Catholic campus—Providence College in Rhode Island—Oct. 26.

The Rev. John McGreevy, a Providence spokesman, said he would be surprised if even one student shows up. "Both men and women are incensed about the idea."

$5000 Prize for Research

The Institute of Noetic Sciences is offering The Sheldrake Prize for the best student research on new theory of behavior. A $5,000 prize will be awarded by the Institute of Noetic Sciences for the best scientific test, conducted by a student, of a controversial new theory of biological organization.

The hypothesis of formative causation predicts that new kinds of molecules, crystals, patterns of organization in animals and plants, and patterns of behavior should tend to arise more readily all over the world the more often they have arisen before, owing to "morphic resonance" from previous similar systems.

This hypothesis describes how living things take their shape, and suggests that the growth and development of each species is not directed by biochemical and genetic mechanisms alone, but by a unique morphic field that exists outside the organism.

The prize will be awarded to the student who conducts the most rigorous and scientifically "elegant" experiment, regardless of whether it confirms or refutes the theory. Entries will be accepted from students at the high school through post-graduate level.

Experiments will be accepted from any field to which Sheldrake's theory applies, such as chemistry, biology, animal behavior or psychology. Entries may be submitted any time prior to September 30, 1990. The experiments will be judged by an international panel of scientists.

Monday, Oct. 31. It is alleged that pledges dressed as Black waiters and served the brother's using "a slave dialect." It also stated that the issues involved in this incident includes alleged hazing and discrimination; The Dean of Student's office has been investigating those charges since that time.

A temporary suspension of an organization involves the withdrawal of the organization's registration, and the suspension of their campus privileges. Examples include such things as the group is not allowed to meet under their name on campus, use campus facilities, or solicit money for fund raising events on campus.

By Nov. 8, three of the investigations had been completed. As a result of the two investigations dealing with the pledge talent show, actions were taken against Kappa Sigma and Tau Nu Pi by the Dean of Students Office for their violation of the discrimination policy in the Handbook of Student Life. The action taken against the two fraternities was confirmed by Pat Leonard as being uniform.

There were mixed reactions to the actions taken by the Dean of Student's Office. Belcher was pleased with Delta Tau Delta's being cleared of charges and said, "I'm happy that the University found us not guilty, but I'm disappointed in how things got blown out of proportion about our national advisor coming." He added, "I'm happy that it's over."

Tau Nu Pi president Brandon Soir said, "We feel our punishment was fair, and we just want to move on from here."

Kappa Sigma representative Merrit Hooper had no comment pending discussion of the action with his other fraternity brothers.

As stated in the Code of Student Life Handbook, any of those groups who feel their punishment was unfair are allowed 72 hours to appeal the Dean's decision in writing.

Soir and Belcher indicated that they would not appeal the decision.

The fourth case, involving the Chi Phi fraternity is still under investigation.

Awareness

Wednesday's workshop deals with "Who is the Rapist?" presented by Carolyn Brown. This will take place in Room 206 of the union from 3:30-5:00. That night in Bryan Auditorium from 7:00-9:00 there will be a forum discussion on issues of Sexual Assault such as the legal and medical aspect of rape.

Thursday's workshop is "Dating and Relating" given by Debbie Haywood, in Room 100 of the union from 6:30-8:00.

Friday's workshop deal with "It's Never Too Late to Tell Someone," given by Dr. Diane McKinstry from Student Development from 3:30-5:00 in Room 206 of the union. Another self-defense class will be taught in Hanover Gym from 4:30-6:30.

"The event is set up not to scare, but to inform" said Skinner. "Rape is not an intimate sexual act but an act of violence in which sex is used as a weapon which includes emotional and physical pain and suffering."

Minority Visitation Comes To UNCW

BY RICK HEYMANN
NEWS EDITOR

The Eighth Annual Minority Visitation Day will be held this Saturday, November 12. The day's activities will begin at 12:30 p.m. in the University Union rm. 100. The program is designed to acquaint prospective minority students with the University.

The agenda for the day includes registration in the union, followed by an official welcome by Ralph Parker, Director of Minority Affairs and Diane Zeeman, Director of Admissions.

At 1:45, a presentation by Hank Fuller, Assistant Director of Financial Aid, and Douglas Johnson, Associate Director of Admissions, will inform the minority students of the special assistance the University can offer them.

Around 3:00, students and parents will have a group discussion with currently enrolled minority students, faculty, and staff. The rest of the day will include a tour of the campus and dinner in the UNCW cafeteria. To end the day, the students and parents will be treated to a "variety show."

Minority Visitation Day had quite an unorthodox beginning. As Johnson mentioned during an interview, "The legal end of the NAACP, called the Legal Defense Fund, filed suit against the UNC system because there were not enough minority students at these universities."

The NAACP construed that all UNC system schools were "operating a segregated system," according to Johnson. The Legal Defense Fund won that suit. The official court order handed down to the UNC system, the "consent decree," called for all UNC system schools to increase minority enrollment.

Ralph Parker commented that,

"the attendance for this program has increased every year since we have held the event." This increase in attendance has had a profound impact on minority enrollment at this university.

This increase in enrollment is largely due to how the University recruits students to attend this event. First and foremost, flyers publicizing the event are sent to "all high schools within a 50 mile radius" says Johnson. Information regarding the visitation day is sent to individual homes only upon request.

As an event, Minority Visitation Day has been a smashing success in terms of upholding the courts demands. The greater majority of students who attend the event "end up enrolling in our university," says Johnson. Johnson further maintained that UNCW currently has a 6.6% minority enrollment, with, "10.4% to shoot for as a goal for all UNC system schools" through the governor's Adopt a Highway program. They helped the Republican party by putting up campaign signs and plan to help the Rotary Club with their Christmas Fantasia program.

This past Sunday, the Panhellinic Council hosted a "toga party" to benefit the Yahwee Center for abused children. The party was very successful with everyone attending donating two dollars to the cause.

This "party" doubled as an awards ceremony for the can drive and the pledge talent show. Awards were given out for the top three organizations in the can drive and first place in the talent show. Xi Delta Phi won first place in the can drive with second and third places going to Alpha Delta Pi and Delta Tau Delta respectively. For the pledge show there was a tie for first place between the pledges of the Chi Phi and Tau Nu Pi fraternities.

These are just a few examples of the beneficial things that Greeks have done to help the community. Their service to several organizations in Wilmington is vital to the existence of those organizations. Continued efforts by the Greeks is appreciated by many members of the community and there is hope that these activities can overshadow the recent events that have placed the Greeks in a negative light in Wilmington.

He says: Petition the College Republicans

Dear Editors,

Two weeks ago I ran into a display of stupidity in the Union. I'm talking about the College Republicans and their absurd petition against the Gay and Lesbian Organization. What right do they have to come out against any organization because of the beliefs of its members?

How would they like it if someone started a petition against them. (Hint!) Although the College Republicans were using this as a point to say that SGA funding has gone far enough and SGA should draw the line at funding political and other types of clubs, why wait until the Gay and Lesbian Organization seeks funding? Why not a petition against funding such organizations as Focus, NAACP, Club Football, etc. Come on people, let's get serious. The College Republicans have become bigoted homophobes!

The Truth About Greeks

Dear Editor,

Concerning your editorial "Remember the Truth about Pledging Greek" in the October 27, 1988 issue of the Seahawk I have a few problems with how the editorial was written and the accusations implied.

This editorial never came right out and said anything specifically, but its sarcastic nature got its point across. The editorial was probably written in order to provoke controversy, and to give the Seahawk something to play upon in upcoming issues.

Why the Seahawk printed this editorial is unimportant, but the effect it will have on people's opinions is. The Seahawk chose to criticize instead of spending a little more time to look at the positive things Greeks do for the campus and the community.

Halloween night the members of Panhellenic and the Interfraternity Council took part in a can drive for the needy of Wilmington. While there was an advertisement for this event in the Seahawk this event was not mentioned in the editorial, nor were any other charitable projects sponsored by Greeks.

In the future I hope the Seahawk will try to focus more on the positive aspects of Greek life and the good we do, instead of the obvious and easy criticism. Also, is anyone wants to know the truth about pledging Greek it's very simple. Ask a GREEK!

About the Chi Phi's...

Dear Editor,

My letter concerns the incident occurring at the Chi Phi Fraternity house Halloween party [on] October 31, 1988. Being a twenty-five year old non-traditional student who is a veteran of six years in the Navy, I've been around the world and have seen what is defined as racism in many different countries. Being a brother of Chi Phi, I was present at the party in question. Yes, the pledges decided to dress as black people, but of all types, not as servants. That was their own decision, not the Fraternity's.

Along with the brotherhood, our pledges share the responsibility of hosting the parties, checking ID's, controlling parking and crowds. This year, Chi Phi has had no problem with neighbor complaints or with the Wilmington Police because of these responsibilities being taken seriously.

Most of our parties are open to the student body and are controlled. We do not limit ourselves to inviting particular races. At all of our open functions, one can find a wide variety of students of all types and races. At a Halloween party last year, a black student came dressed as a white doctor. ... so what, it was Halloween. We all dress as something or someone we are not, but not in a demeaning manner, and certainly not in a racist way.

The Chi Phi Fraternity, started in 1824, has never in any way promoted any form of racism, hazing or satanic ways of life, but it does promote brotherhood, leadership and responsibility to society as well as well poised and self confident young men ready to be tomorrow's leaders.

What is happening with this issue being blown out of proportion, is friction that didn't exist before. It's not just whites against blacks, but students against teachers, students against the school system and Fraternity against Fraternity. What are we here for to get an education or to be the center of public attention for a non-existent problem in our fraternity... Racism?

History comes Alive with Julius Scales

MARC KELLEY
SPECIAL TO THE SEAHAWK

Wednesday night in Room 100 of the Student Union was history come alive. Only a handful attended, but history is always about the few.

Julius Irving Scales was born March 26, 1920, in Greensboro, N.C., "into apartheid, Southern style." While a student at UNC-Chapel Hill he joined the communist party. Why? Because his was a time of racial suppression and political hypocrisy and, being a civil libertarian, he decided to help the blacks and the working man. Those were the main calling cards of the early American Communist Party.

Scales began by stating that America is currently drifting away from its ideals. Mentioning that our Constitution is built basically on the Bill of Rights (the 1st ten amendments), the civil liberties which are our symbols of freedom to the world. For a person falsely imprisoned, asking "It's a free country--isn't it?" has special meaning.

A recent example of "drifting away from our constitutional principles" is this quote from an interview with the president of the New York City Police Union regarding a presidential candidate--"He's a civil libertarian and that goes against our philosophical outlook." That speaks well of the protectors of our "civil liberties." Analyze that and you can see the inherent danger. The greater danger, lurking in the shadows, is that many people in "power" think that way. It can be tied in to Scales' somewhat humorous account of a policeman beating on a reporter, and the reporter says, "Hey! Stop it, I'm not one of those communists, I'm an anti-communist!" The cop starts hitting him again as he replies back, "We're against any communists."

In reference to the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), Scales states that they are non-partisan, have about 200,000 members, and are autonomous. The ACLU is currently defending Col. Oliver North because it believes that the U.S. government has violated his rights. They are dedicated to the principle "that all men are created equal."

Citing a New York Times story, Scales stated that, "if the people had to consider adding the Bill of Rights today, they would probably be voted down as too soft on crime!"

Some sad points for Americans, yet glory points for the oppressors of the time are (according to Scales): (1) the early Constitution gives limited powers to the states and U.S. governments and leaves "the People" in control, all the people save Indians and slaves. It took about 75 years for their rights to emerge. Words are hollow unless people feel them and live them; (2) In 1857 the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court said that blacks had no rights white people had to respect; (3) Justice Marshall reminds us that we have a long way to go; (4) the U.S. imprisoned Japanese Americans in concentration camps in WWII, totally disregarding their Constitutional rights because of their race, a disgusting habit they are just now rectifying--47 years later, and along with other rights violations the U.S. fit to deny voting rights to U.S. women as well.

It was for these reasons, of empathy for the oppressed, that Scales became a member of the communist party. He quit upon realizing that he and others had been lied to, especially when they found out details of Stalin's hideous regime, systematically starving 22 million White Russians to death, etc. "The fact that America is a nation of laws is a big plus," states Scales. "The only danger is when the government sees fit to violate the law because it is intolerant of dissent; when it needs to bend or break the law(s) in order to get unpopular people," states Scales.

From the 1930's Scales had a history of standing shoulder to shoulder with blacks protesting civil rights abuses. It's interesting to note that during his first trial in Greensboro in 1958 (U.S. District Court) he kept noticing two well dressed black men (some of the few court spectators not intimidated by the gestapo-like presence of the FBI, et al) who finally approached him at a water fountain one day, shook his hand, and said that Rev. Martin Luther King wanted to be kept aware of the proceedings!

It is, therefore, odd that no representatives of UNCW's many minority organizations showed up to listen to one of the earliest civil rights supporters. Perhaps they will read his book "Cause at Heart: A Former Communist Remembers," by the University of Georgia Press.

At the close of the talk a few persons asked questions. Robert Smith asked about the Soviets, and Scales stated that "the Soviets had not lived up to the ideals of communist brotherhood. That they were oppressive, rigid, and had perverted humane ideals, and offered nothing for the workers."

A little lady, over 29 and under 100, said she was waiting for a revolution. She views herself as a socialist. (Writers note: anyone partaking of social security, food stamps, welfare, etc. are practicing socialists, or perhaps blissfully ignorant. We use to be thought of as a Constitutional Republic, yet we act like a democratic-socialist state.) So much for words on parchment. A noteworthy point of the Scales case is that he was defended by Telford Taylor, who was a brigadier general in WWII and chief Allied prosecutor at the infamous Nuremberg war crimes trial. Taylor writes "The trial, conviction, and imprisonment of Julius Scales was a major case testing the American constitutional principles and values." Scales served as an "illegal slave" for the Feds in a maximum security penitentiary at Lewisburg. After 15 months (of six years) President John Kennedy commuted the sentence.

A fitting end is a quote from The Humanist: "Cause at Heart" is the moving account of a young idealist caught up in the storm and stress of Southern racism and wage slavery... and imprisonment for beliefs he never held and for membership in an organization he had already quit and publicly disavowed."

Real Racism, By Definition

Racism: any program or practice of racial discrimination, segregation, persecution, and domination, based on racialism.

Racialism: a doctrine or teaching, without scientific support, that claims to find racial differences in character, intelligence, etc., that asserts the superiority of one race over another or others, and that seeks to maintain the supposed purity of a race or the races.

Both of these definitions come from the New World Dictionary of the American Language and they clearly give the definition of racism.

Section II-Student Conduct and Appeals, part B: The Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs or his/her designee may initiate disciplinary proceedings a student or group who (part 22) discriminates against another student by using offensive speech or behavior of a biased or prejudiced nature related to one's personal characteristics, such as race, color, national origin, sex, religion, handicap, age, or affect/sexual preference.

The above is the official policy of the University as set forth in the UNCW Student Handbook & Code of Student Life for the '88-'89 school year.

In the past two weeks heightened awareness of racial tension has led to heightened sensitivity to otherwise non-racial issues.

I feel that people should really take their personal view of what racism is and align that 'personal' view and apply it to the accepted definition of racism.

I've lived in Puerto Rico and in Del Rio, Texas. In both locations I as a 'white person' was a minority. In Texas, I was bussed because of my skin color. On one level, I could view this 'bussing' based on skin color as a racist action, but to an objective teacher color wouldn't matter. On another level, however, it is clear that this movement was done to prevent racial problems from occurring.

If one wants to find occurrences of racism, it isn't hard to do; it does exist.

In the U.S. the KKK is protected by the Constitution. Are they racial? Yes, clearly so. Are the Neo-Nazis racial? Again yes, again clearly so. Is all racism anti-black? No, clearly not. These are facts. From this perspective, when one accepts that there is a problem, can you isolate, analyze and rectify racial problems.

My point is this: What the fraternities did at the pledge talent show was done in fun, I honestly believe that. Blacks and whites who were present were enjoying the event. In my opinion, there was nothing racial in what the Kappa Sig and Tau Nu Pi pledges did. If, in their minds, they really felt that their act was racist in any way, they wouldn't have performed them.

Once again, racism is existent in this world, in this nation, in this state and in this town, but the degree of racism on this campus is minimal if existent unless you want it to be. There have been no riots here, no deaths here, no one is litigating on racial grounds at this time.

If you, as a person, in your personal belief, want to find racism somewhere, you can. In a picture, a slang, a hairstyle, a walk, or an attitude racism can be interpreted, but before you call someone a racist, you'd better be pretty damn sure you know what racism is and that you can back it up, because accusations like that can lead to such legal precedents as slander!

UNCW's Closed Eye Policy On Hazing

This University's "closed eye" policy on Greek hazing is ridiculous. They have taken it upon themselves to only investigate an incident when the entire town has made an issue of it.

There are plenty of times when no one raises a fuss that questionable events go on. There is one particular registered group that openly performs what could be "alleged" to be hazing in and around the University Union, but they have not been questioned in recent times.

The hypersensitivity that has occurred in the past few weeks over the talent show, the Chi Phi party and the Airlie Gardens incident were ridiculous and has taken its tolls. The Delts have been cleared of anything, the talent show issue was resolved and the Chi Phi fraternity is suspended temporarily for "suspicion". Suspended for suspicion? This, again, is very wrong. Four groups were under investigation. The Chi Phi fraternity was the only one that had two "alleged" reasons for being investigated, and they were the only ones suspended.

The administration has taken the "guilty until proven innocent" stance on this issue. There used to be a phrase called "innocent until proven guilty."

To give an organization the benefit of the doubt, they should be allowed to continue their activity as usual unless an investigation proves something to be amiss. If in the end the investigation does prove that the fraternity is at fault then and only then should action be taken. If the fraternity is cleared, how can they ever regain the dignity after being the only fraternity temporarily suspended in recent times?

Clarifications &amp; Corrections

Concerning the picture on the back page of last week's issue of the Seahawk, we would like to clarify the reasons for printing it, as we've received much criticism on the matter.

The controversial photograph is of a torn sign on a tree trunk near the entrance to the athletic fields on Reigel Rd. The sign has been posted there for several months and had been pointed out to Seahawk staffers during this time as being good subject matter for a campus incidental photo.

We stand behind the picture as being for that purpose alone-- not to make a social or racial statement. We would like to recognize the possibility of its untimeliness, with the understanding that it may have been offensive to some due to the content of the front page.

We feel, however, that at any other time, the picture would not have provoked such an intense response, and would like to remind everyone of the value of keeping a sense of humor and objectivity during any crisis.

• In the article entitled "Gay and Lesbian Request Disturbs Many" it was stated that $19 of student's semester fees go to the Student Organization Committee. It should have said "to the SGA." In addition to this, Todd Shaver is not the head of SOC, he is Student Activities Director.

Changing U.S. Priorities

This week is World Hunger Awareness Week at UNCW and Friday is also Veterans Day. Hunger awareness reminds us that hunger has never been more extensive and debilitating than it is now.

Veterans Day, beyond being an occasion to honor the sacrificial death of millions of our nation's soldiers and the service of our nation's veterans, also points to the incredible price of war. It is appropriately symbolic that these two events happen in the same week for there is a connection between world hunger and the current threat of conventional war and the developing arms race.

About ten thousand people a day die from hunger or malnutrition of related diseases. Seven hundred million people are malnourished, 1.2 billion people without pure water, 16 million are refugees, 1.2 billion are without adequate clothing or housing, and 1.6 billion go without effective medical care. And yet, according to the World Bank, "At the global level, if income were distributed differently, present output of grain alone could supply every man, woman and child with more than 3,000 calories and 65 grams of protein per day far more of than the highest estimates of requirements. Eliminating malnutrition would require redirecting only about two percent of the world's grain output to the mouths that need it." Beyond food, in the rural areas of the developing world, 80% of all the diseases can be attributed to inadequate water or sanitation. The effect is that almost fifteen million children under the age of five die every year, accounting for more than 1/3 of all the world's deaths. What is needed is six to seven billion dollars per year to produce portable or useable water.

Are you aware that six to seven billion dollars is spent every two weeks in developed countries for military purposes? The world is spending 550 billion dollars per year on arms. That amount is twice as much as it spends on food, five times as much as it spends on housing, and two thousand times as much as it spends on international peacekeeping. Subsidized dining by top military and civilian officials in the Pentagon costs the U.S. taxpayer $24 a meal. The school lunch program for the poor children costs $1.20 a meal. World military expenditures average $19,300 per soldier. Public expenditures for education average $380 per school age child, eleven dollars per capita for health research, and six cents per capita for peace keeping. In the global population, there are 556 soldiers and 85 physicians per 100,000 people. And if you think the problem is somewhere over there, know that in the U.S., the world's first super power, one person in 7 lives below the poverty threshold. In the U.S.S.R., the infant mortality rate is over twice the average of other developed countries. What does this say about our priorities?

Our fear of war and search for security through arms is creating an incredible drain of our resources (the price of one jet fighter could set up about 40,000 village pharmacies), diverting an inordinate amount of technical expertise and talent, increasing the national debt of developing nations to arms suppliers, and creating a world that is less and less secure. A United Nations report states that accelerating military spending "undermines national and regional security."

What do we do? We can begin by becoming more aware and informed by educating ourselves. We can then make some decisions about our personal lifestyle priorities and our national priorities and begin to express those opinions to decision makers and those in power. And finally, we can enter our lives more and more in the heart of God where in lies the only security that can really never fail.

Should We Celebrate Halloween Every Month?

Let's hear it for Halloween. There's nothing quite like it; it's my favorite holiday. The fact that so many people drop their social masks for a day, excites me. It's the one day where you can be anything you want without worrying about what others think. It's a shame that it only happens one day a year around here.

I went to Red Dog's this past Halloween and had a blast. It's so much fun watching so many uninhibited people enjoying themselves. Red Dog's was packed with mummies, monsters and nerds, just to name a few. I even saw a few weirdos without a costume. To each his own, I reckon.

Wilmington is usually dead Monday nights, but not this one. (At least not Red Dogs.) I wore a trench coat and had lolipops in my pocket. I literally had "guilt" written all over my face. My wife was dressed as a little girl with a lolipop. Got the picture?

One guy seemed to be a tampon. He was tall and white and had a string on his head. The uptight look on his face was the clincher. Another guy must have been George Bush. He had 'two faces.

Everyone's favorite was the Nerd. He was a good nerd, but I had to point out to him that his zipper was up. No self-respecting nerd has his zipper up. I instructed him to pull it down and allow his shirt tail to poke through. It did the trick; in fact, he came in first in the costume contest. I'm pretty good when it comes to nerds, if I say so myself. I was a nerd a couple of years ago. I had the usual nerd attire: flood pants, white socks, pocket protector, calculator, and taped glasses. I added a pocketful of condoms (opened) to my arsenal. I told people that I was wearing one in case I got lucky.

Over the years, I've been a scarecrow, Twenty Bird, and a free lance gynecologist. (Pee exams for those who qualify.) I feel that my costumes say a lot about me. Too bad it says that I'm a sick, wimpy perv. I guess I am what I am.

I don't consider myself a guy who intimidates people, so I've never felt the urge to have a scary costume. Big tough guys seem to prefer mean-looking costumes. Occasionally, I will see a macho man dressed as a woman. I like to see that. It takes guts. I've never had the desire to dress as a woman. I'm afraid that I may look too good or better than I look as a male.

Our society is too often homogeneous (Don't get in an uproar you College Republicans. That doesn't mean homosexual) and tends to get boring. We're lucky that this one day a year--the norm is to be abnormal. I think that it builds character to sneak out of our shells once in a while.

Looking different is only a part of the fun. Being and acting beyond the social norms is the best part. One can actually stare at other without being punched or having to hear, "What are you staring at, you pencil-necked geek." Not that I've ever heard that, of course.

I felt strange having people stare intently at my face. My first reaction was that I must have a booger hanging out of my nose or something. Then I realized that they were attempting to read my face.

I noticed that some of the guys with masks would ogle females. They knew that they could get away with it behind their masks. Others could be downright obnoxious or nerdy and get complimented for it.

It would take real guts to wear these costumes when Halloween is nowhere near. I could imagine me walking in the mall with my trench coat on and "guilt" written all over my face. Would the cops have a field day with me or what?

When I was living in Austin, I went to a "nerd party". It was rough, nerding out in January. Three of us nerds went into a store and bought beer. The guy behind the counter never said a word while we were choosing the beer. He just had that "what the hell is going on here" look. He asked if we need a bag, and I said, "No, only nerds use bags." He continued to give us his blank stare. I wonder if he called the cops.

We need Halloween to be more than once a year. In Austin they have a Brazilian Carnival every February--costumes required, and they also celebrate Eeyore's birthday every May--costumes required. Those were always the best times for me. They get quite risqué in Austin. I remember a guy that wore a leaf (a small one) at Eeyore's party, and many women wore almost as little. Yep, those were the good old days.

Getting wacky three times a year is much better than once, but I don't think that's enough. The last day of each month should be like Halloween. I'd always have something to look forward to. Coming up with a costume once a month would take imagination. Many people put more thought into choosing a costume than they do choosing a costume than they do choosing a wife or husband.

Next Halloween, try to go all out. Get as weird as possible. Take advantage of the one day which you can get weird. I'm going to be Pee Wee Herman on acid. Isn't that a frightening thought? Hopefully, Halloween will be more than once a year in northern California, where I'll be next year.

Avoid the Roid

In the same breath that former Oklahoma Sooner, and steroid abuser, Brian Bosworth uttered his infamous "steroids are not destroying society" speech, another user, South Carolina Gamecock Tommy Chaiken, admitted that his habit drove him to contemplate suicide. Are steroids a menace to society? You decide, then read the following, and if you still feel steroids are beneficial, then by all means, get help—before it's too late.

"Juice" and "roids" are just two of the many nicknames for the chemical substance anabolic steroids.

For the previously uninformed, anabolic steroids are a drug synthetically composed of the naturally occurring male hormone, testosterone.

Anabolic steroids have been labelled as a carcinogen. Anabolic steroids promote sterility. Anabolic steroids increase aggression (or passivity, depending upon whether the addict is an extrovert or introvert, respectively). Anabolic steroids can drive one to contemplating and possibly committing suicide. Anabolic steroids are strictly a prescription drug, but are omnipresent in virtually every gym and weight room throughout America. Anabolic steroids increase blood pressures and cause acne. Anabolic steroids are a scary drug. It is scary to think of the long term effects.

The precious little knowledge medical researchers have come by is a mere reflection of only twenty years of research. These aforementioned (and for those current users, whom I doubt are familiar with the term aforementioned, it means previous) risks cannot be considered indicative of what the medical profession might discover given enough time.

Unfortunately, or rather, tragically, Anabolic steroids do have one positive side effect. They promote rapid muscle increase.

Anabolic steroids are a lazy man's drug. I find it rather ironic that the people who are supposedly the most conscious and concerned with their bodies, the body builders, would resort to these unscrupulous, potentially threatening drugs in an all-encompassing effort to develop a better physique.

I'm just speculating, but steroid users seem to me the type who scorn at IRA's, balk at long range preventive plans, and live solely for tomorrow.

It's probably a good thing, too, for likely, there will come a time when long range goals and IRA's will become moot. Blatantly stated, you cannot reap the rewards of planning if you're not around.

I pray that the medical researchers are mistaken. I hate to think of the consequences, when, in twenty years, our friendly former abusers begin to diminish in population—permanently.

I believe there is only one way to sufficiently snuff out the steroid user, and that is to further ban the athlete from any and all athletic participation until such time when it is deemed acceptable, through negative testing, to reinstate his eligibility.

We need to dispell the ridiculous notion that these athletes are unable to produce a sample of urine because they are embarrassed, a tactic often employed by known users to alleviate the possibility of being detected.

Actually, I am sympathetic to their dilemma. I would be embarrassed, too, if I were forced to pour out my illegal infatuations into a small cup.

Ben Johnson, one of the more infamous steroid users, runs like the wind. Maybe faster. But for what? And at what cost? Is a gold medal really that meaningful?

I'll readily admit the lure of infiltrating your system with a chemical that will rapidly increase your biceps is enticing, and I, as well as several of my friends have innocently toyed with the notion, but when you consider the things in life that are fundamentally important, family, wife, children, steroids are easily outmuscled, a lovely choice of words, and out-prioritized and justifiably the idea is dismissed.

So for all you "juice" abusers, I leave you with one lasting impression. You'll probably reject this column as a preposterous hyperbole of unconfirmed theories. And at this point in medical history that just might be true. It is simply too soon to tell.

But, in thirty years, when research has produced some substantial results, I will be around to read them.

Will you?

Turning a New Page, Hawk's Await Opener

FROM STAFF REPORTS

The loss of "crunch time" specialist Sharon McDowell and the youngest team in recent years creates many question marks for veteran coach Marilyn Christoph in her 10th season at UNCW.

McDowell, a first-team All-Colonial Athletic Association selection one year ago, and veteran Sissy Morse were lost to graduation and Christoph is faced with replacing that leadership with youth and inexperience.

While the 1988-89 edition of the Lady Seahawks will feature just one senior, two juniors, and seven sophomores, Christoph isn't overly worried.

"We're definitely going to be young and do have some major gaps to fill," she said, "but we've always been fortunate with young people. We've always had young kids come in and perform well for us."

Two immediate examples that come to mind are returnees Krystle Taylor and Cindy Makowski. The pair was named to the CAA's All-Rookie Team last season after making key contributions to the club's 18-11 record.

"There will be a lot of experimentation," Christoph promised. "We probably won't settle on anything until after the holiday break. That goes against what I usually like to do. I don't like to experiment after the season starts."

The loss of McDowell and Morse drops much of the leadership load in the laps of senior Roslyn Flood and junior Charlene Page. Flood will be the only senior on the club, and Page brings two years of experience to the role.

"Charlene will definitely be a leader," Christoph said, "and Roslyn was getting confidence toward the end of last season. If they can progress like they did last year, we're going to be heard from in the conference."

Page, who sat out the 1986-87 season with a knee injury, is the top returning scorer for UNCW. The athletic junior averaged 12.2 points, starting all 29 games one year ago. "Charlene is just so smooth and quick. She can do nothing but get better. She's probably the best athlete on the club."

Christoph likes to run and she'll have the personnel to move down the hardwood again in '88-89. Makowski and Taylor should complement Page and Flood well in the lineup.

"Krystle is tough to defense because she's so lanky and gangly," added Christoph. "She's an unorthodox player, but her final stats indicate the strength of her game. She has the potential to be the best big girl we've had since (all-time scorer and rebounder) Gwen Austin. If Krystle gets fire in her eyes and dedicates herself to the game, she will be tough."

Taylor started all but one game last season, averaging 11.1 points and 7.6 rebounds. She scored a career-high 24 points late in the season at East Tennessee State, improving down the stretch.

Makowski, meanwhile, took over the starting slot at point guard and developed into one of the CAA's top young talents. The sparkplug averaged 5.0 assists and made 12-of-54 three point attempts to top the club. "She's deceptively quick," said Christoph.

The remainder of Christoph's roster is young, but capable. Tressa Reese and Kelly Kincaid played over 200 minutes last season and could make some noise in 1988-89. Still, Christoph is taking a cautious approach to the upcoming campaign.

"We're just going to go out and play and have a good time. It will take some time to mold together, but the wins will come. We have the tradition and that will carry us a little way."

"I think we'll be an offensive minded team. I like the way we've been doing it and so do the kids and fans. We have the same caliber of athletes, so we shouldn't have to change our style."

Christoph heads into her 10th season with perhaps more question marks than usual. She hopes to provide some answers with a ball hawking, tenacious style of play.

She said, "I think we'll be a very competitive team. It's true that we have question marks—we don't have that one person that we can go to in crunch time. Somebody will surface as the season progresses."

"I don't know how the wins and losses will stack up, but I know we'll be in every game. Our team should be spunky and fiery. They'll think they can win every game. It should be a good group to work with."

Swimmer's Dive Into Season

BY PATRICK FOWLER
STAFF WRITER

Watch out, all would-be rivals of UNCW. Swimming coach Dave Allen is making a bold prediction, "I honestly feel that, barring any unforeseen circumstances, that both the men's and women's should be two of the strongest teams in Seahawk swimming history." The men's team will try to rebound from injuries and a dismal sixth place showing last year by rejuvenating its ranks with key veterans and new recruits. The Hawks will turn to Phillippe Roth, Glynn Boze, and Yarkon Folton to lead a transition team into a perennial power in the CAA. Roth, who hails from Rixheim, France, was a finalist in the 200 & 500 Freestyle in both the CAA and Eastern Regionals meets. "Phillippe has worked hard in the weight room, and we started to see the results of that last season. He should have an outstanding year," said Allen.

Rookie sensation Tom Burkett is back from his stunning inaugural season with the Hawks and appears hungry for more. "Tom had a great freshman year. He swam the second fastest mile in school history and was a junior national qualifier. We look for great things in the future from him," said a praising Allen. Burkett set the school record in the 200 backstroke with a mere 1:55.91 clocking. Wow, just imagine how fast he goes on his front side! "We were very young last year, but I think we've filled in the holes for this season," said Allen.

If you thought the men's sounce impressive, brother, you haven't heard anything yet. Labeled "our strongest team ever" by Allen, the lady Hawks will use tons of talent and a little depth to boost their mark up from last year's fifth place finish in the CAA Swimming and Diving Championships. The team will be anchored by Marti Mucci, Mary Beth Mills, and Laura Spanjer. All will lead the Seahawks team in its strengths of breast, back, and attaining lofty heights in the diving categories. However, they'll need support in the distance and freestyle departments.

But like the men's team, the ladies strokes have the Tom Burkett equivalent in Mary Tarter. Tarter's first season attributes last year included a record setting 4:39.08 timing in the 400 Individual Medley that qualified her for the Junior Nationals in Tusculoosa, Alabama. Hm, I wonder if she eats wheateas too! Mary just grabbed us all by storm and did a great job. "She's in love with the sport and wants to improve all the time," said Allen.

On the other talented swimmers Allen remarked, "Marti has improved every year, Mary Beth has tremendous spirit and talent, and Laura is very versatile." The Hawks' schedule consists of ten regular season meets and three post-season events that end with the CAA Championships at the Seahawk Natatorium in early February. So if you happen to pass by the pool area, be sure to check out the speed demons in the waterways.

Rowsom Scores 16 in Loss

Brian Rowsom, UNC Wilmington's all-time leading scorer and rebounder, is enjoying a strong debut with the National Basketball Association's expansion team the Charlotte Hornets.

The 6-10, 225-pounder from Columbia, N.C., has played 43 minutes in two games, scoring 24 points and pulling down 11 rebounds. His point total includes a perfect 10-of-10 from the free throw line.

The Hornets dropped their debut at home against Cleveland, losing 133-93. Two nights later, the Hornets lost again, this time at Detroit, where the Pistons remained unbeaten, winning 94-85. Rowsom was coach Dick Harter's leading scorer contributing 16 points, including 8 after intermission.

Rowsom enjoyed an outstanding career at UNCW, setting 23 school records with the Seahawks while being named to the Colonial Athletic Association's All-Conference team three consecutive seasons. He scored 1,973 points and pulled down 1,012 rebounds in 115 career games with the Seahawks.

He played briefly with the Indiana Pacers of the NBA last season before completing the year playing in France.

The Final Word, I Promise

BY PATRICK FOWLER
STAFF WRITER

"I know, I know... you just read last week on how yours truly rated the '88 Seahawk Soccer Campaign. But... my editor came up to me and said "Fowler, that's not good enough. We want a story that expresses the tries and tributes of the Hawks' first ever winning record season." Well, he is the boss and I hate to lose my glamorous not to mention cushy job here. So here are my and coach Jackie Blackmore's views on Seahawk Soccer '88.

The Seahawks ended on a high note posting a 3-0 victory over Virginia Commonwealth. Scorers in the final regular season contest were McManus (Jimmy), Hollenbach (John), and Wallace (Sean) on two Dean Marnell assists. "It's hard to make predictions, but I think we showed some things this year. We have the nucleus for a good team next season," exclaimed a pleased Blackmore. The Seahawks finished the season with a 9-7-1 overall record and 3-4 CAA mark. It's a far cry from a great year but it is a substantial improvement from 4-11-1 & 7-8-1 records from previous years.

The Seahawks rose as a viable and worthy opponent this year, gaining respect across the league. Two goals were the maximum margins of deficits in three of the Hawks' losses, while four defeats were suffered by mere one goal deficits. The Hawks made a name for themselves by downing powerhouses Richmond and American and taking the Naval Academy to the limit in a 2-1 defeat. "We had a couple of good wins in the conference that caused people to take notice of us. The kids are believing in themselves. I hope that carries over to next year," said a smiling Blackmore.

Notoriety was given to seniors David Cresswell and John Hollenbach, who ended their collegiate careers here at UNCW. "David was a reliable player for us. He gave a good effort every time out. He'll be difficult to replace because he can do a lot of things. I can only remember one or two games where he wasn't one of the better players on the field," praised Blackmore. High praise indeed for the Alexandria, Virginia native who had 38 points in four years here and, until Chris George's arrival, was the leading scorer for the Hawks.

Hollenbach was also remembered by his coach: "John has come a long way for us. He comprised a lot of the heart and spirit of the team. Watching his progress has been pleasing for me."

The future of the Hawks' continued success will undoubtedly ride on the shoulders of leading CAA scorer Chris George. George finished the season with 30 points on 13 goals and 4 assists. George also had duos and trios of goals in the 5 of the Hawks' contests that resulted in a mid-season surge, paying dividends of five victories out of six. "Chris had a good season and his goals weren't against weak opponents. I think teams will be more aware of him now," quoted Blackmore. Blackmore admitted though he have to find others to help balanced the scoring attack.

Defense was the key, I felt, to the team's success this year. Sophomore Goalie John Pinter and defensive gems Mark Rose and David Cresswell helped keep the Hawks close. Pinter started every game this year and accomplished an impressive 82 saves and a 1.0 goal scoring average. He completely blanked Richmond, ECU, Coastal Carolina, and Virginia Commonwealth. "The biggest surprise was Pinter's play in the first four or five matches. He singlehandedly kept us in the Charleston match (1-0 O.T. defeat). He was a pleasant surprise to us in the early-going," said Blackmore. Overall Blackmore felt the team played well. "We made some mistakes and were ragged at times, but they were organized enough and did a creditable job."

Well, that's the final word, I promise, on Seahawk soccer '88. It was a good year and I have to mosey on to other sporting events. Many thanks to the fans who rooted the Hawks on at home and away. And many thanks to the readers for rereading some of the same statistics from my previous article. I hope my editor is happy, as I now officially officially end the semester by royal decree on Seahawk Men's soccer 1988.

Hawk's Finish 4th; Ellington Praises Squad

BY PATRICK FOWLER

The Seahawks concluded a successful water polo season with a fourth place showing in the Southern H2O Polo Championships last weekend in Lexington, Virginia. Once again our guys were denied the title game by being defeated by 16th ranked powerhouse Arkansas-Little Rock 21-6. Scott "gimme the ball I'll score" Carboni led all Hawksters with three goals. The Hawks also relinquished third place again, as they did two weeks ago, in a closely contested affair to Richmond.

The Seahawks did post victories by tricking past Lynchburg 9-8 and sinking ole Hampden-Sydney 13-3. This was our best season ever for our young team, which combined some experience and raw talent to obtain 11-7 overall and 9-6 CAA marks this year. Seven year coach Marc Ellington was pleased with the guys performance. "The players should be proud of their season. They worked hard to accomplish a lot of positive things this year," said Ellington. One of the bright spots this year was the crucial element of bench support. Many new fledglings were up to the task and took over the swimming duties of their wounded comrades. "A lot of other players got to play and did very well," said a proud Ellington. The coach looks forward to his eighth season with the Seahawks and the future does look promising. Mike McGinity and Scott Carboni, who each scored seven goals in the tourney, will attempt to lead a maturing and strengthening offensive attack to a possible CAA title next year. As for this season, gang, it's just water under the bridge.

The lady spikers, after surpassing the school record with their 27th victory over ECU last Friday, travelled to Harrisonburg, Virginia to take on the big boys... uh... girls. The Seahawks took a impressive 27-1 mark in with hopes of upsetting the defending champion William and Mary before post-season play began. However, the spikers had to deal with a surprisingly strong James Madison team first, which proved to be no easy task!

The Seahawks were given all they could handle and were startled when Madison grabbed game one 15-10. The Hawks came back with a flurry, using quick set and power spikes to stake claims on games 2 and 3 (15-11, 15-12). The offensive apparently used up all its energy and went into deep hibernation in game 4, falling 15-3. The ladies seemed to lose their concentration that game and exhibited signs of fatigue. Game 5, the deciding one in the match, was a battle of digs, dives, and flying acrobatics. The Hawks escaped with a hard fought 15-8 victory and gained the right to face top-rank William and Mary.

"We had some sporadic moments, but we played well enough to win," said coach Cathy McDaniel.

Then came the true test of the Hawk's best season ever; the dreaded twosome Will & Mary stood in their doorway. Hoo boy! can those girls play volleyball. Our Hawks hung tough in game one with a scrappy defense in a losing effort 15-10. It was all downhill from that point on as the old Goose raised its ugly head in games 2&3 (15-0, 15-0) for only the Hawk's second defeat of the season. "William and Mary was very steady. I think it's possible to beat them in the tournament as long as we play well," said an optimistic coach.

The Hawks finished out their regular season right with a crushing 15-11, 15-7, 15-9, wins over Baptist College. Wings awards to Heather Kimble and Lisa Mills who soared above the rest as the Hawks claimed victory number 29. They will take their high-flying act to American University in the nation's capital for a two day CAA Championships. The Seahawks will be the second seat in the tourney and hopefully get one more shot at upsetting William & Mary. Good luck ladies!

Americans Try To 'Smokeout'

BY CELESTE E. RUILLEY
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

Did you join in the Great American Smokeout? Today, millions of Americans took a breather and didn't light up, or adopted a smoker and supported him through his day. Sponsored by the American Cancer Society, the Great American Smokeout is a nationwide attempt to give up smoking, if only for one day. But every year, a few people stick with it and quit for good.

"This year, in light of the recent landmark decision in the Cipollone liability case and the publicity generated by the Surgeon General's most recent report indicating nicotine as an addictive drug, we expect record participation," said Susan G. Islam, the Cancer Society's Director of Advertising and Broadcasting.

At UNCW, the LivWell/Alternatives! Center coordinates activities for the Smokeout. This year, the biggest event for the Smokeout was the Board of Trustees review of the petition from Student Government to ban smoking in all on campus buildings. The biggest surprise to many was the Board's decision to not renew the contracts for the cigarette vending machines. This came despite opposition by many to the last part of the petition, which called to remove the vending machines from all the buildings.

Today, most cigarette advertising is directed at young Americans. These ads portray young, healthy, athletic men and women enjoying the "pleasures of smoking," said Islam. "Our advertisements for [this year's Smokeout] proclaim, this is a 'pack of lies'. The lies are: smoking is relaxing, smoking is glamorous, and lung cancer won't happen to me."

"The truth is, last year 320,000 Americans died from the toxic substances in cigarettes," she commented.

It is true that the risks of cigarette smoking are growing, especially for women, who are not quitting at the same rate as men. Lung cancer has now surpassed breast cancer as the leading cancer killer of women. For more than 30 years breast cancer was the number one cause of cancer deaths in women.

It is also a fact that although the number of male smokers exceeds the number of females who smoke, women are not kicking the habit in as high numbers as men. From 1976 to 1987, adult male smokers dropped from 42 percent of the population to 33, while women smokers decreased from 32 to 28 percent.

Students Ignoring AIDS Risk

BY MICHAEL O'KEEFE
CPS STAFF WRITER

As many as three out of every one thousand college students may have AIDS, the preliminary results of nationwide study involving 20 campuses show.

The results, if they hold up when the full study is completed in February, would indicate students are not paying much attention to efforts to get them to change their sex habits and mean a significant portion of the American student body is at risk of catching -- and dying of -- AIDS, observers say.

"If the figures hold up, there is more concern that we had anticipated," said Dr. Rolan Zick, director of the University of Colorado health center. "If there is an infection rate in that range then students will simply have to start paying more attention to educating themselves."

"At this point, the numbers are so preliminary it's practically meaningless," cautioned Anne Sims of the Centers for Disease Control (CDC). "Meaningful estimates" won't be proper until the study is finished in February.

The CDC, along with the American College Health Association, is gathering and testing 1,000 blood samples drawn from students on 20 campuses for other medical reasons to see how far AIDS has spread.

Few know which 20 campuses are in the study, but Tulane and Rutgers universities, as well as the universities of Colorado, Maryland and Georgia have acknowledged they're participating.

AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) is caused by a virus which destroys the body's immune system. The virus is most typically contracted by having sex or sharing intravenous needles with an infected person, or by contaminating blood products. There have been more than 76,000 cases reported in the United States since 1981, with 42,000 fatalities.

Campus lifestyles, health administrators believe, leave students especially vulnerable to the disease.

"Students are a sexually active group," said Dr. Florence Winslow of the University of Georgia health center. Not because they tend to be young and inexperienced, "they feel immune, even when they know the problem's out there."

Many students objected to the CDC study when it was proposed last spring, noting they would never know if a blood sample they gave at their clinic was being tested or if, in the end, they tested positive for the disease.

Still others worried samples could be traced back to the donors. In New Jersey, for example, the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) lodged a formal complaint with Rutgers

A Special Place at UNCW-- Bluethenthal

MELISSA AMBROSE
STAFF WRITER

There is a special place buried deep in the campus of UNCW. It is a place that many are probably unaware of; the perfect place to go to get away from the fast pace of classes and Wilmington traffic. A place to observe nature in its true state; quiet, peaceful, and beautiful.

Is it true such a place could exist? Yes. The place is the Herbert Bluethenthal Wildflower Preserve.

In 1973, Mrs. Herbert Bluethenthal of Wilmington made a donation to the school in memory of her husband. Mr. Bluethenthal wanted to see a preserve such as this on the campus, so with the donation the University's Board of Trustees set aside approximately 10 acres for a preserve.

"That area was chosen because it had a larger number of plant communities typical of Southeastern North Carolina," said Dr. David Sieren, Chairman of the Wildflower Preserve Committee. "Everything is in its natural state he explains, except the pond. 'The pond was dug when the preserve was established.'"

The site chosen for the Preserve includes a wide variety of plant communities which are representative of much of the greater southeastern North Carolina region, and the construction of a pond created another such community. The Preserve thus provides habitats for many of the plant species which are unique to this area.

The Preserve is open to the public during daylight hours every day of the week including weekends, and visitors are welcome.

ROTC Competes In Fort Jackson

(UNCW NEWS) -- The UNC-Wilmington Ranger Challenge Team recently traveled to Fort Jackson, South Carolina, to compete against 20 other teams. The Ranger Challenge Shootout pitted teams from all Senior Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC) Battalions in North and South Carolina.

Nine-member teams competed in head-to-head competition in seven grueling events. The events consisted of a physical fitness test (push-ups, sit-ups, and 2-mile run), a hand grenade throw, weapons marksmanship, rope bridge construction, weapons assembly, orienteering, and a 10K foot march with full back packs. The day started at 4:00 am and was not concluded until 9:00 pm. All events in this competition require teamwork and dedication and are run against the clock and other teams.

The UNCW Ranger Challenge Team started preparations for this event the first week in September. With only three returning team members, the challenge was great. The ten men and one woman who represented UNCW endured many blisters, bruises, and sore muscles in training and competition.

When the dust settled at Fort Jackson, the Ranger Challenge Teams from Campbell University and North Carolina State University had won the right to move on to First ROTC Region competition in April. For the UNCW team, they had moved up two places over last year and have a solid foundation for next year. Two other competitions in the spring will give the Seahawk team a chance to prepare early for the 1989 competition.

Red Tide Expert Visits UNC

(UNCW News) -- Red tide expert, Dr. Carmelo R. Tomas, senior researcher at the Florida Marine Research Institute, will visit The University of North Carolina at Wilmington Nov. 17-20. During his visit, he will give two slide presentations, talk with interested graduate students, and meet with researchers.

The slide presentations will be as follows:

"Integrated Study of a Coastal System in the Gulf of Naples, Italy" at 9:30 a.m., Thursday, Nov. 17, in room 119 of Friday Hall (public may come, but space is limited).

"Red Tide Dynamics: Comparison of Two Successful Strategies" at 2:30 p.m., Friday, Nov. 18, in Room 151 of Friday Hall (open to public, no charge).

Tomas is coming to UNCW to participate in the Department of Biological Sciences Invited Lecture Series at the invitation of Dr. Donald (Fritz) Kapraun, professor of biology at UNCW. Tomas, an American, is a prior director of the Marine Laboratory in Naples, Italy, and has an international reputation in the area of red tide. His present research involves studies on the physiological ecology of toxic marine algae such as details regarding life cycle and resistant cyst formation, toxin production and nutrient absorption of clonal cultures. Species presently being studied include Ptychodiscus brevis (neurotoxic shellfish poison).

Symphony Performs Tuesday

The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra performs the second of its six-concert season with guest soloist Nancy Green, cellist, Tuesday, November 22, 1988, at 8:00pm in Kenan Auditorium.

Nancy Green has played extensively in the United States and has appeared several times as a soloist in the Boston Symphony "Pops" concerts. Ms. Green won the Concert Artist Guild Award which led to her recital debut at Carnegie Recital Hall in New York and was among the top prize winners at both the J. S. Bach and Washington International Competitions.

In addition to solo concerts and recitals throughout Europe, Ms. Green is an active chamber musician as cellist of the Florestan Trio and solo cellist of the German Chamber Academy directed by Johannes Goritzki.

On the program for the evening's concert is the overture to Russiana and Ludmilla, by Mikhail Glinka; Cello Concerto, Op. 85, by Sir Edward Elgar; and Symphony No. 5 in B-flat Major, by Franz Schubert.

The overture to the opera Russiana and Ludmilla, based on the famous fairy-tale of the same name by Pushkin, is a virtuosic showpiece for symphony orchestra. Elgar's Cello Concerto is generally tranquil and indicative of earnestness. Symphony No. 5 in B-flat, written by Schubert at nineteen, heard by the composer only once, was not publicly performed until long after his death.

The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra is conducted by Dr. Steven Errante, professor of music at UNCW. The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra consists of professional musicians, music faculty and talented amateurs.

The concert series will continue with a popular Wilmington tradition, the walk-in Messiah and Christmas Carol sing-along on December 5 in Kenan Auditorium.

General admission is $5.00 with a special $3.00 rate for senior citizens and students. UNCW students with I.D. are free. For season subscriptions, tickets, or more information call the Thalian Center Box Office at (919) 763-3398 or (919) 763-9328.

Cadets Receive Academic Awards

Automobile Association.

(UNCW NEWS) -- Three cadets in the UNC-Wilmington Seahawk Battalion were recognized recently for their academic achievements. Each year cadets in the ROTC Advanced Course are offered the opportunity to compete for scholarships provided by nationwide organizations who support the academic excellence of ROTC cadets.

Cadet Major Stephen Maxner of Waltham, Massachusetts won a $1500 national scholarship from United Services Automobile Association, San Antonio, Texas. In addition to the cash scholarship, Cadet Maxner received an all expense paid trip to Washington, DC, from 16-18 October. Cadet Maxner attended the Annual Convention of the Association of the United States Army and received his scholarship from COL John Walker, Jr., retired, Director, Member Relations and Military Affairs for United Services

Cadet Captain Jeffrey Cole, New Hampton, Iowa, won the first ROTC Region $1000 Scholarship presented by United Services Automobile Association.

Competition for the scholarship is especially keen due to the large number of schools with ROTC programs in First Region. By winning three of five scholarships open this year, these students won out over many highly qualified applicants. These three scholarship recipients join a list of 15 other UNCW ROTC cadets who are currently receiving 2-, 3-, and 4-year full ROTC scholarships.

Record Number Of Foreigners Enrolled

(CPS) -- A record number of foreign students enrolled at American colleges last year, and more than half of them were from Asian countries, the Institute of International Education (IIE) announced last week.

In all, some 356,200 of the 12,500,000 students who registered for college classes during the 1987-88 school year were foreign residents. More than half came from Taiwan, China, India, Korea, Malaysia and Japan, the IIE, which based in New York, said.

"The economies of the Asian countries are flourishing," explained Marie Zikopoulos, editor of the IIE's "Open Doors: 1987-88."

More Asian students, in other words, now can afford to come to the U.S., Zikopoulos said.

In addition, "Korea and China have liberalized their policies about sending students abroad. This accounts for the big jumps (in the number of students) from those two countries," said Zikopoulos.

Korea sent 20,520 students to study here, 2.9 percent more than last year, while China sent 25,200 students, an increase of 26 percent.

Zikopoulos added Japanese students who can't crack some of the exclusive campuses at home -- where a student's college sometimes is determined while he or she is still in elementary school -- often opt for U.S. colleges.

Some 18,050 Japanese enrolled in the U.S. in 1987-88, a 1.8 percent jump since last year, the IIE report showed.

At the same time, however, other parts of the world are sending fewer students to the U.S. For example, students from Middle Eastern countries, who once made up 30 percent of all the foreign students in the U.S., now number 43,640, a decline of 7.1 percent from last year.

"There is a direct relationship between the declining fortunes of the oil industry and the drop in student numbers from the Middle East," Zikopoulos said. "The Middle Eastern students are no longer able to afford educations here."

Phi Kappa Phi Begins Search

The UNCW Chapter of Phi Kappa Phi, the national honor society for distinguished students in all academic fields, has begun its evaluation of student records for consideration of election to the Society. The Society's By-Laws allow a student to be considered for membership with a 3.75 GPA for Juniors with 74 hours or more completed, a 3.68 GPA for Seniors with 89 to 105 hours, and a 3.60 for Seniors with more than 105 hours completed.

The National Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi was founded in 1897 at the University of Maine. Men and Women in all academic disciplines are eligible for membership, on the basis of scholarship, integrity, and character. The Society's motto is "Let the love of learning rule mankind." There are 247 chapters of the Society, established at leading colleges and universities throughout the country.

The UNCW Chapter of the Society was established in 1980. The fact that an institution has to prove its excellence before a chapter of Phi Kappa Phi can be chartered makes membership in this Society a valuable asset to the graduating student. The Society is convinced that recognizing persons of good character who have excelled in an academic area will stimulate others toward this achievement.

The Chapter's officers for the current year are Dr. Carole Fink, President; Dr. Carol Ellis, Vice-President; Dr. Lewis Nance, Secretary-Treasurer; and Dr. Charles West, Public Relations Officer.

Elections to the Society are made each semester, after analysis of the University's academic records to determine eligible outstanding students. Final decision is made by the student and faculty members of the UNCW Chapter. A formal initiation ceremony will be held in the Spring, shortly before graduation, with the date to be announced.

Math Lectures

Dr. Ronald Baker of the University of Delaware (presently visiting professor at Clemson) will discuss "Combinatorics" at the November 21 Math Sciences Colloquium. Dr. R. S. Esfandiari of California State University, Long Beach, will speak on "Non-Classically Damped Structures: An Iterative Approach" at the November 28 colloquium. Both lectures will be held at 4 p.m. in MO-201.

Origami for Christmas Ornaments

A class offered by the University Women on the construction of Japanese Origami Christmas ornaments will be conducted November 28 from 7-9 in MO-214. Register by November 24. Call 3577. $6.50.

Wilmington Symphony to Perform

The Wilmington Symphony Orchestra with Nancy Green, cellist, will perform November 22 at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. $5.

Discount Movie Tickets

A reminder -- discounted movie tickets are available for faculty, staff and students at the University Union Information Center, $3 per ticket. ID's must be available.

USA Cards Coming Out

Look for a USA Card to be in your mail box this week. These Cards offer valuable discounts from area merchants. If you don't receive one you can get one at the SGA office. Rm. 100 UU.

Chemistry Department Seminars

The Chemistry department will sponsor Dr. Laren Tolbert of Georgia Institute of Technology speaking on "Photoexcited Carbanions - New Sources of Reactive Intermediates" November 18, at 2:30 p.m. in DL-114. A Senior Seminar program is scheduled for December 2 at 2:30 p.m. with James R. Merritt on "Noble Gas Chemistry," John Golder on "Isolation and Analysis of Accelerants in Fire Debris" and Dan Schweikert with "Claisen Condensation Reactions."

'Mismeasure of Woman' Ends Tonight

The last program in The Mismeasure of Woman series sponsored by the P&R department titled, "Should Only Women Care? Problems & Policies in the Pink Ghetto," will be held tonight at 8 in King Auditorium.

See Festival of Trees

This year's annual Festival of Trees will be held Saturday, November 26, through Sunday, December 4, at the Wilmington Hilton. The Festival of Trees is a community-wide fund raising project sponsored by the Lower Cape Fear Hospice. Proceeds from the event go for the care and support of the terminally ill and their families. Tickets may be purchased by the door. $3 adults; children under 12 $1.

Earth Science Seminar Tonight

Dr. Peter Robinson of UNC-CH will discuss "Is Our Earth Heating or Cooling?" tonight at 7:30 in Bryan Auditorium. The next earth sciences seminar will be held December 2 at noon in FR-251 with Dr. Tom Ross of Pembroke State discussing "Origin of Carolina Bays."

CPR Classes Offered

The public safety office will conduct CPR classes for faculty and staff in the Residence Life Activity Center. Classes, to be taught in three-hour increments over a two-day period from 9:30 a.m. - 12:30 p.m. each day, are scheduled for November 21 & 23, November 28 & 30 and December 5 & 7. To register call Joan Greene at 3591.

Faculty and Staff Pictures

Faculty and staff group pictures need to be taken by December 16 for inclusion in the 1989 FLEDGLING. If your department has not had its picture taken--check with your department head.

Recycling Forum

A public information forum, on the status of recycling in Wilmington and the county will be held this evening at 7:30 in the assembly room of the old New Hanover County Courthouse.

Aids from p.1

University, charging the school's participation in the survey endangered students' privacy.

Through it all, however, the CDC believed the study was worthwhile. Sims contends, "The survey will help us focus our efforts."

About 5,000 of the 20,000 college blood samples to be tested have been processed, Sims said, showing a rate of about three cases per 1,000 students. Sims said she didn't know from which campuses the samples came.

"The only thing we can show from these preliminary results is that there is infection on college campuses. College students are not immune from AIDS," Sims said.

"The figure cited is based on just one-quarter of the sample," added Miguel Garcia-Tunin of the American College Health Association. "In that sense it's inconclusive. It's just a number. But what's important is not to fixate on a number, but to deal with problem on campuses. Students must be aware of this."

"It's not surprising to me," Winship said of the preliminary figure. While the data may be "skewed" and don't "provide the full picture," she predicts the final tally "won't be too far off."

If it isn't, many health officials wonder how they'd make collegians respond to the AIDS threat more seriously.

"In general," said Rich Wolitski of the AIDS Education Project at California State University at Long Beach, "college students have a fairly high knowledge about AIDS. They know how it is transmitted and what they can do to protect themselves."

"But in general, they do not consider themselves vulnerable."

In September, the CDC reported the AIDS scare apparently had not markedly changed students' sexual habits, prompting Assistant U.S. Secretary of Health Dr. Robert E. Windom to urge campus officials to try harder to educate their student about the plague.

Windom said that one-fifth of the reported AIDS cases occur among people 20 to 29 years old.

"Since the average age of the incubation period (for AIDS) is seven years or longer, it's clear that many of the 14,000 patients in this group were high school or college age at the time of their infection," Windom said.

Moreover, a 1987 survey of college students by Blotnick Associates, a New York polling firm, revealed that only 6 percent of men think about AIDS before choosing sexual partners.

And officials at the universities of Texas and Arizona and Denver's Metropolitan State College have reported that the rates of other sexually transmitted diseases have not declined, suggesting that students are not protecting themselves against AIDS.

"It's a little frustrating," Georgia's Winship said. "Their behavior doesn't go along with their education. We need to do everything we can to transfer that 'yes-I-know-about-it' attitude to a change in their behavior."

She believes students simply may be unwilling to listen to "parental figures" like older college officials. "Students listen to their peers more than folks who look like their parents," Winship said.

Georgia now has a peer counseling program in which students actually spread the word about AIDS, Winship said.

Virtually every campus in the U.S., of course, now has some kind of AIDS program.

Some -- the universities of Colorado-Colorado Springs, Iowa and Texas at El Paso, as well as Michigan State, Southwest Missouri State, Indiana and Plattsburgh State College in New York among them -- have supplemented education programs by installing condom machines in dormitories and student unions, or by distributing condoms for free.

Critics say condom distribution promotes sexual promiscuity.

The Board of Regents of the Texas State, Sam Houston State, Sul Ross State and Southwest Texas State from distributing condoms earlier this year.

And the University of Washington administration has resisted installing condom machines, preferring educational methods to prevent AIDS instead.

"Students are not mature," Winship said. "They don't plan ahead." Condom machines, especially in dormitories, "lets them have better access later in the thinking process," just before they have sex, she said. "It's controversial, but it's realistic."

Baby Doctor Hosted By Nursing School

Dr. Brazelton to Visit UNCW

(UNCW NEWS) -- The School of Nursing at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington is bringing Dr. T. Berry Brazelton, internationally renowned pediatrician and author of "What Every Baby Knows," to the campus Wednesday, Nov. 30.

During the visit, Brazelton will present a free public lecture on the topic "Working and Caring -- Pressures on Parents of the 80s" at 2 p.m., in Kenan Auditorium. All interested individuals are invited to attend.

Following the lecture, Brazelton will be available in the lobby of Kenan Auditorium to autograph his book. Participants are invited to bring a copy they already own. Books will also be available for purchase in the UNCW bookstore prior to the event or that day in the lobby. A portion of the profits from the sale of books will go to the UNCW School of Nursing for scholarships.

Because classes will be in session during the lecture, those attending are advised to park in Kenan Auditorium parking lot adjacent to the building or in Lot K at the Riegel Road entrance off South College Road near Trask Coliseum.

That morning at 10:30 in Cameron Hall Auditorium, Brazelton will address nursing students and health care professionals on the topic "Does the Neonate Shape His/Her Environment? The Infant as an Individual--Early Ego Development."

Students To Throw Toast, Not Bagels

(CPS) Students at University of Pennsylvania football games have won the right to throw toast, not bagels, from the stands.

Security officials infuriated some Penn fans by confiscating toast from them at the Sept. 24 game at Franklin Field against Bucknell University. Penn students have been throwing toast from their seats onto the field when Penn's band gets to a certain point of the song "Drink A Highball."

The toast throwing began at a 1984 game, when the students decided to respond literally to a line in the song words, "So here's a toast to dear old Penn," explained Steve Huribut, Penn's sports information director.

"Like fans at the Rocky Horror Picture Show, the students decided to throw a piece of toast instead of raising their hands as if they held a glass," Huribut said.

After security officers took toast from some fans, students began writing protest letters, circulating a petition and even threatening to pelt Penn President Sheldon Hackney with toast at future games.

In response William Epstein, Hackney's assistant, finally announced in late October there had been a "communications failure. We have no intent to try to stop the toast tradition. We intended to stop people from bringing frozen bagels."

Bagels, he said, are heavier and could hurt people.

Huribut agreed, but added the ban should extend beyond bagels to large packages of bread.

"We don't want anyone getting whacked with a whole loaf," he said.

Epstein said Penn would let security officers at the games confiscate large and/or frozen bread products "at their own discretion" if they thought they might pose a safety hazard.

are 40 upper division (juniors and seniors) enrolled in the nursing major.

Following a recruitment initiative during late summer of 1988, there have been more than 600 inquiries about the program, more than 50 percent of those were from registered nurses interested in pursuing a degree. The School has 10 full-time and two adjunct faculty members.

The School of Nursing at UNCW was established in 1984 when the baccalaureate degree in nursing began, and the first baccalaureate class was graduated in 1987 following the phasing out of the two-year associate degree program. The School is fully approved by the North Carolina Board of Nursing and fully accredited by the National League for Nursing.

The young School has already demonstrated its quality with pass:

rates on the North Carolina registered nurse licensing examination of 95 percent in 1988 and 100 percent 1987. Scores for the last three years of the associate degree program were 96 percent in 1986; 92 percent in 1985; and 94 percent in 1984. Once inside the Preserve, visitors will find marked trails to follow, benches at convenient locations, and labeled plants to observe. Visitors will find marked trails to follow, benches at convenient locations, and labeled plants to observe.

"The preserve is set up as a self-guided tour and is open everyday during daylight hours for the UNCW community and the public," Sieren states. He adds that some of the public schools will set up guided tours to teach students about the different plant communities. Also, guided tours can occasionally be arranged by contacting the UNCW Biology Department.

The Preserve is dedicated to the preservation of the rich and varied flora of southeastern North Carolina and has been designed to provide a place of contentment and pleasure for those who enjoy and appreciate our native plants. New species are continually being added, and contributions of rare or

Of interest for college women in particular, the overall death rate of women--even young women--who smoke and use birth control pills is much higher than that of nonsmoking pill users. Women who use oral contraceptives and smoke have a much higher risk of stroke, heart disease or blood clots in their legs.

Also, babies born to smoking mothers are smaller in size and weigh less than babies born to nonsmoking mothers. If a woman gives up smoking early in pregnancy, her risk of delivering a low birth weight baby is reduced to nearly that of a nonsmoker.

A woman should also consider quitting because women who smoke heavily have nearly three times as much bronchitis and emphysema, about 75% more chronic sinusitis and 50% more peptic ulcers than women who do not smoke.

It is interesting to note that among employed women, white collar workers are less likely to smoke than those in blue collar occupations. Women earning more than $25,000 a year smoke less than any other group of working females.

And in 1981, a Gallup Poll indicated that 70% of all women who smoke would like to stop.

You don't need your parents' money to buy a Macintosh.

Just their signature.

It's never been difficult for students to convince their parents of the need for a Macintosh® computer at school.

Persuading them to write the check, however, is another thing altogether.

Which is why Apple created the Student Loan-to-Own Program. An ingenious loan program that makes buying a Macintosh as easy as using one.

Simply pick up an application at the location listed below, or call 800-831-LOAN. All your parents need to do is fill it out, sign it, and send it. If they qualify, they'll receive a check for you in just a few weeks.

There's no collateral. No need to prove financial hardship. No application fee.

Best of all, the loan payments can be spread over as many as 10 years.

Which gives you and your parents plenty of time to decide just who pays for it all.

Colleges Battle The Content of Papers

(CPS) In what may have been an outbreak of partisan feelings as Election Day approached or just a building of frustration toward college papers, angry students at the University of South Dakota, Georgia State University and California State University at Long Beach have threatened to censor their campus papers in recent weeks.

The student government at Cal State-Long Beach, in fact, has shut down the Union, an irreverent "alternative" student paper, for violating campus prohibitions of "lewd, indecent or obscene behavior."

"To just cut off what you find offensive is not fair, and I think it violates some rights," complained Union Associate Editor Ethel Powers.

"By closing the Union down, they can silence an opposing voice," Editor Gary Stark added.

There has been a series of campus newspaper censorship episodes since last January, when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled in Hazelwood v. Kuhlmeier that high school officials can regulate the content of student newspapers if those papers are run as journalism class labs.

Some colleges were quick to invoke the ruling. In April, for example, Cal State-Los Angeles officials fired Joan Zyda, the student newspaper advisor, because they didn't like the content of the paper.

Officials at Pima Community College in Arizona, Chapman College in California, San Jacinto College in Texas, and Western Kentucky University also tried to censor or halt student papers and cultural events in the wake of the court's decision in recent months.

Id the past, other students—not administrators—more frequently tried to censor student papers. "Most problems," said University of Minnesota journalism professor and Associated Collegiate Press Official Tom Rolnicki, "involve student governments and money."

In 1987, for instance, the St.

John's University student government refused to fund the campus paper, the Torch, because the paper's finances were mismanaged. Torch staffers, however, said the action was retaliation for their endorsement of a rival slate of candidates in a previous election.

At Cal State-Long Beach, Union staffers say student politicians, who hauled away the paper's computer equipment and cut funding, also are retaliating.

"We can't publish without the equipment," said Stark. "They don't want the paper to publish." The student government, he said, is getting even for the irreverent Union's criticism of student government leaders.

"We won't parrot what the Senate wants to hear," Powers said.

At issue is the Union's Sept. 26 issue, which contained a satirical supplement called the "Sexually Frustrated Male Issue" containing a photograph of three semi-nude men and several erotic illustrations.

Although Union staffers say the parody was an attempt to help students laugh at their frustration in an age of risky sex, student government leaders were not amused. In the resolution that closed the paper, the student government said the issue violated campus obscenity and sexual harassment policies.

"We just felt that we could do better things with the money," said student government President Roger Thompson.

"This paper is degrading to me and others as well," agreed Justino Aguila, president of the Journalism Students Association. "This degrading does not help students in any way."

Two years ago, student politicians blasted the Union for publishing a pair of stick figures engaged in sex. Last year, bothered by the newspaper's style and content, the student government cut the budget from $25,000 to $10,000. Stark said it costs $40,000 to publish the paper annually. The rest of the funding came from advertising.

At South Dakota, Greeks, College Republicans and dorm government officials have pressured the student government to stop funding the Volante, the campus paper, because of its content.

Greeks and dorm government officials say the paper is biased against them, while College Republicans claim the Volante "glorifies Democrats."

Student government President Tim Glynn, however, says funding will continue for the paper. He hopes to convince the paper to increase its coverage of its critics, but doesn't want to cross a "fine line" and regulate what goes in the paper. "How do you tell a newspaper what to write?" he asked.

Volante Editor Mary Warcjeka said the criticism comes from student government leaders who hope to ride to the presidency on a wave of anti-Volante sentiment.

College Republicans at Georgia State, moreover, blasted the Signal, the campus paper, at their Oct. 5 meeting for what they call its biased, liberal slant.

CR President Jeff Breedlove, who was fired as a Signal columnist in 1987, criticized the paper for weak coverage of conservative events, an alleged liberal bias in its new coverage and the pro-Dukakis and anti-Quayle posters that hang in its office.

Breedlove continues to write guest editorials for the Signal, but said that the paper is an "embarrassment" and "not good enough for the university."

Shanties Come To Symbolize Much More Than Apartheid

(CPS) -- The makeshift "shanty"—until recently an icon of the campus anti-apartheid movement—seems to have become everybody's favorite symbol this school year.

Indiana University, for example, sports an anti-race shanty and, briefly in mid-October, had a shanty protesting IU's crackdown on student alcohol abuse.

In early October, volunteers at an off-campus soup kitchen built a shanty on the University of Pennsylvania campus because Penn has yet to help establish a promised "survival center" for Philadelphia's homeless.

To object to "U.S. money to Israel subsidizing the oppression of Palestinians," Muzmil Ahmed's Muslim Students Association built an anti-Zionist shanty at the University of Michigan, where shanties protesting racism, the Reagan administration's Central American policies and—yes—even apartheid in South Africa have come crowded onto campus.

At some schools, students these days are building shanties to protest shanties.

Mike Rubin, a University of Texas-Austin junior, for instance, helped build a "hovel" on the school's mall right next to an anti-apartheid shanty.

Rubin, president of the University Libertarian Group, said the "hovel" dramatized poor living conditions in the Soviet Union, but that it also was a demonstration of antipathy toward the two-year-old apartheid structure.

"I wanted to educate people to the idea that divesting is not a good idea," he explained, "and draw attention to the plight of the people in the Soviet Union. In South Africa the blacks are oppressed, but not as bad as everyone in the Soviet Union."

Anti-shanty students at Yale University built a similar "gulag" last school year.

"Symbols are always fluid," noted Todd Gitlin, a University of California-Berkeley professor who authored "The Sixties: Years of Hope, Days of Rage."

"People are always adapting a symbol with one meaning and giving it another," Gitlin added. "That's what happens with flags."

Added Dr. Ohnuki Tierny of the Center for Advanced Studies in Behavioral Sciences near Stanford, "People can read symbols upside down. One group see it one way and another, another way."

No one is quite sure who invented the shanty as a political symbol, though Rob Jones of the American Committee on Africa—the New York-based group that has helped organize many anti-apartheid efforts in the U.S.—remembers someone coming up with the idea at a meeting as early as 1984.

"The idea didn't develop in a vacuum," Jones recalled. "It came out of regional conferences in which people sat down and said, 'What can we do?'"

In those days, of course, the anti-apartheid movement here was looking for ways to publicize itself. After enjoying a brief vogue in the late seventies, movement activists had been reduced to trying to get speech time at nuclear freeze rallies.

But the awarding of the Nobel Prize to South African Bishop Desmond Tutu and a spate of attendant publicity in late 1984 abruptly caught students' attention. In November, campuses from Oberlin in Ohio to Wesleyan in Connecticut to Southern Cal in Los Angeles began erupting in divestment protests.

By April, 1985, more than 100 campuses had joined the movement and tactics escalated. Students at Berkeley, Rutgers, the University of California at Santa Cruz and Columbia, among others, held sit-ins. Students at Syracuse University, coming close to inspired invention, pitched a "tent city."

But on April 21, 1985, students at Cornell University opted for something sturdier than tents and built what apparently was the first campus shanty.

"We built it as a symbol of solidarity with the people of South Africa who were forced to live in similar structures all their lives," said Brett Beeman, then a Cornell freshman who helped build the structure.

The original wood and scrap metal shanty was called an "Inhumanities Library," and used to distribute anti-apartheid pamphlets.

"We were looking for an ongoing symbol," Beeman said, "that the administration would have to face every day."

Ann Adams, an Indiana student who helped build IU's anti-race shanty, was looking for a way for IU's administrators to see they "were only paying lip service to the issue of women's safety. There wasn't the work being done or the money being given."

For ongoing symbols, however, they don't last long. Texas "hovel" and Yale's "gulag" lasted barely a month before being dismantled. Adams says IU's anti-race shanty has been vandalized "50 times" since it went up May 7.

In early August, it was firebombed.

Shanties at the universities of Utah and Washington as well as at Johns Hopkins University have been attacked repeatedly by vandals. Denise Swmczak of Texas's Democracy in Academia says her group's shanty had been beaten, burned and run over by a car.

During the summer, Florida physician and Yale alumnus Elwood Bracey, 52, was convicted of setting fire to an anti-apartheid shanty at Yale, because, as Bracey's attorney Douglas Daniels explained, "the shanties were perceived as a desecration of" a campus plaza dedicated to Colorado and California-Davis and at Western Michigan University razed shantytowns at those campuses, generally citing them as safety hazards.

It's gotten so that anti-apartheid activists themselves are wrecking them, too. On October 1, members of Washington's Students Against Apartheid voluntarily dismantled their shanty, although UW has yet to divest itself of all its stock in firms that do business in segregationist South Africa.

"This doesn't mean the shanty didn't serve its purpose," said SAA spokesman Gary Nelson. "It also doesn't mean we're giving up. It simply means we're trying another tactic."

Is Ignorance Excuseable For The Educated?

Dear Editor,

There seems to be an outrage about the (alleged) charges of racism brought against [the] Chi Phi Fraternity.

Specifically, certain persons want to eclipse the issue, saying it was blown out of proportion. As a black student, and speaking only for myself, I would ask these persons if they knew the feelings of being black on a predominantly white campus, a mere 7% of the entire student body. If they did, and if they were affected directly by these actions, as black students are, these issues might not seem so minimal.

Maybe the fraternity pledges didn't know what they were doing was offensive. Is ignorance excusable in a university system where we are all supposed to be educated?

harmless, but we have to admit that there is a problem, however small, of racism on this campus, and denying it will not help. And just because you have black friends or black neighbors or a black roommate, and just because there haven't been any riots or protests or outward threats does not mean that covert racism doesn't exist, or that whites are sensitive to others around the country.

Obviously we aren't listening to each other, and if this miscommunication continues, the problem, a real one, will get worse. I know it's a hard truth, but this is definitely not the first time that racism has occurred on this campus, and unfortunately, not the last.

Columnist Criticized For Racism Stance

Dear Chad,

I will not tell you what you can do with your dictionaries because there are obscenity laws in North Carolina. I would hate to think that you are so ignorant as to think that there has to be "riots...deaths..." or litigation "on racial grounds" in order for racism to exist.

If you knew anything about the historical significance of whites performing in blackface, you would then understand why many Black American students were offended and why many, including myself, viewed the actions of Kappa Sigma's and Tau Nu Pi's pledges as racist whether that was their intention or not. However, in reading your commentary, it became obvious to me that you did not know this or much else regarding race relations throughout history.

I will agree with you that racism "on this campus is minimal." So what do you want us Black American students to do, accept a little racism? I can assure you that we will not. If you were truly an ambassador of goodwill, you would do your part in erasing this minimal racism instead of attacking those of us who are. I can assure you that UNCW would be a better institution of higher learning if you, and the people like you, would contribute.

You also seem to say in your commentary that some Black American students are walking about seeking "to find racism somewhere." This is not true. However, if I encounter racism or am told about it (as was the case when [a student] informed me of the "Chi Phi incident"), I am going to confront it (racism) and destroy it or the institution that harbors it. No matter what anyone says about me.

I would like to invite you, the president of Chi Phi, the president of Tau Nu Pi, the president of Kappa Sigma, and two more as yet unnamed students to hold a forum with me where we are the panel and students of all races can ask us questions. The worst that can happen to you is that you may learn something about an area of campus life where you are lacking.

By the way, the next time you choose to attack someone you wants to correct a wrong here at UNCW, you had better be "pretty damned sure" you know what you are doing.

Schenk Blasted By Student For Sexists Views

Dear Editor,

I am writing in response to Dr. Schenk's editorial on dating and women that was published in the October 20th issue of The Seahawk.

As a woman I was very much offended by his sexist views on dating. He obviously has no concept of how to enjoy the opposite sex's company for the sake of stimulating conversation and just getting to know the person better.

From his article I gathered that he does not have any intention of spending time with an intellectual or even semi-intellectual woman because she would obviously see through his shallowness.

I am curious to know what

U.S. Elects Apathy, Again

RICK HEYMANN
NEWS EDITOR

Now that the elections are over and we all know who the next President of the United States will be, how many voted? Not nearly enough of the eligible voters according to the most recent statistics.

The Charlotte Observer reported on November 10, that only about 90 million voters cast their ballots. There are about 250 million people in the United States.

Now, granted that not all of these people are eligible to vote, ie: felons and those under 18 years of age; the number of people who could vote, but didn't, outweighed those who actually casted their ballot by at least 2.5 to 1. November 8 was a sad day indeed for the popular vote system.

The Seahawk recently decided to conduct it's own survey regarding the infamous subject of "voter apathy." Student response to the questionnaire was fairly good, yet the answers we received were often less than intelligent. When asked to comment on their favorite candidate's campaign promises, next to none of those polled could even write one of the candidate's position on an issue. One person even had the audacity to write "I don't remember" with respect to the same question.

It is a shame that the average voter at UNCW most likely does not even know how their candidate stands on the major issues of this past campaign. With all the media hype over exaggerating the simple issues like the pledge of allegiance, the average American should have been almost brainwashed by the campaign propaganda put out by not only the media, but the candidates as well.

Who affects the average voter more: the candidate or the media? According to the survey, overwhelmingly, "the media." It is apparent that faith in one of Americas institutions, the Presidential candidate, seems to be slipping. Paradoxically, the media presents candidates in the image that the candidate himself creates, but the media in turn often distorts the image, thereby contradicting what the candidate is trying to accomplish. This causes the public to be more influenced by the media than by the candidate. For example, let us suppose that the media has projected that a certain candidate is losing in the polls. This information may inhibit a voter to cast his or her vote altogether. The same information may rally the voters supporting the other candidate, bringing them to the polls in the hopes that their turnout will be better and therefore give him a chance.

On a note a little closer to home, apathy is not restricted to national elections. The current president of the SGA, (Student Government Association), was elected by 580 votes. There are about 6,500 eligible voters attending UNCW, but only about 17% bothered to vote at all. That is less than 2 out of every 5 students. Some chose to comment that there was not enough publicity about the most recent election held this past Spring, and further maintained that this was the reason for their not voting. Last Spring, the Seahawk ran political ads several weeks before the SGA election and voting "tents" were constructed in the cafeteria and the Student Union promoting the event. Although appropriate measures were taken to insure a good voter turnout, apathy was the real winner of that election.

"Doctor" Titled Should Have "Witch" Attached

Dear Editors,

The article on date rape written by Roy U. Schenk, "Ph.D.", in the October 20 issue of the Seahawk was a very weak excuse for filler. After reading this piece of editorial drivel I can only conclude that his title of "Doctor" should have the word "Witch" affixed to the front of it.

In eleven badly-structured paragraphs "Mr." Schenk not only manages to insult an entire gender, but also systematically sets women's rights back to the Pre-Cambrian ages. This was easily done by illustrating women as prostitutes and contract-teases (remember the 150 steps?) who should live up to society's role and at the same time be every man's proverbial "inflationable gal." I doubt many women see every date as nothing more than a visit to the Mustang Ranch.

"Why aren't women taking their share of the responsibility for initiating sex?" asks Mr. Schenk in paragraph five. He replies with the breakthrough answer- "Women are insisting on maintaining their superiority attitudes and the power that goes with their control..."

Their "control" and "power"? Right, Mr. Schenk. Have you ever thought that maybe the guy she went out with turned out to be a total geek, or maybe even to be some women are (GASP) virgins (OMIGOSH) and would like to remain that way until marriage? Not too far fetched of a concept when in print!

he/she did not want to have sex on a date? Is this contract readily available for public inspection?

The low-point of the whole article though, has to come when the author lends the idea of "mutual masturbation" to relieve tension when sex is not an acceptable pursuit for women during a date. This is the best one yet! I can see it now: "What would you like to do tonight, honey? Have dinner? Catch? A Movie? Masturbate?"

In closing I must say the article not only was degrading, syntactically incorrect, scientifically unfounded, and barbaric but insulted the intelligence of all Seahawk readers and gave my English Professor an opportunity to give me one more writing assignment!

Compiled from the statements of George Bush

"A Bush Administration will stand by nations that face internal and external threats to their independence and with those who value liberty."

"A Bush Administration will also discourage Soviet and other state-sponsored adventurism by increasing the costs to those who use surrogate terrorist and subversive forces to exploit instability in the developing world."

World Hunger: "Over the long term, the best means of overcoming hunger is to allow farmers to produce by encouraging poor countries to rely on the enterprise of their own people."

South Africa: "South Africa is a pariah state. The vastly outnumbered Afrikaners, acting out of fear, have constructed the racist system of apartheid to ensure their political and economic supremacy. That system is morally repugnant to all who believe in human liberty, and we cannot rest until apartheid is eliminated from South Africa."

Central America: "Our role in Central America is the same as our role in other parts of the world. This role is to promote peace, but not peace at any price. In the case of Central America, our objective is not a peace that merely stops the shooting and entrenches a Soviet beachhead. Our main objective is the maintenance and establishment of governments committed to freedom and democracy, governments that respect human rights and the sovereignty of their neighbors."

Eastern Europe: "Our policy... in Eastern Europe... of encouraging movement away from Soviet doctrine—offers the hope of more freedom for the people there."

World Trade: "Increased trade reduces international tensions and provides a better standard of living for everyone. But our commitment to free trade must be linked to a reciprocal commitment to fair trade by our trading partners. They must respect our right to compete in their marketplace and they must compete fairly in ours."

"Protectionism benefits some businesses at the expense of the rest of the economy and exposes us to retaliation and the prospect of an all-out trade war which no one would win. Such measures drive up the cost to consumers and misallocate our economic resources."

"Economic growth is now as much a matter of foreign policy as it is economic policy. We should build on the achievement of our free trade zone with Canada—a $130 billion agreement—and work with our other neighbor, Mexico, to create a free trade zone of unprecedented size, a new North American compact." *

Taxes and Spending: "As president, I will not raise taxes, period. We made a promise to the American people to lower tax rates for individuals and corporations, to make sure that everyone pays a fair share, and to simplify the number of brackets. I'm going to keep that promise. I have recently proposed to reduce the capital gains rate to 15% (from 28% scheduled under the Tax Reform Act) on gains held more than one year. Presently, all profits from investments are taxed at a minimum rate of 28%. This tremendous burden discourages new investment, and stifles economic growth."

"I support a Constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget. And I believe the president, like 43 state governors, should have the line-item veto to cut wasteful spending out of appropriations bills."

Defense: "A president's first priority is to maintain the defense of the country. The first question we should ask ourselves is not how much money we should spend, but what is required to be secure."

"We must be constantly vigilant, bring in the best people, and hold them to the highest standards."

"As President, I would overhaul the defense acquisition process. We can eliminate unnecessary and expensive steps and reduce the time and the cost... to get a weapon system into the field. We also need to take a hard look at the structure of our military forces to make sure that we have the most effective defenses, not just the most expensive... I will have no tolerance for the wasting of tax dollars through needless or inefficient defense procurement policies."

"We should pursue arms negotiation agreements with the Soviet Union under the four criteria which have been used since the beginning of the Reagan Administration. We are pursuing deep cuts to equal levels with agreements that can be verified and that will enhance stability."

Education: "I support creating a new $500 million federal program of "Merit Schools" that would provide awards to individual schools that improve the education of their students, giving federal matching funds to states creating more magnet schools; expanding a new federal fund to finance experiments in education reform; and a proposal to develop teacher evaluation models."

"I will expand funding for Head Start. We must have higher academic standards. I want more testing of our students and more competency tests for teachers. We must stress the 4-Rs—reading, writing, arithmetic, and respect." *

UNC Admissions: Who Gets In, Who Doesn't

On the inside cover of the Student Handbook there is a statement that reads, "The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is open to people of all races and actively seeks to promote racial integration by recruiting and enrolling a larger number of black students." This means, in fact, that the University is actively recruiting black students.

How can this be true when the statement directly above it states that the University does not, "discriminate against applicants . . . based on race, color, national origin etc." Does the last statement mean that they do or don't discriminate against races or colors? It would seem that they discriminate against no one, who is black.

The UNCW Office of Minority Affairs has become, and will most likely remain, an office of black affairs. There is more than one minority at this university, yet those minorities are not considered minorities. The mandate placed on UNCW is that they have a 7% minority population. That doesn't mean a 7% black population. People should never assume that minority means black, but at UNCW it does.

The requirement that 7% of the population need be black, is preposterous in the least. That means that either academic standards are lowered to allow for minority enrollment or the school is actively having to go out and recruit minority students. In the latter case someone must have to go out to recruit these people and those people don't work for free, hence we would be paying for someone to actively pursue minorities for enrollment at this institution.

In essence, the government is saying that the University actively seeks to enroll more blacks and will cut off those of other races to allow for the enrollment of those black students recruited.

If the University in its infinite wisdom were to disallow their application to indicate the race, color or sex of its applicant, then and only then could they say that they truly did not discriminate against someone, but while the questions are still on the applications no one can truly say.

The Office of Admissions probably separates applications by race and allows for 93% of the enrollment to be filled by Caucasians and then sets aside another pile for minorities to fill the remaining 7%. If there weren't enough applicants to fill that 7% then they might have to "recruit" some to fill that percentage up. Currently UNCW is a little shy of its 7% mark, at about 6.6%.

Some schools have the same problem with too few females or males. Many women have been denied admission to UNC Chapel Hill because someone feels not only that there are too many females at Carolina, but that "male alumni are more generous." Is it fair to let a person with a poor academic record in because they have the right sex or skin color to balance the school out? Surely not.

People should not be allowed to come to a University because of their skin color or how much money they have or even if they're a male or female. Academic institutions are supposed to be just that, ACADEMIC INSTITUTIONS.

You can bet your bottom dollar that somewhere, someone in the administration is catching hell because we're just shy of that 7% mark. Next year, it is fair to say that someone somewhere is not going to get in because of their race or color, and someone else will.

Drug Free Mass Transit, Finally

The Department of Transportation (DOT) has ordered that four million non-government workers be tested randomly for drug abuse. This order includes airline pilots, bus drivers, railroad engineers, conductors, subway engineers, truck drivers and others who work in the transportation field.

Someone has finally decided that the American public needs a drug free transportation system. The coast guard has a zero tolerance policy and now we, the American people, are going to have a zero tolerance policy on our roads and railway systems.

But wait, there's more. People are actually challenging this decision to test people for drug use. Why? They feel it's an infringement on their rights. They feel that their job should not be dependant on whether their urine sample tests positive or not.

Furthermore, companies are laughable. They actually feel that the government should provide the testing facilities and the testing of that they should be able to conduct taking action because they feel that they should not have to test their personnel through a private laboratory and remove workers who test positive. This is the tests themselves. The aspect of not removing a worker from a position if he tests positive for illegal drug use is also laughable, especially if that person is in a position responsible for even one life. These companies and individuals who are against this bill are acting like children. This is not, however, a childish issue. Human lives are at stake!

Personally, I feel that taking a leak in a cup to keep your job is nothing in light of being responsible for the lives of hundreds of people each day. I know that I would like to know, when I'm cruising at 41,000 feet that the pilot is still within the confines of reality and has been for the past few days at least. When I'm on the road I like thinking that the guy driving the eighteen-ton tractor trailer next to me isn't going to be dodging imagined holes in the road or drift into a daze because he isn't really thinking he's driving at the time.

America needs to have its roads and railways protected by someone, if not the government then who else? The private trucking firms and other transportation firms are not going to go through the expense of having their employees tested for the heck of it. They'd rather take the chance and then confront the problem in court if someone gets killed because of their driver's or conductor's ignorance.

Now we will hopefully bypass the death to get to the heart of the problem. We humans have enough problem with driving errors and mistakes without adding to them by being doped up while we negotiate our vehicles. The DOT should be commended for their effort, although long overdue, in taking an affirmative action against a problem that we should have never had to confront in the first place.

Remembering to Be Thankful

In the ongoing rush of our daily lives, there is an appropriate irony in the fact that we have to set aside a holiday called Thanksgiving to remind ourselves to be thankful.

Let us take some time to become mindful of all with which we are blessed. First, there is the obvious beauty of the world in which our lives are set, the love of friends and family that sustains, a life that is filled with possibilities and choices, our health and frequent sense of well-being, food and clothing in a world where so many have little of either, freedom to think, to believe, to speak our mind, and above all, lives that have been or can be touched by the grace of God.

There is another dimension to our lives that I would suggest deserves our thankfulness, at least in the long-run. I am speaking now of the hard times and struggles that we encounter in our lives. I am convinced that more of my sense of identity, my strength and courage and my fundamental sense of security lie in dealing with the struggles that I have encountered in my life than with the good times, the pleasant times, the easy times.

We are shaped and formed by the adversities of life much as objects of beauty are chiseled out of hard rock are forged in fire. Even if there are times where you might be confused about your future, anxious about grades or finances or whatever, all these are clues to the fact that Life is working itself out in you and you are in the process of growing and developing into a person who can know a lot of joy and satisfaction.

We need to learn to give thanks for the process that is shaping us even when it is hard. I just returned from visiting with a family whose son is in intensive care at the hospital. In the midst of their anguish, their thankfulness for their son and for the God who sustains them in the "valley of shadow" was constantly apparent.

To experience Thanksgiving seated around a little table in Hardee's at the hospital is very different from sharing Thanksgiving around your bountifully laden dining room table at home. But it is just as real and, in some way more powerful.

We would do well to cultivate a sense of thankfulness daily and let ourselves become more and more aware of all the things, small and great, for which we can give thanks whether our days are filled with sunshine and light or with shadows. A thankful heart is one of God's richest blessings.

Too Many Toothpaste Choices, Too Little Time

Freedom of choice. Isn't that what we Americans are so proud to possess? I don't know. Sometimes I'd prefer freedom from choice. Think about it; doesn't the amount of choices in our capitalist society get ridiculous at times?

Just walk into Kroger's and think about how many of the same items or foods there are to choose from. How do we decide?

Imagine coming to America from some little communist country and walking into Kroger's for a few items. You stare in disbelief at the toothpaste shelves. The choices cause your cognitive process to short circuit. Why are there so many different colors? You figure that white would be the best color since our teeth are whitish, but there aren't many white toothpastes to be seen. The blue one says that it makes teeth brighter. Bright blue or white? The red toothpaste claims that it makes teeth whiter, but that's what the red, white and blue one says. Almost all of them are mint flavored. Why is that?

Do you want a little tube or a giant (is that for big teeth)? What about a family size tube? Do you have to have a family to purchase it? Hey, what about the pumps? You don't have to buy a tube at all, and all the pumps are the same size. They look neat too. What about cavities? Almost all of them have flouride to fight cavities, and one of them has MFP. What the hell is that? Many are recommended by dentists. Why? Does it give you cavities so that you have to visit the dentist more or do they really care about your teeth?

What about the price? They cost about the same, but the plain one with flouride is cheaper. It must be bad to look that plain. You finally go for the red, white and blue brand in a pump. It looks American. Now you head for the nearby deodorant shelves. This is America—you can't smell like a human here. You must smell like a flower or a citrus fruit. This decision is even tougher. Do you want a roll-on, a stick, a spray or that weird cream? If you're a male, you probably don't want to smell like a violet, even if it's strong enough for a man. You need to smell like a manly time.

Should you "Ban" your odor, be "Sure" about your non B.O., do you want to "Tickle" your armpits, or do you want to keep the fact that you use deodorant a "Secret"? Maybe you want your B.O. "Guarded Right." Damn this is tough. You finally see the soap located behind you and realize that they have deodorant soaps; why waste money on deodorant when you can get it from your soap? (Heh Heh)

After you flip a coin to decide between Coast or Dial, you walk away with Dial. You find yourself wishing that everyone used Dial.

I can lead you down every aisle, but I won't you get the picture—I hope. Now I know why everyone has their favorite products—to keep them from going crazy from choosing. You couldn't go through that grocery store scene every week.

Imagine if you didn't have your "favorite" brands. You would enter a store at opening and they'd have to escort you mumbling, drooling carcass out at closing. In a store which doesn't close, some nice people would kindly carry you away from the macaroni and cheese or cheese and macaroni that you were blubbering over and bring you to a quiet place where the only choice you have is whether to get out of bed or not.

When I chose to become a vegetarian earlier this year, I didn't foresee the pleasure of limited choices. I used to stare blankly at eight chapter menus, and when the waitperson would come by after a minute and ask if I decided yet, I'd say, "I forgot my glasses; could you kindly tell me what's on the menu?" If they didn't run off, they'd usually mumble something about everything being on it.

Now, since this is Wilmington, I get two choices if I'm lucky. It's a lot easier; it's tough to make the wrong decision.

Since beer doesn't usually have meat in it—I still have an occasional cold one. Beer is a prime example of needing a favorite or go crazy deciding. No beer drinker would ever refuse a free beer because they are rather similar. I once drank an Old Milwaukee that was given to me. I really did.

I wish that I could enter a bar and just ask for "a beer" and get one like they do on television. But no, they have to ask "what kind?" If I say a Coors (my favorite) they will counter with, Coors Light, Extra Gold, Regular or draft? Just give me a goddamn beer or I'll slit your throat.

I wanted a lead into my next paragraph about razors. Pretty smooth eh? Speaking of razors. It seems that men have been shaving for years, so any razor will suffice. Wrong again Bic breath. We have the choice of a single edged razor, a double edged (So one can stretch the hair while the other lops it off) a straight edged razor (gulp) disposable razors, a vibrating razor (sort of like having a seizure while shaving) or we can use an electric razor. I can't believe that beards aren't more popular than they are.

The next time you are staring blankly at shampoos or conditioners, just close your eyes and grab one. Chances are, it won't make a difference.

Even though it isn't feasible for America to become a socialistic nation now, I think that it would be nice to have the choice of only three kinds of toilet paper. A soft one with flower print for the sensitive types, a basic scented yellow paper (why toilet paper needs to be scented is beyond me) and a cheap hard white paper for schools and public buildings. (It keeps out the riff raff.)

The grocery stores would have so much excess space that they could widen the aisles so that the shoppers could skate through. There would be no reason to stand around choosing. Wouldn't that be fun? Shopping wouldn't be so boring any more.

Your Average MVP Vote

During the previous four months, as you well know, several qualified candidates have been battling for America's two most sought-after positions, and in order to attain this rather lofty status, much mud slinging tactics and false accusations have been issued under the pretense of the gospel truth.

Certainly by now, this being Wednesday November 16, is aware of the landslide winner of one of the races. I would have voted for him, too, had I been granted the opportunity. Similarly, we are virtually assured of predicting the second winner, as well.

Although it will not be officially announced until tomorrow, the voting has been conducted, and therefore, I will rest comfortably tonight with my assertion that, indeed, Jose Canseco will join National Leaguer Kirk Gibson as being voted the MVP in their respective leagues.

However, what you may not be aware of are the circumstances and events that preluded these two all-stars election, which incidentally, was amazingly similar to another election, albeit far less important, that recently ended in a victory for all the plant life and dulled the aura of the Duke. This race had its own share of lowlights as well. And despite the fact that on-campus requirements prohibited me from attending the National Convention, or all-star game depending upon your perspective, I nonetheless was able to obtain some rather enlightening evidence, through a visit to a vis encounter with Scooter "Sweet Swingin'" Wallbanger, who gleefully served as head mediator during the three inning information laden debate. In case you have any hesitation concerning the authenticity or credentials of Wallbanger, or the debate, feel secure knowing that I would trust anything "Sweet Swingin'" said on a stack of National Enquirer's.

Due to the nature of such a potentially touchy situation, all media persons were vehemently denied entrance. "Sweet Swingin'" was forced to listen from the depths of a locker whose malodorous scent could be likened to any NBA player following a game.

Gibson, an outspoken outfielder originally from Michigan, lashed out first, suggesting that opposing candidate Darryl Strawberry, an outfielder from New York, was "not playing with a full deck." The bald Strawberry began to bubble with anger, and spoiled the inaugural meeting by squirting a tube of "black out" in Gibson's hat.

Fellow New York running mate, outfielder Kevin McReynolds quickly interrupted the ensuing fracas, and stated that he was the most qualified person for the McDonald's sponsored McTrophy. His McStats were superior to Strawberry's, he said, and just coping with "the fruitcake", referring to Strawberry, was worth at least second place.

Still another candidate, Cincinnati outfielder Eric Davis, admitted he was "seeing red" over the lack of press he was receiving that he felt was a direct payoff for his involvement in an alleged incident in a New York restroom. He said that between innings he relieved himself, and in a hurry to return to action, neglected to wash his hands. A man, who later turned out to be the head chairperson for the election committee, donned unmistakably in Mets apparel yelled, "hey Davis, don't they teach you Cincinnati boys to wash your hands after you go to the bathroom?" "No," replied the clean handed Golden Glover, "they teach us not to piss on them." Davis' name was subsequently stricken from the ballot.

The debate was tragically interrupted when "Sweet Swingin'", who after thirty minutes of entrapment was anything but sweet smellin', burst out of the locker donning an athletic supporter, that in the darkened hideout, closely resembled a gas mask.

But before being detected he heard closing arguments from communication major, Orel Hersher, who boisterously proclaimed he would be left feeling (dodger) blue if he were not chosen.

"Sweet Swingin'", incidentally, was allowed one vote. He, of course, nominated the fresh scented Pete Rose.

Green Defeats Glitterless Gold, 67-56

BY CHRIS WRIGHT
Sports Editor

With pre-season All-America candidate center Larry Houzer watching helplessly from the stands, and senior guard Antonio Howard struggling to find his range, Thursday night's Green and Gold scrimmage showcased tenacious defense that made scoring virtually impossible.

The Green squad, led by Adam Porter's game-high 16 points clipped the not so Gold team in this defensive struggle, 67-56.

Defense was the strong point, as a combined 34 turnovers were forced, almost one per minute. The Green team, who had three double digit scorers, shot 44 percent from the field and relegated the Gold to a minimal 37 percent.

"We've really stressed defense everyday in practice," said Head Coach Robert McPherson, who not unlike Houzer, sat this game out, allowing his assistants some game-time experience. "I thought defense was one of the brightest spots we had."

There were, however, several bright spots offensively, most notably Porter's resurgence after suffering an injury that forced him to sit out last year, and freshman Matt Fish, who set aside his legal frustrations to chip in 10 points on 5 of 8 shooting for the Green.

"I thought it was a typical intrasquad game," said McPherson. "It's difficult to look good... because each one knows what the other is going to do."

The Green team, which included three of the four probable starters used an effective mix of both inside and outside scoring to come back from a 28-23 halftime deficit.

"We've got some guys who are shooters," McPherson added. "Even better we've got some guys who are makers." In addition to Porter's 16, which included a 10-11 free throw performance, senior Greg Bender, junior Robbie Cutter, and freshman Matt Fish all reached the double digit mark, scoring 15, 12, and 10 respectively for the Green.

The Gold team had three scoring in double figures led by Joe Cherry's 16 points. Senior Ricky Griffith scored 12 while sophomore Scott Tierney added 10.

The Green's Major Wiggins scored a misleading 8 but could have easily wound up with 14 as his shots seemingly rolled in and out all night.

An 18-7 spurt to open the second half, started by a Wiggins' tap and supported by 8 of Fish's 10 total points, ended at the 3:32 mark with the Green team comfortably leading, 57-45.

This was the last of three intrasquad scrimmages, all of which were missed by the 6'8" Houzer, who just underwent his second knee operation in three weeks. He will not be available when the Hawks open play Saturday night against Brazil.

"No Respect" Guarantees No Funds

BY PATRICK FOWLER
STAFF WRITER

The famous Rodney Dangerfield line "I get no respect" seems to fit the predicament of the Girls Club Soccer Team. Despite numerous requests for more funds the SGA has nixed pleas for tourney fees and additional funds to finance the girls league. First year coach Michael Black is very concerned with the team's status right now. "The other clubs, like the surfers, receive anywhere from $1000 to $2000 for their account and we only receive $200 from SGA." The team has already withdrawn from the tournament in Raleigh. The turnout this year has doubled from last year's inaugural season and the demand for additional equipment and practice time slots are high. The SGA policy is to give out only $200 for a new club so they can see if they deserve to be funded again in the next fiscal year.

The team has been trying to raise money by soliciting local area sponsors in a a desperate attempt to pay for uniforms and league costs. "We have contacted Junior League and Lifetime Sports to name a few but haven't had any luck yet." The Girls Club Team received varsity status last year and has high aspirations to improve its record from last season and hopes to compete competitively with other rival schools. "The practice field time and the expenditures of funds rank awful high on our list," says Black. The money will benefit the girls a bunch and any contributions would be appreciated. Donations can be sent to the SGA account. Please considering helping our school teams out! In the immortal words of the schoolmarm in the movie "Greece": "If you can't be an athlete, be an athletic supporter!"

Hawks Season Ends in Defeat- Await Post-Season Bid from ECAC Committee

The Lady Hawks ended the season to a close with a disheartening defeat by William & Mary at the CAA Tournament held at American University on November 12 and 13. The Seahawks were able to conquer their first obstacle, George Mason University, with ease winning 5-15, 15-3, 15-11, 15-9. Then the second seeded Seahawks advanced to the championship game in which they were to duel top-seeded William & Mary. Although the Hawks fought with unrestrained vigor, William & Mary was eventually victorious, winning 15-5, 15-6, and 15-13.

Coach McDaniel remarked that "there weren't any runaway matches. At least we made William & Mary work a little harder in the championship match." Even though the Seahawks were unable to wrap up with the top status in the conference, their season was one of spectacular glory.

Coach McDaniel's crew entered the school records by winning the "most victories, player of the week, all-conference and coach of the year." The Hawks ended their marvelous season with a phenomenal 30-3 record which elevated the 15 season record to 250-171.

The Seahawks held two superb winning streaks in the season. The first 15 game winning streak began with the first game of the season against UNC-Asheville and ended with the five game match against Liberty University. The second streak consisted of the 13 games following Liberty's match to the sad loss to William & Mary in the CAA Tournament preceding the last one.

The Lady Spikers did not lose a single game at home or away, winning 9-0 and 7-0, respectively. The three losses occurred in neutral ground at the conference matches. McDaniel proudly notes that "it's definitely been a great year."

Coach McDaniel, not surprisingly, was the 1988, CAA Coach of the Year. McDaniel, who just wrapped up her fourth season, brought her record to 90-41 as a result of her decisive maneuvering. "We added a lot more play-stops and that helped us more than anything else," McDaniel insightfully adds.

Four year starter Mary Lou Rym made second team All-CAA and All-CAA Tournament honors. Senior Dede Devoley achieved standing in first team All-CAA as well as All-CAA Tournament. Another key player, Yvonne Holan, completed the season by making first team All-CAA. Also, Lisa Mills, Dede Devoley and Mary Lou Ryan were named CAA players of the week.

With the tremendous support of assistant coach Elaine Penn, McDaniel was able to guide the Spikers to win 92 games to 19 opponents. Coach

McDaniel was especially pleased because "our competition was tougher this year."

UNCW, ending up second place in the CAA, faces the problem of finding tougher competition in hopes of vying for the top seat next year.

The 1988 Lady Spikers may be immensely proud of the records they have set for UNCW. Their precise handling of the ball as well as the offensive and defensive maneuvering led them to many great victories. Hopefully, Coach McDaniel will continue to guide next year's Spikers with expertise that will allow them to be the number one volleyball team in the CAA Tournament.

ECAC Tournament Snubs Lady Spiker's

BY PATRICK FOWLER
STAFF WRITER

What do you mean that we are denied a measly ECAC bid to post-season play in the tournament? Hey dudes and dudesses, just look at our fantastic volleyball record this year: 30-3. That's a big 3 and a zero behind it for those in the selection committee. The Lady Spikers have beaten 91% of their victims... er... I mean opponents in three straight games in their victories.

They posted a fifteen game winning streak before falling to Liberty in a close five game affair in which the Hawks barely lost. Their only other losses were to the unbeaten, heavily favored powerhouse William and Mary. Even in those two losses, both in tournaments, the Hawks were close to the Tribe. Their last loss was a 15-5, 15-6, 15-13 match that forced the Tribe to play at their limit to down our team. The people at the University of Pennsylvania's Athletic Department don't think that's enough.

Sheesh! If we had beaten William and Mary we would've been granted an invitation to the NCAA Tournament. The ECAC is a minor tournament, the volleyball world equivalent of the NIT. It's nice to receive, but it's not the one everyone wants. Players like Mary Lou Ryan, Dede Devoley, Yvonne Holan, and Lisa Mills received many CAA honors.

Allow me to show you their hard work dividends: ALL-CAA First Team honors to Dede Devoley and Yvonne Holan, ALL-CAA Second Team placing to Mary Lou Ryan, ALL-CAA Tournament Awards to Seahawk spikers Ryan and Devoley. CAA Players of the Week were the trio of Lisa Mills, Yvonne Holan, and once again Dede Devoley. Don't tell me, sirs, that doesn't count for something!!!

Do you want to know the reason why we were denied the ECAC birth? We were ranked fifth in the final ECAC standings. Hell, man, we have a 6-1 record in the CAA conferences with one loss to William and Mary, who is heading for a much bigger tournament than yours, the NCAA.

You can't be serious not to give our team an at-large bid! I hope your other four teams can say they boasted 15- and 13-game winning streaks in their season. Is it that you've never seen or heard of a beachfront power like UNCW? That's a capital U, capital N, capital C, capital W that posted the second best record in the CAA. Do you have a vendetta against CAA teams, or will our team possibly upset the teams you selected?

I find it highly questionable that the teams invited to the tournament are from the New England States area (Hosstra, Northeastern, Fairleigh-Dickerson and Brown). What more do we have to prove in order to gain a bid? We almost doubled our wins (18) from last year and defeated many of our foes that we had previously succumbed to. Three of the four selectees can't say that. In fact, Dickerson and Northeastern have 13 losses each and Brown came in with nine losses to their credit.

Sure, we've not travelled as much as some of the teams you have selected but nobody wanted to take us on. Can we be blamed for that? We took William & Mary to the wire and they took on and defeated some of your so-called top teams.

You say that the invitation to the tournament is based on this criteria: head to head competition, win and loss record, strength of the schedule, record against common opponents, and regional coaches poll. Did you truly rate the top teams on their individual merit or did you pick the school in order of fan support? The Seahawks are leading three of the teams picked, in every category except two (schedule strength or head to head confrontation with these teams).

The latter factor isn't relevant because those teams wouldn't play us. You say that one factor isn't the sole reason for exclusion from the tourney, yet you deny our girls based on their schedule strength. That, sir, is in no way professional or fair. Many major tours accept at-large bids to worthy and competitive teams that will add to their tournament play.

This just shows the narrow-minded and borderline prejudiced decision of the committee to exclude a top-notch volleyball team. I'm not for inclusion of a team who plays an easy schedule to gain an impressive record for the alumni benefit; however, this is not the case here. The Hawks played the tough volleyball powers, of James Madison, UNC-Charlotte, William and Mary, and Liberty. Taking the top four teams is a mighty small tournament to me.

If you want more teams applying for your tourney, you have to include more. Those who go, if impressed, will go again and quite possibly tell other schools about it. That's how the NCAA got to be such a prestigious and sought-out tournament bid. Just taking locally known teams sounds like a major bull-caca copout job to this reporter.

I find the ECAC committee guilty of an incredibly poor selection of teams and totally missing the reason behind post-season tournaments, which is to find the best team that year. It's therefore an insult and a shame that the great effort our girls put out for us this year won't be awarded. Never were we treated to a losing cause at home or away (losses on neutral ground).

The team mixed the talents of veterans and newcomers alike that worked hard to give us a team to be proud of. They shouldn't be denied the chance to showcase their talents elsewhere.

In conclusion I personally would extend my warm thanks to the Lady Seahawk Volleyball Team, Coach Cathy McDaniel, Assistant Coach Elaine Penn, all the managers and baseline callers and, most of all, the fans who cheered the team on all year. Ladies, you're number one in our books!

Swimmers Stroke to Victory Over Emory

BY PATRICK FOWLER
STAFF WRITER

The men's and ladies' swim teams dove in for their debut this weekend against Emory University. The men's, led by team captain Phillippe Roth, captured victories in all seven swimming and two diving events in a 149-92 whitewashing of Emory.

The women, who were riddled with injuries and possessing a small line-up came up a couple of strokes short in a sour opening day defeat. Roth had a field day (or should I say pool day) as he recorded victories in the 100 meters, 400-freestyle relay, and 400 medley (back-breast, butterfly, free).

Diver Jeff Cairnes, out of seven divers, leaped to a third place with a 190.15 in the one meter springboard and grabbed a fourth place (185.85) in the three meter board. Cairnes' dives from the three meter board included a 2.4 difficulting in a breath-taking 2 1/2 forward somersault that netted him his best score of the day with scores ranging from high 5 to 6 1/2.

"I feel pretty good about my performance. Last year I worked over Christmas break and I've improved some, but I still have work to do as the season wears on." While Cairnes was taking care of the diving venue for the men, the ladies were helped in their cause by divers Mary Beth Mills, Jessie Pustis, and Elisabeth Crabbe.

Mills won both the springboard events at one meter and three with high marks of 217.40 at one meter and 232.15 at the three meter height. These were excellent scores in a day when the judges gave no mark higher than a 6 1/2. Jessie Pustis ("the mighty mite darling") obtained a fourth place finish in the one and sixth place position in the three.

This was Pustis' first collegiate meet, as was the situation for newcomer Elisabeth Crabbe, who boasted two fifth place showings in both diving areas. Not a bad job girls, considering your limited experience. Come to think of it, that's a lot better than I could have done! You'll get to see a closer look at these flying fishes in a special feature on our UNCW divers in the next issue of the Seahawk, so don't miss it.

The swim team was heavily praised by Coach Allen, who said "I was pleased with the overall performance of the squad and am looking forward to coaching players to better themselves." This says to this reporter to look for some possible tying or record-breaking times this year. The coach is very optimistic on his team's opening day performance, especially the ladies' effort, considering their predicament.

However, he feels the men's team has a excellent chance of improving from their sixth place showing last year in the CAA Championships. "The men are much stronger and improved from last year's squad. They should move up in the top three in the championship." The ladies' line-up is small and, barring any more injuries, probably will maintain their fifth place, ranking from last season's finale.

The Hawks will no doubt encounter tough tests from Duke, ECU, Old Dominion, and others as they face a rigorous meet schedule against many top twenty teams. "We've got three conference meets coming up and we have to be ready. The team got to learn to win on the road for success this year," said Allen. Early surprises to take note of are: Laura Depth and Laura Grant, who also attained double victories in the 50 and 100 freestyle events for the ladies', and White and Shoulty on the men's side. The battle of the waterways continues when the Hawks take on Richmond this Saturday, November 19.

Lady Cagers Appear Ready

TASHA BOONE
STAFF WRITER

The women's basketball team is ready to start an exciting 88-89 season. The team will be travelling to East Tennessee State on November 30 for their first game after Thanksgiving break. Just to see how ready they were I sat in on one of their practices.

Things looked easy enough at the beginning with pre-shooting and stretches, and soon the players were in motion. Series after series of drills were performed that included essential techniques, such as dribbling, passing, and lay-ups. Offensive and defensive plays were reviewed and reviewed until the coach was satisfied. Coach Christoph took one of the players aside and said, "Make the shortest, safest, and smartest pass-always." Both coaches could be heard throughout practice giving encouragements, criticisms, and suggestions such as this when needed. The main observation, however, was hustling. They know on the court during a game that hustling is one of the keys to winning.

Afterwards, the players were divided into two teams for a scrimmage against each other for about thirty minutes. No, they're not done yet! Then they all filed into the weight room for another thirty minutes of workout. (They don't kid and play.) Those showers were definitely a haven after putting forth their all from two to five o'clock.

I thought to myself, "These women are ready after a workout like this." I decided to find out how Coach Christoph felt about the upcoming season. "I am glad everyone is back and healthy. Even though we had some losses who were starters such as Siszy Morris, Sharon McDowell, and Crystal Taylor, I feel confident with the players we have. They are comfortable and are playing with confidence. I had a lot of question marks before, but now the pieces are fitting in the puzzle."

The new assistant coach is Laura Grunnells, and I asked her how she was enjoying her new job. "I love working with the girls, and I hope to help them not only with basketball but also with academics, and in enjoying their college years. I am interested in them as people and not just basketball players." Well said, Coach Grunnells.

Returnees Charlene Page, Amy Willford, and Roslyn Flood are pretty optimistic about this season. They all agreed that "The positive attitude flows from within each member of the team as we harmonize as one on the court." Are these girls ready or what?

Even the minor injuries at the beginning of practice will not dampen these spirits. Debbie Sherman, the team's trainer, said minor injuries are not usual. "Usually about the first three weeks of practice injuries occur, because they are not in shape; however, the injuries were only minor. As long as they stay pretty much injury free, they should have a great season."

Everyone feels confident (so do I) that the Lady Seahawks will do as well as they did last season. We want you to know that everyone is behind you in your upcoming games. Come out and support your Lady Seahawks Women's Basketball Team for their first home game Dec. 8.

Schweitzer Winners Announced

BY CHAD ADAMS
MANAGING EDITOR

On the morning of November 17th, the North Carolina Educational, Historical and Scientific Foundation, Inc. announced the winners of the 1989 Albert Schweitzer International Prizes in the areas of medicine, music and humanities, who will visit the UNCW campus in March of the upcoming year to receive the awards.

Those selected include a Nobel Laureate in medicine, a Professor Doctor from Switzerland and a world renowned opera singer.

Dr. George Hitchings of Research Triangle Park, N.C. was selected to be the recipient for prize in medicine, Professor Doctor of Medicine Boris Luban-plozza of Locarno, Switzerland for the prize in humanities, and former opera star Beverly Sills for the prize in music.

The prizes are awarded every four years by the aforementioned organization. They are given to international individuals who reflect Dr. Schweitzer's philosophy of "reverence for life." They are given to those individuals who have demonstrated excellence in medicine, music and humanities, which coincide with Schweitzer's fields of excellence.

One of the purposes of the prizes are, "to bring great men and women to the [UNCW], so that students [here] and those from other universities, colleges and high schools may personally meet great models to live by."

A committee selects winners from nominations sent in by the worldwide Albert Schweitzer Nomination Council and are presented every four years. Each winner will receive five thousand dollars and a bronze medal. Past recipients include Mother Theresa, Andres Segovia and Dr. Donald Henderson.

The North Carolina Educational, Historical and Scientific Foundation, Inc., who presents the prizes, is a non-profit organization which was formed in 1972 and began presenting the Schweitzer awards in 1975. Originally the prizes were to be given every six years; in 1981 that format was changed to a four year format.

Dr. George H. Hitchings, co-recipient of the 1988 Nobel Prize in medicine, was selected for his discovery of "new compounds for the treatment of leukemia, malaria, gout, and a wide range of bacterial diseases, and an immunosuppressive agent which made the first kidney transplant possible."

Hitchings currently works for Burroughs Wellcome Research Laboratories with whom he has worked since 1942. He is a native of Washington and graduated cum laude from the university of Washington in 1927 with a B.S. in Chemistry. He later acquired his Ph.D. in biochemistry from Harvard University in 1933.

Pediatric Legend Speaks In Kenan

BY RICK HEYMANN
NEWS EDITOR

On Wednesday, Nov. 30, UNCW was host to Dr. T. Berry Brazelton, a veritable legend in the world of pediatric medicine. He made two appearances on campus at the request of Marlene Rosenkoetter, dean of the School of Nursing. His first lecture, held in Kenan Auditorium at 2:00 p.m., was open to the public.

The first lecture, entitled "The Infant as an Individual-Early Ego Development" dealt mainly with the parent-infant relationship and how to deal with abnormally developed children, mentally and physically. The lecture was an hour and a half of important, poignant information, often bringing the overwhelmingly female audience of about 150 to tears with laughter.

The second lecture was just as entertaining, dealing with "Working and Caring-Pressures on Parents of the 80's". Kim Scott, a senior nursing student, thought that this speech had an underlying message. "This lecture was about the changing roles in America today. Women are getting into the workplace, thereby unintentionally neglecting their child, and the personal attention it deserves," said Scott.

The appearance of Dr. Brazelton is "one of the roles of the School of Nursing," said Rosenkoetter. She feels that his lectures are pertinent to the student's education, in addition to the fact that a world famous lecturer spoke at UNCW, giving local nursing students an unprecedented opportunity.

Rosenkoetter enthusiastically commented on Brazelton as "...fabulous! He is an excellent role model for parents, as he is a parent himself. He has a unique ability to tune into the needs of parents."

Dr. Brazelton has been called the "pediatric guru of the Eighties." He is a professor of pediatrics at Harvard University and founder of the Child Development Unit at Boston's Children's Hospital. Brazelton's single most significant achievement was the development of the Brazelton Neonatal Behavioral Assessment Scale which work was begun on about 30 years ago. This procedure of testing the psychological well-being and the differences between infants is used worldwide today.

Brazelton is also credited with being the host of LIFETIME cable television's popular childrearing program "What every baby knows". He is a contributing editor to

Controversy Surrounds New Field

BY BRUCE FOLEY
STAFF WRITER

With UNCW's student population escalating steadily every year, the campus facilities must also expand and develop to meet the ever increasing needs of its academic community.

Last year, $750,000 was spent to develop an unparalleled recreational facility, the Residence Life Recreational field. This elaborate new development boasts four lit tennis courts, three basketball courts, two volleyball pits, a fenced in softball field, a multipurpose field, and a gazebo equipped to accommodate live entertainment. There is no doubt that such an extensive facility offers every student a wide variety of recreational opportunities.

However, walk out to the newest of UNCW's activities fields, the signs posted around these facilities make it very clear that the Residence Life Recreational Field is exclusively for the use of on-campus students only. No student classified as an off-campus student may share in what is undoubtedly the most extensive and fully equipped activity field on campus.

The purpose of the Residence Life Recreational Field is to enhance the lives of the students living among the residence halls and apartments. They are our first priority. Through structured and unstructured activities, we plan to promote the physical health, the social involvement, and the overall well being of our students," said the Jim Anderson, Area Director of the Residence Life office.

This restrictive policy regarding the use of the fields has sparked a controversy among students who feel the facilities should be open to all campus students, regardless of resident status.

"I see how the university is always stressing how to get the commuter students more involved on campus. I think allowing them access to the Residence Life Recreational field would be a great way to do it," says Karla Alston, Student Body President.

The actual funding of the Residence Life Field was drawn directly from student housing fees.

"Each year the housing fees are put into a sum deposit account, which is run very much like a savings account. From this account we work out our budget. It was these funds, accumulated over years that we financed the construction of the recreational field," explains Margaret Robison, Director of Auxiliary Funds.

Last year students living in a residence hall paid $1,340 towards housing fees. And like students living on campus in previous years, a portion of these fees would go towards the development of the recreational fields.

The problem that exists now, is in regards to the students that once lived on campus, and now are classified as off-campus students. Even with the fact that these students helped pay for the facilities out of their housing fees, they no longer have the privilege of using them according to the present policy.

Poplar Grove Prepares for Holidays

BY JENNY BATEMAN
ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR

Poplar Grove Plantation is cooking up some exciting things this holiday season. First of all the Topsail High School drama department will conduct a living-history dramatization of a nineteenth century Christmas. The program will be held on December 9, 10, and 11 at the Manor House. Tours will be given every hour from 6 PM to 9 PM each night. Admission is five dollars for adults, four dollars for senior citizens, and two dollars for children. There is a special group rate for 15 or more people.

The tour will be conducted in costumes of the period and will lead you through various buildings of Poplar Plantation and through the Manor House where the actors will portray certain aspects of an 1860's Christmas. The tour concludes with a free wassail bowl and bake sale will be set up, also. As part of the Christmas festival at Poplar Grove there will also be members of the Thalian Association Children's Theatre performing a series of skits from their recent production of "The Clown". The skits will be performed December 3, 10 AM to 5 PM and December 4, noon to 5 PM. Clowns will also be performing magical tricks and juggling. Popcorn will be sold with proceeds going to the Children's Theatre. Admission is free, so come on out and bring the kids!

Santa Claus will also debut at Poplar Grove on December 3 from 10 AM until 5 PM and December 4, noon until 5 PM. There will also be hand made arts and crafts on display and a special kids only department where everything will be one price and gift wrapped, too. And finally, the Poplar Grove Plantation will hold a wreath-making workshop on Saturday, December 10, from 1 PM until 4 PM. There is a six dollar charge for the class plus fifteen dollars for materials (to be provided by the instructor). Dorothea Cahill of House of Cahill Floral Designs will demonstrate how to make a permanent 16" Christmas wreath from natural materials and ribbons. Why not make someone special a wreath for the holidays?

Loan Funds Now Available

(CFI)-- College Foundation Inc. (CFI) announced this week that educational loan funds are still available for the 1988-89 academic year. CFI has financial commitments from North Carolina banks in excess of its current estimates on loan needs for funding its three educational loan programs for 1988-89.

Stafford Loans for Students are for dependent or independent students and are based on financial need. Supplemental Loans for Students are for independent self-supporting students and are not based on financial need. PLUS Loans for Parents are for parents of dependent students and are not based on financial need. All three types of loans are offered under the North Carolina Insured Student Loan Program, with the State Education Assistance Authority providing the guarantee.

The loan funds are available for applications received by the Foundation up to 30 days before the end of the academic period specified in the loan request. According to their enrollment situation and financial situations, students may specify the full academic year, or specific semesters or quarters, as their loan periods.

Additional information and applications are available from the financial aid offices at higher education institutions or directly from College Foundation Inc., P.O. Box 12100, Raleigh, NC 27605.

Racial Incidents Found On Other Campuses

(CPS) -- The president of one fraternity involved in a racial insult resigned last week, while the University of Wisconsin suspended an entire fraternity for being involved in another.

Both cases arose from frat parties that had racial themes.

At Wisconsin's Madison campus, officials suspended Zeta Beta Tau after hearing ZBT had held a "slave auction" part Oct 20 in which students "would put on skirts, and then the pledges would be put on auction for the sale of their services," reported UW Asst. Dean of Students Roger Howard.

Others, however, were unsatisfied with the suspension. They protested outside the ZBT house Oct. 24, and pledged to return periodically until the chapter was banned entirely. Police arrested eight of the picketers, charging them with trespassing.

At DePauw University in Indiana, Alpha Tau Omega President Jay Hoffman told a crowd of 1,500 people gathered to object to a mid-October ATO "ghetto party"--which included racist graffiti and some celebrants dressed as prostitutes and pimps--that he would resign in embarrassment.

In apologizing for the incident, Hoffman added fraternity members would perform 1,000 hours of community service and might sponsor a scholarship for black students.

Peacemaking was also the theme at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, where some 2,500 students formed a mile-long "Hands Across UMass" chain to promote racial "civility" on Oct. 27, the two-year anniversary of a racial clash that started as series of confrontation between black and white students at the campus.

Yet at the same time UMass students were holding hands, minority faculty members at Harvard were issuing a report charging campus equality was impossible until the school hired more blacks to teach and help administer the university.

The only way Harvard President Derek Bok would get serious about hiring more black scholars, the Association of Black Faculty and Administrators theorized in "The Final Report" released Oct. 25, would be if all the black people now employed on campus were killed in an explosion.

Then, the report said, the public would feel so bad that Bok would be forced to start "a much more effective program for recruiting blacks."

Only 3 percent of the campus' faculty members and administrators are black, the report said, and wanted Harvard to commit to raising the minority population to 10 percent of its staff.

N.C. Symphony Comes To UNCW

A musical salute to the Holidays will take place in Wilmington when The North Carolina Symphony comes for a pops concert on Tuesday, Dec. 6. The 8:00 p.m. concert will be at Kenan Auditorium at UNCW.

The full North Carolina Symphony will perform under the direction of Assistant Conductor Jackson Parkhurst. The concert is being sponsored by The New Hanover County Chapter of The North Carolina Symphony Society. Ms. Justine Lerch is president of the local Chapter that sells the tickets and raises the contributions necessary to bring The Symphony to the community.

The corporate sponsor for this concert is United Carolina Bank, with headquarters in Whiteville. Musical highlights of the program of Holiday favorites will be Mel Torme's "Christmas Roasting on an Open Fire," Piotr Ilyich Tchaikovsky's "Waltz of the Snowflakes" from The Nutcracker, Hershey Kay's "Deck the Halls with Boughs of Holly", Ralph Vaughan Williams' Fantasia on "Greensleeves" and a Christmas arrangement called "Christmas Fantasy".

Tickets at the door are $12 for adults, $10 for senior citizens and $3 for children (under 18).

Peter Stead To Lecture on Students

(UNCW NEWS)-- Peter Stead, Fulbright Scholar-in-Residence in the history department at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington and a visitor from Wales, will present a lecture entitled "The Student in Society: A Changing Relationship." The free lecture will be at 8 p.m., Thursday, Dec. 1, in Cameron Hall Auditorium. The public is invited.

The lecture is sponsored by the Honor Society Phi Kappa Phi and the UNCW Historical Society.

Stead To Lecture on Students

Stead was born and educated in Wales. Graduating with a first-class honors degree from University College Swansea in 1964, he was invited to join the history department there only two years later. He is now senior lecturer in history. He has been a Fulbright Fellow, Scholar-in-Residence, and Visiting Fellow at Wellesley College in Massachusetts. This year he is Fulbright Scholar-in-Residence at UNCW.

Most of Stead's published articles are in the area of labor history. More recently he has combined his interest in labor history and film to produce a film on The Great Depression. He has also organized international conferences on film and history.

Next year his book Film and the Working Class: The Feature Film in American and British Society will be published by Routledge & Kegan Paul. He has lectured at conferences and universities in France, Italy, Austria, West Germany, and East Germany. He has been a regular broadcaster for the BBC and a newspaper columnist.

Leadership Office Volunteer Program To Recruit Students

(UNCW NEWS)-- Many students, every chance they can get, make tracks back to the residence halls for a nap or to just get away from the academic setting of the classroom. Others spend hours chatting with friends in the Union or absorbed in the television. The point of concern is those "hours of free time" could make a difference in someone's life.

The Leadership Office-Volunteer Programs can assist those individuals who would like to spend their time more constructively. There are many agencies in Wilmington and surrounding areas eagerly awaiting those helping hands and friendly smiles.

What's Available? Counselors, Tutors, Big Buddies, Aquarius Assistant, Activity Assistant, Patient Helper, Office Assistant, Program

Aide, Classroom Aide, and many more! It only takes an hour of your time to give to those who are unable to give in return. Just receiving a warm feeling of gratitude is a lifetime gift. You can make a difference!

These are the following organizations that have initiated the first step by sponsoring a child and buying them winter clothing for Lumbee Regional Development Association Headstart Program...Alpha Delta Pi, Panhellenic Council, Tau Nu Pi, Alpha Xi Delta...THANKS!

If you would like to Volunteer, please come by the Leadership Office located in Room 212 University Union between the hours of 11:00 a.m. - 1:00 p.m. MWF and 2:00 p.m. - 3:00 p.m. TT.

SEEKING APPLICANTS FOR LEADERSHIP AMERICA

JUNE 9-AUGUST 17, 1989

Leadership America, the major national leadership development opportunity, is seeking applicants for its third session this summer. Students who will have completed their junior year by June 9, 1989, are eligible to apply.

50 outstanding men and women from campuses across the country will be invited to spend ten weeks strengthening their leadership skills. The objective of the program is to prepare you to accept leadership roles earlier in your careers and handle them more effectively.

Participants in each of the previous programs have been unanimous in their endorsement of them. You will find that the emphasis placed on global awareness and changes in technology invaluable in your development as a leader.

Leadership America includes one week in North Carolina, one week in the Rocky Mountains and three weeks in Dallas, Texas. It also includes a four-week internship in business, government or community service followed by a closing session in Washington, D.C.

For additional information, contact Cathy Birmingham in Room 212 of the Union, or call 395-3877. Applications must be in by Jan. 23.

FAMILY CIRCLE magazine and has published over 150 articles and 15 books on child development, with one book that has been translated into 16 different languages.

Dr. Brazelton graduated from Princeton University and Columbia University School of Medicine. After an internship at New York's Roosevelt Hospital, he moved to Boston and was a medical resident at Mass. General Hospital before undertaking pediatric training at Boston's Children's Hospital medical center. His interest in child development then led to training in child psychiatry. He later integrated his psychiatric training into private practice of primary care pediatrics, a practice he continues today.

As one of the foremost advocates of the family, Brazelton calls for aggressive legislation and stronger national policies to bolster family life. He has appeared many times before Congressional committees on behalf of bills addressing parental leave and is actively working with "The Alliance for Better Child Care" in Washington D.C., which is proposing new national daycare legislation.

Professor Doctor of Medicine Boris Luban-Plazza, world authority in psychosomatic medicine, was chosen for his involvement with the Balint Method of patient-centered humane medicine. This method involves the treatment of a patient "as a whole person, and to further doctor-patient relationship." He is the founder and leader of the International Balint Meetings which are held annually in Switzerland. Prize Director Dolores Kirk stated that, "Dr. Luban-Plazza demonstrates all three qualities of Dr. Schweitzer's expertise - music, medicine and humanities ... being both a singer and exceptional trumpet player."

Luban-Plazza completed his medical studies between 1942-1949 in Geneva, Basel, and Bern. He later joined the psychiatric department in Locarno-Orselina. Luban-Plazza is currently the president of the Commission on Health and the Family in Switzerland and president of the European Union for Social Medicine.

Beverly Sills, general director of the New York City Opera, was chosen not only for her operatic success, but for assisting young American singers to strive for their "full potential" and being a long time champion for the March of Dimes.

"Her dramatic skill, stage presence, musicality, impeccable vocal precision and incomparable interpretation of song combined with an endearing, upbeat personality to make her a popular as well as an artistic success," said Kirk.

Sills made her professional debut at the age of three on "Uncle Bob's Rainbow House," and as a youngster "Bubbles Silverman" was known across the nation as "the nightingale of the mountains" on Our Gal Sunday. She later studied with Estelle Liebling making her debut with the New York City Opera in 1954.

Sills is the mother of both an autistic son and a deaf daughter which did little, if any, to affect her personal fame. She has served as the National Chairman of the Mother's March on Birth Defects for the March of Dimes and has been an inspiration for parents of handicapped children nationwide.

All three prize recipients will be honored at 8 p.m., Wednesday, March 22, 1989 in Kenan Auditorium at UNCW. Student groups will have lunch with the recipients on the same day and will there will be a reception held afterward for those who attend the presentation. The presentation is free and open to the public.

Kuralt Comes Home to Wilmington

(SYMPHONY RELEASE) Opera House Theatre Company with the support of United Carolina Bank will present Charles Kuralt and The Loomis McGlohon Trio in the musical narration "North Carolina Is My Home" on December 2 in Kenan Auditorium at 9:00 PM.

In 1984, Kuralt, one of America's most respected newscasters and television hosts and a native of Wilmington, NC, and McGlohon, the state's best-known pianist-composer, decided to produce and record a phonograph album about North Carolina as a gift for the state's 400th anniversary. The album and the subsequent book have become bestsellers. Since 1986, a stage production has been performed across the United States, Canada, and Great Britain.

The Loomis McGlohon Trio along with singers Marlene Verplanck and Jim Campbell provide the music and Mr. Kuralt narrates.

"North Carolina Is My Home" features the warm, nostalgic narratives which have become a Kuralt trademark, and there are songs about North Carolina barbecue, old-time dinners on the grounds, strange names and places in the Tar Heel State, and the moving theme song, "North Carolina Is My Home". The production has been called a love song to the Old North State and both Kuralt and McGlohon agree that it has been a labor of love.

Tickets are on sale now at the Center Box Office, 118 Princess Street. For further information and reservations, call 763-3398 or 763-9328.

Opera House Theatre Company is proud to have the opportunity to present this very special event.

Festival of Trees

The Festival of Trees which opened last Saturday is a spectacular display of decorated Christmas trees. It is sponsored by the Lower Cape Fear Hospice. The trees will be on display at the Hilton until December fourth. Eloise Thomas, executive director of Hospice, said that the trees have been sold to many different businesses, including nursing homes and doctors' offices.

Proceeds from the sale of the trees benefits the Hospice Program. Admission is three dollars for adults and one dollar for children. There is continuous musical entertainment for those who attend the festival. Ms. Thomas commented that various groups such as school choirs, school orchestras, a church choir and the string quartet from North Brunswick High School are scheduled to perform. You shouldn't miss this!

Controversy

"It's an unfortunate fact of business that students have and will continue to pay for things that they will never reap the benefits from," says Jim Anderson.

Staff from the Office of Business Affairs and the Office of Student Affairs, that made up the planning committee for the recreational field, admit that the problem of previous on-campus residents attempting to use the facilities was never taken into account.

"It's a legitimate complaint. However, if you open the fields to all students, I think it's only fair that every student pay for the privilege to use it," says Charlie King, Assistant Vice Chancellor of Business Affairs.

Another immediate concern involves the use of the fields for intramural activities.

"The fields are not accessible for intramural groups because the members of these groups do not fall into any specific resident classification. We must abide by the terms of our policies. The intramural groups have their own designated fields for their activities, the Residence Life Recreational Field is for the use of the on-campus students. They paid for it, and I believe that theirs is the first priority," says Jim Anderson.

Matt Kirkby, an official of intramural sport activities sees the Residence Life Field as a prime opportunity to alleviate the shortage of activity space.

"I can't believe that the university won't allow the expansion of the fields and courts to accommodate the intramural groups. There is a definite problem with crowding. All you have to do is watch a intramural basketball game and you'll see the lack of space," says Kirkby.

The Residence Office has discussed the possibility of developing an intramural league among the residence halls.

"If we could organize a residential league, then I'm sure that we could work out somekind of tournament games between the intramural groups and the residence halls," claims Charlie Maimone, Associate Dean of Student/Residence Life.

It is important to note that the gazebo building itself is not restricted to on-campus residents only. Any established group or organization may use this facility.

"We foresaw the problem of the resident status situation last year when the SGA presented the $50,000 gift for the gazebo's construction. We made sure that the facility would be open to all students, because the money we donated came from student fees," says Karl Alston.

The members of the Residence Life Office realize that the policies involving the recreation facilities may seem exclusive, but they claim this is because the fields are new.

"Part of the policies regarding the Residence Life Recreational Field involve a term of evaluation. At the end of the year we will determine the student participation and the suggestions for improving the recreational facility. This is a new field and we are still in our testing stages. We do feel that the resident students should have the first access," says Charlie Maimone.

The issue of which students will be allowed the privilege of using these extensive facilities remains with the Office of Resident Life. It is important to understand the two faces of this controversy. Where it is a valuable and important resource for the on-campus students, it is also important to remember that the Residence Life Recreational Field is part of the university, and all the students whether living in Galloway Hall or across town are members of this academic community. The interrelations between all students is essential to promoting a healthy and happy lifestyle.

Holidays Need Generosity

Dear Editor,

Something for students to think about in the upcoming holiday season. One quarter of the families in this state live below the poverty level, there are 3 million homeless in the United States, thousands around the world die daily from malnutrition, and 600 families in this area will go without the traditional turkey dinner for Thanksgiving and Christmas holiday dinners surrounded by family and friends.

What can you and your group do to help? Several things. Organize a service project in your group to help these individuals, put together food baskets to donate to families, hold a can food drive to help out Mother Hubbard's cupboard, volunteer your time to the Salvation Army, Cape Fear Gospel rescue Mission, or the numerous soup kitchens in this town. These are just a few of the things you can do as a group or individually.

So I urge all of you to go out into the community and do what you can for the people who are less fortunate than we are. As you set down to your holiday feast and give thanks for the bountiful harvest before you, may you also bow your head and remember and pray for those who will have to do without.

Student
ForumStudents Dispute
Editor's Position

Editor:

We would like to dispute the editorial in the November 17th edition of The Seahawk. The editorial said that "the University is actively recruiting black students." It later questions how this can be true if "the University does not discriminate against applicants... based on race, color, national origin etc."

We feel that in order not to discriminate against applicants, the University should actively recruit black students. As we see it, the two statements complement each other: the university protects minority interest by actively recruiting minority students, which only strengthens the nondiscrimination policy. The majority interest is the one most often heard and acted upon, therefore if the minority interest is not also sought after and protected, then would the University be following in the spirit of its nondiscrimination policy? No, it would not.

The editorial says that "either academic standards are lowered to allow for minority enrollment or the school is actively having to...recruit minority students." We know that standards are not lowered for blacks, or blacks would not survive their course loads (actually more blacks are graduating than before). As for recruiting minorities, one must note that most everyone is recruited: professors, athletes, math geniuses, administrators and even whites at predominantly black universities.

So, blacks at this university do not "cut off those of other races." They add value to the community. For that reason, we have more than an "ACADEMIC INSTITUTION." We have a better educated one.

Admissions Clarifies Editorial

Dear Editor:

In response to your November 17 Seahawk editorial, "UNCW Admissions: Who Gets in, Who Doesn't", I would like to clarify UNCW recruitment/admission activities, and help answer the question.

Under the Federal Government Consent Decree agreement with the State of North Carolina, all historically primarily Black institutions in the University of North Carolina constituency are to make efforts to increase over-all Black minority enrollment on their campuses toward a goal of 15%.

All primarily White institutions in the University of North Carolina system are to make the same efforts to increase Black minority enrollment on their campuses to an over-all goal of 10%. Specific activities geared toward recruitment of all Black and White minority students are clearly spelled out in the Consent Decree, and all sixteen campuses are to show yearly documented evidence of having carried out these activities (i.e. high school visits, Minority Visitation Day programs, Minority Recruitment brochure mailings to N.C. Black and White PSAT and SAT test takers, etc.).

Minorities are defined in the Consent Decree as White students (male or female) for primarily Black institutions; Black students (male and female) for primarily White institutions.

The Office of Admissions at UNCW employs four full-time professional staff members, and six full-time support staff members, who devote twelve months a year to recruitment and admissions activities geared to encourage all interested and qualified students (male, female, young, old, black, white, indian, oriental, hispanic, etc.) to apply to the University.

All students who meet application deadlines and admission criteria are admitted, and are encouraged to enroll. All students who do not meet deadlines/admission requirements are denied, but are encouraged to pursue further educational opportunities with the possibility of future transfer to UNCW.

Ethnic categories are listed on each campus's application for reporting purposes to the Federal Government, and all such minority category numbers must be tabulated each year. Students are admitted or denied to UNCW on the basis of deadline dates and academic credentials, not on the basis of ethnic category, sex, age, or handicap.

In short, to answer your editorial headline question "Who gets in, who doesn't?" all academically qualified students who meet admission criteria, and application deadline dates, are admitted to UNCW. UNCW is proud of its rapid growth in numbers of all qualified admitted students; in the yearly increasing academic strength of all of these new students; and in the improving retention/graduation rates of all its enrollees.

All enrolled students at UNCW are here because they have shown, by past academic achievement, that they have earned their admission. They have demonstrated measurable potential for academic success at UNCW. You are one of these students, Ms. Editor, and thus should be proud of yourself, and proud of all of your fellow UNCW enrollees, without categorization. You were all recruited and admitted, and are now enrolled.

Diane M. Zeeman,
Director of Admissions

Faculty Defends Minority Admissions

Dear Editor:

Although the editorial in the November 17 Seahawk was careful not to accuse UNCW officials outright of engaging in reverse discrimination, it insinuates so in a manner no one could mistake. As an instructor at UNCW I would like to state strongly that, on the whole, the minority students I have had in my classes have been every bit the equals, and often the superiors, of most of my majority students (possibly an accolade that damns with faint praise). In other words, in proportion to their numbers, both groups stack up about the same in matters of academic preparation and work habits for their college experience.

Perhaps you ought to consider a more positive connotation of the word recruitment, as practiced by the Office of Minority Affairs. Have you not considered that the O.M.A. might actively seek to bring well qualified minority students here, where, obviously for good reason, they might be reluctant to pursue higher education because of such incidents of covert racism? Do you equally consider the recruitment of, say, soccer players to be an act that compromises the integrity of our standards? And are the administrative costs of athletic recruitment equally a questionable expenditure, as you imply is the case for the O.M.A.? (I am well aware, of course, of the growing perception that athletic recruitment as practiced across this nation amounts to exploitive racism of another sort.)

While it would be unfair of me to suggest that UNCW's entrance requirements amount to an open door policy (they do not), I have had enough majority students with sub-standard skills and preparation for college work that I am forced to conclude that any white student whose application is refused here had best look for some other point of blame than the recruitment practices of the Office of Minority Affairs.

Sincerely,
Kathleen Gould

You don't need your parents' money to buy a Macintosh.

It's never been difficult for students to convince their parents of the need for a Macintosh® computer at school.

Persuading them to write the check, however, is another thing altogether.

Which is why Apple created the Student Loan-to-Own Program. An ingenious loan program that makes buying a Macintosh as easy as using one.

Simply pick up an application at the location listed below, or call 800-831-LOAN. All your parents need to do is fill it out, sign it, and send it. If they qualify, they'll receive a check for you in just a few weeks.

There's no collateral. No need to prove financial hardship. No application fee.

Best of all, the loan payments can be spread over as many as 10 years.

Which gives you and your parents plenty of time to decide just who pays for it all.

Democrats Strip Gardner; Why?

The Democrats have stripped the Lt. Governor Elect, Jim Gardner, of his power to appoint committee chairmen. Great, just great! For the first time in a century the state has elected a Republican to the office of Lt. Governor and the Democrats have, I guess out of fear, decided that, "Hey we can't let this happen, let's make him a figure head instead." And so they did.

Mr. Gardner stated in The Raleigh News and Observer that, "I think the people elected Jim Gardner to be a full lieutenant governor, not to be stripped of his powers." I for one would have to agree with him. If the people wanted a Democrat in the office, then a Mr. Rand would be that Democrat and this issue would not be at stake. As it is not the case, Mr. Gardner will now serve one of the most powerless lieutenant governorships in the state's history.

It is interesting to note, however, that the state Constitution only gives the lieutenant governor the power to preside over the Senate and break tie votes. In the past the Democrats have held the senate and the lieutenant governor's post and have, therefore, given him the power to not only appoint committee chairmen, but also decide to which committee a bill will be sent.

The con is this: If the democrats were so scared of having a Republican hold the post of lieutenant governor, why then did they not tell the voters of the state that they would cut his powers? The answer is that the voters would have elected the democrats out of office. I'm not saying that the whole deal was pre-arranged, in fact I doubt it was. I am of the opinion that the Democrats just want to let the executive leadership of this state know who has the power. Now the Republicans, without a majority in the Senate, a powerless lieutenant governor and a governor without veto power will just get, to sit around and collect a salary for the next four years. It's sad to say it, but bi-partisan approaches to state problems is coming to standstill.

Mr. Gardner had proposed to give one-third of the chairmanships to Republicans, who now hold 26% of the Senate membership. This was not taken with any note of compromise by the cold hands of the left though.

The Senator's chief spokesman Sen. Henson P. Barnes from Wayne county was in true form, however, when he said that they, the Democrats, were unlikely to cede chairmanships to a political adversary. None, nada, zero, such generosity was quite a gesture from Mr. Barnes.

If my understanding of politics is right, I'm not sure anyone's is, including mine though, if a committee is comprised of the majority party and is led by a minority chairman, does not then that mean that the majority party still controls the voting of the committee? In essence, the Democrats would still control the committees, regardless of who chaired them.

One aspect of this move is very clear, amidst the fog, that being that this decision by the Democrats will definitely haunt them in the '92 elections. By limiting Mr. Gardner's power, they are also limiting him from making any big mistakes. If he decides to run again, he will most likely use this selfish move by the Democrats as a major campaign issue and have an unscathed record. Bi-partisan approach, hah! I didn't vote straight ticket this election, but if such moves are to be exemplary of Democratic tendencies in the future, I will next time for positions of state and local importance and it won't be for the Democrats.

It's Time to Be Scared About AIDS

When will college students realize that everything does not just happen to the other guy?

There has been an AIDS study started by the Centers for Disease Control, and their preliminary finding is that possibly three in every 1000 college students may be infected with AIDS. Although the CDC admits that those numbers are very preliminary, if they even hold one quarter true, there could be 6 or 8 AIDS cases at UNCW. That may not sound like much to worry about, but the concern lies in who has the disease. It's time to start being scared, for fear brings caution.

The scary fact is that most of are educated on the subject of AIDS, yet our knowledge takes a back seat to our passions in the heat of the moment. Facts are facts and in that "heated moment" you may have made a decision that will kill you!

Another warning, if you have had or have any form of sexually transmitted disease, please get tested for AIDS, because you are in a high risk group.

Colleges are well known to be tremendous breeding grounds for any type of communicable disease -- it seems in college we grow into whatever morality we will have, but don't necessarily arrive with it. Wisen up people, AIDS kills and doesn't discriminate who it afflicts.

Today's college students need to recognize their mortality, their vulnerability and look at what they want their futures to hold. If you want to have children, a family, a normal home or to have a life at all, remember that all you do will follow you.

What goes around comes around ... AIDS is probably here at UNCW, and only time will tell how many students made a mistake here that will cost them their lives.

More Financial Aid than You Realize

American students, here at UNCW and every other school take too much for granted. Nothing worth having in life comes easily!

So many students feel that the government should give them money for school and are truly angry when any kind of aid cuts are made. What they need to realize is that it doesn't matter whether the government cuts financial aid in order to increase military spending, no one owes a college age person anything! (And at least military spending benefits us all in one way or another -- protects all ages and classes of Americans.)

Many people refute this by saying that this keeps more impoverished, less fortunate people from going to college, but that's not true either. If anyone truly burns for an education, the means are there. Maybe it means focusing on your goals sooner in your life, like examining your desires for after high school while you are a freshman or sophomore and working for the grades which will earn you scholarships. Or, if your parents won't support you through college, demand that they don't declare you on their income tax and apply for financial aid on your own. There are millions of dollars in aid which remain unclaimed every year.

And anyone who has ever applied for financial aid knows how difficult it is for anyone with any kind of financial support to get it. This is protection for those without the means to go to school, those less fortunate.

If you need financial aid, or if you are angry because the conservatives have cut education spending, remember that people will only value what has been most difficult to achieve down the road, and that if you want financial aid, get your taxes done early and go by the Office of Financial Aid to get your forms. It's too easy to make excuses for lack of motivation.

Feeling Like A Skipping Stone

So much of our life seems to be lived on the surface. Our busy schedules leave us, so often, feeling like a flat stone skipping across the waters. At the end of all the skips, we sink down into stillness but only out of exhaustion. And here we are, once more entering into the hustle and bustle of December with its final exams and Christmas preparations.

At the same time all of us want to live our life in such a way that it has moments filled with the sense of meaning and significance and joy. All that we are doing, we tell ourselves, is leading to a time when we can have such experiences somewhere out there in the midst of the future.

And so we work, with long lists, with much haste and frustration, never seeming to get to that point where there is time or space to feel deeply. Our lives are rushed, overfull and, often, shallow.

My belief is that unless we find ways and time to plumb the depths of ourselves, our relationships, and the world in which we live in the midst of all our business, we will find ourselves always feeling like skipping stone. Henri Nouwen, during his six month stay in a Trappist monastery, comments: "maybe I have been living much too fast, too restlessly, too feverishly, forgetting to pay attention to what is happening here and now, right under my nose. Just as a whole world of beauty can be discovered in one flower, so the great grace of God can be tasted in one small moment."

But we have to find the stillness, to create moments where our consciousness can become centered in the deeper dimension. It takes a certain stillness within to appreciate the everyday, the joy of a relationship, or the wonder of simply being alive and often filled with laughter in a world that seems so threatened.

Fredrich Buechner in trying to find, in a few words, the essence of everything he's trying to say as a novelist and a preacher comments: "listen to your life. See if for the fathomless mystery that it is. In the boredom and the pain of it no less than in the excitement and gladness: touch, taste, smell your way to the holy and hidden heart of it because in the last analysis all moment are key moments, life itself is grace."

Let these words settle into your heart of hearts and carry them into the days and weeks of pressure and planning and list making that lie before you. Choose to make space to plumb the depths of whoever and where ever you are. I hope you will not let the pressure and activities of the exam Christmas season keep you from all the rich things and joy that can be found right here and right now.

Driving Amongst "Idiots And Maniacs"

What do most of us do daily that drives us crazy, alters our personalities, raises our blood pressure, but that we would never consider giving up? No, it's not drugs. I'm talking about driving!

You know as well as I do that most of the people behind the wheel don't have all their cookies in their cookie jars. It's quite frightening when you think about it. They actually have a license to drive a multi-tonned vehicle which can kill or maim, or both.

Of course, I'm not one of these persons: I consider myself a cautious driver--I've got to be if I ever want to see the beautiful, glistening goldness of a cold draft beer again. What's that song? In heaven they have no beer etc. It's obvious that most drivers don't care if they ever see a beer again; they drive as if they have a death wish. It amazes me to see a car weaving in and out of traffic just to get a few feet ahead of the other person.

You've seen the road hogs. (It could be you) They just have to get everywhere quickly. Their lives are so important that they can't waste a second out on the road. The silly part is that their driving habits don't really make much difference in the long run. I'll see a car darting all over the road like a bat out of hell, only to see him or her beside me at a light, a mile after they blew by me. I feel like shaking my finger at them and saying in my best Gomer Pyle voice, "See, haste makes waste." But I don't want them to think that I'm as loony as them. (I'm not.)

How many times have you seen one of these fools driving like Ricochet Rabbit, then you see them pull into K-Mart? Their lives are so important. I bet if you were crazy enough to follow them in the store, they'd be searching intently through the dollar album bin and delighting over a Jermaine Jackson album.

I have a friend who drives that way. He goes crazy cursing at everyone about how slowly they drive. You know the name-calling involved with drivers--incompetent fellows or questioning a persons legitimacy in their family tree. I know that his blood pressure must shoot up to 200 over 100 every time he drives. One time I finally had to let him know of his shortcomings as a driver. I informed him that we were only going to Pizza Hut and weren't dying of starvation. He replied, "Yes, but these stupid 'rectums' drive so damn slow."

My friend is usually pretty mellow. Isn't it amazing how driving can alter personalities? We become so brave about mouthing off and start acting as though the other drivers can hear us. We are never as brave as when we are safely locked in our cars.

George Carlin once said that there are two kinds of "other" drivers--Idiots and Maniacs! An idiot drives too slowly and a maniac drives too fast.

You know that terrible insults and slurs come from your vocal tract when you drive. Admit it. You can't help it; it's sort of like being possessed. You yell things like, "Go ahead, make my day, Butthole." Or, "Look at this old fart going 50 MPH in a 55 zone." How about, "How dare you pass me you son of a liberal! I'll catch you--you incestuous fellow." And the all time favorite, "Get off my ass bone breath; I should slam on my brakes, that'll teach you. Why I oughta..."

After all your verbal threats, you look beside you at a light and the perpetrator is sitting there, drooling. You quickly look the other way.

How about if you "accidentally" cut someone off or nearly rear-end (what a term) someone because you were staring at someone else's rear end. You know that at the next light, you'll be right next to the cuttee. They'll be giving you the evil eye and the Mojo curse, but you won't look. You'll stare straight ahead and the light will remain red for fifty-four minutes, while you're sweating pines.

To make up for cutting people off occasionally, I'll occasionally get generous and allow some poor soul to pull in front of me. I'll wait for the obligatory nod and wave, and then I'll gloat over my human kindness. But if they don't acknowledge my great human kindness--I'll remind them of their extraordinarily ugly looks and wish them a life of total hell.

Once we get out of our cars--we become our docile selves again. We can see that the world is full of many different characters and we can accept the poor drivers. After all, what are our choices? We could walk or take a bus. Have you ever gotten a load of some people who ride a bus? Riding a bike is out of the question for me, in this town at least. I'd still have the maniacs and idiots, but I'd be unarmed. Then I'd really be at the mercy of those lunatics.

Howard, Bender Lead Hawks Past OU

BY CHRIS WRIGHT
SPORTS EDITOR

Despite suffering a relatively inactive offensive output, Larry Houzer still managed to mark his inspirational return by assisting UNCW to a storied, come-from-behind victory over visiting Ohio University Tuesday night in Trask Coliseum.

The Seahawks 75-68 home opening win over the Bobcats was solidified by Houzer's blocked shot and assist to a fleeing Antonio Howard that turned a possible one point lead into a five point cushion. The Hawks were leading 65-62 with just under three minutes to play when Houzer rejected Bobcat forward Paul "Snoopy" Graham's ten-footer, and retrieved it in time to feed Howard for the lay-in.

"I couldn't be happier," said the jubilant McPherson. "We beat a very fine, very physical team tonight. Larry's blocked shot and the lay-up was the turning point."

While Houzer struggled through a 2-8 night, the Hawk's looked again to Howard for explosive offense. He provided it, scoring a game-high 22, including six straight during the deciding stretch run.

"Antonio hit the big shots," said forward Greg Bender, "and the crowd kept us in it. You never like to lose in front of your home crowd."

Bender's superlative defensive play, holding down the Bobcats most lethal shooter to a mere four points, was overshadowed by his 18 points and game high 10 rebounds.

"Jameson's a great player," the 6-6 Ohio native said. "He picked up some early fouls and then began to press. I played him defensively the way I would play myself. We are similar players."

The Hawks trailed Ohio 35-32 at the end of the first half, but quickly narrowed the gap to one on a ferocious breakaway dunk by Bender that rose the 3400 supporters out of their seat.

The lead exchanged hands nine times in the second half alone, before the Hawks began a 5-0 run that was ended on Howard's swipe and lay-in of a crossover pass that pushed the lead to 65-60.

"That put us ahead by five and because so many of their key players had fouled out, they did not know who to go to," Howard said.

McPherson was pleased with the victory over the MAC's pre-season number one squad. "We came out and played with confidence and poise down the stretch, and the defense was excellent," he said.

The defensive surge was led by Bender who held fellow Ohio native and past foe Dave Jameson to a season-low four points. UNCW's extended zone and pressure man-to-man forced the 'Cats into a sub 50 percent shooting effort from the field.

Ohio's head coach credited the defense and lack of rebounding in accounting for the Bobcat's first loss of the season. "Any time you lose, you look in two categories, turnovers and rebounds," said Bill Hahn, "and we came up short in both. UNCW has a fine team and will only get better. We had our chances."

Houzer, the 6-8 center who entered his senior season plagued by an off-season knee injury, grabbed seven rebounds and scored six points in 18 minutes.

"I got fatigued, but my legs feel good; like nothing ever happened," Houzer said.

Houzer received a raucous standing ovation upon entering the game, and though his offense was erratic, his presence was felt.

"Anytime Larry is in the game they have to respect his ability to score," McPherson said. "All that does is free up Antonio and Greg on the outside for open jump shots."

The Hawks jumped to an early lead, 12-6, on two straight baskets by Bender and a driving lay-up by Howard with 15:20 remaining in the opening half. Ohio enjoyed their largest lead, 34-28 with a thunderous dunk by the newest round mound of rebound, 6-10 278 pound center John Beauford.

Howard, who scored a game high 25 points in Saturdays loss at Georgia Southern, again tallied a team high 22 points. Bender followed with 18. No other Seahawk reached double figures.

Graham led the Bobcats with 22 points, but was limited to just eight in the second half and none in the final four minutes.

The 1-1 Hawks travel to Boston College Saturday before returning home December 7, to face Old Dominion.

Mid-Atlantic Wrestling vs. Comet Toilet Bowl- The Choice is yours

We are about to embark on the most boring, top-sided, and uninteresting of all the sports seasons as the annual barrage of pre-season holiday tournaments played in the name of recruiting enhancement are once more prepared to begin. The primary culprit of this entrepreneur's fantasy is college basketball, which habitually pairs the affluent with the inept.

Remember Chaminade? They are the tiny Hawaiians who epically slayed the not-so-Cavalierish Virginia squad of years past, sparking a renewed interest in these baffling pairings.

This year, thanks to ESPN, I witnessed no less than four games, sponsored by multi-million dollar corporations, which incidentally, pay megabucks to these all too eager powerhouses in exchange for name recognition and ticket sales, that were decided by a margin of 25 or greater. I can only speak for myself, but any contest which is decided by more than three touchdowns is no contest at all. Whatever happened to cruel and inhumane punishment? Is Mike Dukakis secretly moonlighting as the commissioner of this preposterous setup? I realize he enjoys getting his clock cleaned as much as the next demagogue, but enough is enough.

Granted, the quality of play in a select few of the tournaments is improving, as in the case of the pre-season NIT which perennially chooses presumably top twenty squads that serve to simulate post season aroma and excitement.

This years tournament was a credit to the selection committee. America witnessed the inaugural debut of the highly publicized Billy Owens, a magician of sorts, and master of courts, who helped propel Syracuse to the title. However, even this tournament, despite the exciting encounter between the Orangemen and Missouri, could not escape the impending blowouts given to Indiana.

The idea of playing preparatory tournaments is theoretically sound. Everyone will indeed benefit from the experience of playing against a Syracuse or North Carolina (who incidentally is in serious trouble should Reid's foot not fully recover), but at what emotional cost?

I suppose the real inquiry I am hinting at is whether you prefer to prescribe to the Louisville theory of pre-season scheduling which dictates that any team headed for the NCAA's must be played in December or the N.C. State device of assuring a national invitation-paying schools who ordinarily are too poor to afford uniforms to some into your home court whereby they are treated to the beating of their life.

As earlier stated, basketball is not the only culprit, there is also the useless bowl system that determines the mystical national football champion.

These fiascos often result in some of television's more memorable flops. I can barely keep calm pondering the outcome of the Rose Bowl. Will this be the year that the highly favored little ten finally beats the PAC ten host. I doubt it. The last time the big ten won the rose bowl, we were under the Carter Administration, who incidentally was also a democrat.

So as the Christmas season wears on, so to will the games.

Either way, I've learned my lesson. I will heretofore forbid any further compelling notion to watch these merciless crucifixions, and rather spend my time watching something where the outcome is gloriously suspenseful, and the action is real-televized wrestling.

Coaching the fundamentals

Knicks Look to Conquer Aging Celtics

ALLEN BEASLEY
STAFF WRITER

Eastern Conference Atlantic Division

The BOSTON CELTICS have the NBA's best starting five, but a loss to Detroit in the conference finals showed what effect age can have on even the best team. Larry Bird and the other starters need more help off the bench than Jim Paxson, who is over 30 himself. No help seems to be forthcoming, but rookie Brian Shaw of Cal-Santa Barbara could help down the road as new coach Jimmy Rogers will stress more playing time for the younger players in order to give the starters a rest.

The NEW YORK KNICKS are the most improved team in the division. Coach Rick Pitino's pressure defenses gave teams trouble last year and will turn it up another notch in 1988-89. In center Patrick Ewing, point guard Mark Jackson, and forward Charles Oakley (acquired in a trade with Chicago), New York has three excellent young players to build a team around. Top-draft pick Rod Strickland from DePaul will only increase the depth on an already deep team. A good power forward is all they need to seriously challenge Boston's supremacy in the division.

The WASHINGTON BULLETS should finish third. After a disastrous 8-17 start under coach Kevin Loughery, they rebounded with a solid 30-25 finish under former Bullet leg end Wes Unseld. The Bullets have good players in shooting guard Jeff Malone, small forward Bernard King, and power forward John Williams, but the loss of center Moses Malone to Atlanta and no effective point guard will make them a third place team at best. Rookie forward Harvey Grant of Oklahoma will be able to help right away.

The PHILADELPHIA 76E are a hard team to figure. They rallied from 30 points down to win at Boston last year, then let a poor Golden State team turn the trick on them at home. While any team with Charles Barkley, Maurice Cheeks, and Andrew Toney is dangerous, there are just too many inexperienced players for a major move to contender status. Rookie Hersey Hawkins of Bradley can score in bunches and will help right away. Everett Stephens of Purdue is a question mark.

Just a few years ago, the NEW JERSEY NETS were the "team of the future". Now, they're just an afterthought. Drug problems and poor drafts stopped them more than other opponents did. A pity, for dependable forward Buck Williams deserves better. After him, everything else is a blur. Youngsters Dennis Hopson and Jerry Bagley played well at times, but were very inconsistent on the whole.

Our own CHARLOTTE HORNETS will certainly finish last, but there is plenty of talent. Dell Curry, Kelly Tripucka, and Robert Reid can all shoot the ball well, while big Dave Hopper and former L.A. Laker Kurt Rambis will pound the boards for Coach Dick Harter's team. Rookies Rex Chapman of Kentucky and Tom Tolbert of Arizona are certain to see lots of playing time.

Second Half Nightmare Stops Hawks in Exhibition

BY CHRIS WRIGHT
Sports Editor

For twenty minutes, UNCW's men's basketball squad looked capable of reaching its high billing in the CAA conference. And for the last twenty minutes, unbelievably, the same team looked incapable of beating a team from another country.

UNCW squared off against a Brazilian squad that was minus all star Oscar Schmidt, but still had enough fire power and defensive pressure to escape Trask Coliseum with a sloppy 74-55 verdict before a sparse crowd that showed up to see the Hawks first pre-season exhibition game.

UNCW began swiftly, as Brannon Lancaster and Greg Bender connected often from three point range in staking the Hawks to a 40-35 halftime lead. Bender contributed heavily, scoring 15 of his 17 points in the opening period.

The second began quite differently, however, as the Brazilians employed a box-and-one defense designed specifically to stop Bender. It worked marvelously. The 6-6 senior was limited to only two free throws in the final period.

It did not begin and end with Bender, though. In twenty minutes the Hawks managed only five field goals and 15 total points, less than a point per minute ratio, while allowing Brazil to continue in its offensive execution, scoring twice as often as the inept UNCW team.

"They threw some things at us that we were not expecting," head coach Robert McPherson said afterwards. "We need to learn from our mistakes in time for next week's game. Obviously, we can't win when we score only five field goals. They ran a box on Greg and we just were not prepared."

As poor as the offense was, the defense and rebounding were not far behind. Admittedly, the absence of 6-8 All-CAA performer Larry Houzer, who is recovering from a knee surgery, hindered the Hawks and forced several players to see extended playing time.

"We lost our intensity on defense," McPherson conceded, "but we can't blame that on Larry's loss. We need to be prepared in case Larry can't come back."

The older Brazilians took advantage of UNCW's inexperience in the second half, and displayed the maturity needed to win games on the road.

"We are a very young team," McPherson said, "and tonight it showed. The substitutes we brought in during the second half didn't make things happen like the first half. We lacked that killer instinct."

Bender was the only Seahawk to reach double figures, scoring 17. Sophomore Scott Tierney added nine points.

UNCW awaits its season opener at Georgia Southern, Saturday, in Statesboro, and it is doubtful that Houzer will be available for action.

Hawks Swim to Holiday Victories

BY PATRICK FOWLER
SEAHAWK SPORTS WRITER

Watch out world, the Seahawk swimmers are moving toward light speed with via the Ohio connection. The men's team posted victories over William and Mary (132-111) and American Universities (52-52) before falling to Richmond (52-61) on the final relay race. The women fare a little worse by defeating American (57-55) before succumbing to William and Mary (97-125) and Richmond (52-61) in which they too were robbed of a victory on the final relay race of the day.

The men's team was led by surprising freshman Brad Kinkema who collected five first place finishes in three meets and broke the freshman time mark in the 200 Breaststroke with a time of 2:14:82. Brad's great feats in the waterways helped up the men's record to an impressive 3-1 standing and earned him Seahawk-of-the-Week honors from coach Dave Allen. "The men really swam well and are at the level of excellence I had hoped for at this point at the season. However, we still need work on our sprinter at the 100 and 50 meter level. We are losing a lot of points there as well as points in the relay department. This deficiency prevented us from taking the match against Richmond," said Head Coach Allen. "We need to lower our times more as a team and continued to work together," he added later.

The women's team performance this weekend can be described best by the name of Laurie Grant. This freshman mermaid of the pool sent major league wakes in route in set not one nor two, but three air or should I say water shattering freshman records. "I was very shocked that I did that well and wasn't fully aware of my accomplishments until the announcer said it over the P.A. system," said a beaming Grant. This lady is just as fast on her backside as her front by breaking timing marks in both categories. The 100 backstroke bears the incredible time of 1:02:8, the 50 free rounds out at 25:82, and the 100 Freestyle nets her a mark 55.5. Boy, can they girl flat move out in the water. We'd better check her for fins and gills marks. "The women did an excellent job against their opponents considering their shortage of bodies. They posted their first win ever in the CAA conference by defeating American and stayed surprisingly close to Richmond. I had hoped they would be 2-2 or 3-1 at this point, but everyone is working hard and that's really what's important," said a pleased Allen.

The Seahawks will have their work cut out for them when they take on powerful Duke University on their home turf, just one day after battling University of Charleston. You can see this meet live at the Seahawk Natatorium on Saturday at two o'clock sharp. Coach Allen predicts a victory for the Hawks so you're bound to be in for a good time. So grab a friend and head down the pool area but be prepared to whoop it up Seahawk's style, as our swimmers try for new records and victories. Tell them Patrick send ya!

Student Telephone Directories for the 88-89 school year are still available in the University Union Information Center. There are still multitudes of them left and they are free.

Kenan Events

Upcoming events in Kenan Auditorium include: Emsley Laney High School Concert/Symphonic and Stage Bands tonight at 8, $2; the department of creative arts Student Honors Recital at 8PM, December 9, free; NHHS Orchestra December 12 at 8PM $1; NHHS Band December 13 at 8PM and the Hoggard High School Symphonic Bands December 15 at 8PM.

Library Hours Change

Randall Library will be open until midnight on Reading Day, December 10.

Orientation Sessions Announced

Summer Orientation '89 will be held on the following days:

SESSION I - Sunday, June 11 - Monday, June 12

SESSION II - Wednesday, June 14 - Thursday, June 15

SESSION III - Sunday, June 18 - Monday, June 19

Orientation inquiries should be directed to Dr. Mullendore at 3089.

UNCW Ceramics Sale

The UNCW ceramics class will conduct a ceramics show and sale of students' works at the UNCW campus in Kenan Hall on December the 8th and 9th, from 9:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. We invite the public to view the works on display. All proceeds from the sale will benefit the ceramics art program.

This just may be the place to find that one of a kind christmas gift for that special person on your shopping list. Come early to make sure you don't miss the great bargains. Even if you're not searching for a special gift, we still hope you will come out and enjoy the show.

UNCW Jazz Ensembles Presents "Holiday Showcase"

The UNCW Jazz Ensembles, directed by Frank Bongiorno, assistant professor of music, will present "Holiday Showcase" December 7 at 8 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. The second half of the concert will feature the following music faculty members: Frank Bongiorno, saxophonist; Charles Dungle, Jr., bass instructor; Jack Bircher, percussion instructor; Harry McLamb, trumpet instructor; Victoria Schoack, flute instructor, and Howard Lamb, trombonist. $4.

Campus Christmas Communion

The United Christian Campus Ministry invites employees and their families to attend a Campus-Wide Candlelight Christmas Communion Service December 8 at 11 p.m. at St. Matthew's Lutheran Church across the street from Trask. The service will be led by Bob Haywood, Father Al Dash and Pastor Harold McSwain. Music will be provided by the UNCW Chamber Singers.

Exchange Program Offers Belgium Trip

Citizens for Understanding, an international exchange program, is accepting applications from Wilmingtonians who would like to participate in a two week exchange to Leuven, Belgium, for next summer. The forty individuals selected will leave for Belgium June 29. During the first week participants will live with a host family; the second week they may travel independently or stay with another host family. Call 458-7062 for information.

Help Needed in Search for Documents

It appears as though a purported UNCW student may have inadvertently removed documents recently from the New Hanover Humane Society while conducting research on Animal Cruelty. Faculty members who might have information that would assist in the return of these materials are asked to call Mrs. Raynor at 763-6692 between 10AM or after 3PM at 762-0871.

UNCW Traffic Changes Eminent

BY CELESTE E. BULLEY
EDITOR IN CHIEF

University members should be ready for a change in traffic patterns when they return from Christmas, as the University is closing the section of Riegel Road between the tennis courts and the Nadatorium.

As commuters may have noticed, the North Carolina Department of Transportation (DOT) has installed a new traffic light at the intersection of South College Road and Adrian Hurst drive, next to Seahawk Square. According to Vice Chancellor of Business Affairs R.O. Walton, "We have been asking for a signal at the southernmost entrance to the college for over a year now."

Currently, there are three main entrances to UNCW from South College Road. "When that light is fully activated, Adrian Hurst Drive will become the primary southern entrance to the University," stated Walton.

"We will not be tearing up the section of Riegel between the tennis courts and the Nadatorium, there are gates in place at both ends of that road," he said.

"The DOT should be turning that light on next Tuesday; on that day the gates will be closed."

Access to Parking Lot K will be maintained through use of the entrance on Street B, and the entrances for Lot A will continue to be on Riegel and Street B.

"The decision to close that section of Riegel was made several months ago, because we have had a continual problem with that area," Walton commented. He indicated that the problem lies in the amount of pedestrian traffic in the area. "It's been a trouble spot for years," he said.

The gates will be opened for large events where they anticipate heavy traffic on campus, such as basketball games, but Walton did not anticipate the section or road being used for any other purpose.

The Business Affairs Office does not expect a problem with the flow of traffic from College Road onto the campus. "The DOT is currently synchronizing all the lights in Wilmington," Walton said. "We don't anticipate a problem, but feel sure that if there was one, the DOT would take care of it."

Rumors Confirmed

AIDS Strikes Our University

BY RICK HEYMANN
NEWS EDITOR

After two years of rumors, it has been confirmed: UNCW has several cases of HIV infection, the virus which leads to the development of AIDS.

Dr. Kathleen Jewell, Director of the Student Health and Wellness Center, confirmed the rumor that UNCW is the host to a few students who have tested positive for AIDS.

Jewell would not comment on how many students have the HIV virus, as UNCW policy at this time prevents disclosure of information concerning AIDS cases here.

The contraction of the HIV virus does not necessarily mean that a person will develop AIDS. Since the average incubation period for the virus is approximately 7 years, the average college student would have had to contract the disease when he or she was about 14 years old.

Jewell commented that "not many people in between the ages of 18 and 25 years old have full-blown AIDS [at this time] because of the lengthy incubation period."

The number of those infected on this campus is known only to Dr. Jewell, but Reggie Townsend, Public Health Investigator for the New Hanover County Health Department stated that there are 17 documented cases of AIDS in this county. This number does not measure the number of those infected with the HIV virus, only those proven to have AIDS.

It is speculated that many more than 17 people have the HIV virus, but simply are not aware of it. Furthermore, it is impossible to know for sure how many have the virus, because it is not possible to test everyone for it.

In North Carolina, there were 655 documented cases of AIDS as of October 31, 1988. New Hanover county runs slightly above average when compared to the other counties in numbers of cases. Mecklenburg county has the most cases with 103, while many counties only have 1.

Judy Owen of the AIDS Control Program said, "for every 1 positive test, there are between 30-50 people who would test positive for the HIV virus." This would mean that there are 19,650 to 32,750 people infected with HIV in North Carolina.

North Carolina is not to be considered "AIDS infested" by any means. North Carolina ranks only 21st in the nation with respect to the number of AIDS cases, with New York and California being first and second, respectively.

It is important to note that the Health Department has found that 90% (587 cases) of those who have AIDS in N.C. are male, while only 10% (68 cases) are female. The reason for this vast differentiation between the sexes is currently unknown.

The only possible reason the Health Department has to offer is the fact that 59% of those who have AIDS in N.C. are homosexual men, which helps makes up for the difference between the two statistics.

Sorority Joins Nationals

After the presentations and several discussions amongst the members of the sorority it was overwhelmingly decided to start an Alpha Phi chapter.

On Saturday, December 3, the Greek community added another national organization to its entourage. That group was the former local sorority Gamma Delta Chi, now known as the pledging Alpha Phi (pronounced "fee").

The group was officially registered as an organization in the spring of 1988 and was advised by Pat Leonard, Dean Of Students, who helped guide them in their quest to become part of a national organization.

According to the sorority's Vice President, Francine Mitchell, their goal was "to become nationally affiliated from the beginning."

Over the summer Gamma Delta Chi sent letters to ten different national sororities requesting information about starting a chapter at UNCW. Of those ten, eight responded and three actually came to UNCW to give presentations on starting a chapter here.

Ivy Leagues Try Keeping Asians Out

(CPS) -- Some of the best schools in the country may be trying to keep Asian-American students off their campuses, the U.S. Department of Education said Nov. 22.

"We have gotten indications there may indeed be a quota system being used" at Harvard University and the University of California at Los Angeles, said Gary L. Curran of the Education Dept., which is now investigating the "indications."

Various Asian-American groups, however, have charged certain selective schools of conspiring against them for years, hoping to keep the students -- often viewed as high achievers -- from taking over their campuses.

"I believe there have been efforts to suppress what should have been the natural growth in the number and percent of Asian-Americans who would have been enrolled at UCLA and (The University of California at) Berkeley," asserted Henry Der of the San Francisco-based Chinese for Affirmative Action.

It may be happening elsewhere, too. Federal investigators are probing alleged quotas at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh and Evergreen Valley College in San Jose.

If the investigators determine the schools have been using quotas, which are illegal, they could be cut off from federal funds, Curran explained.

Even if they don't, Asian-American students often profess feeling unwelcome at their colleges.

"When you admit more Asian-Americans, other groups are pushed out," said Hei-Wai Chan, a Ph.D. candidate at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Since many schools set goals for how many black and Hispanic students they want to recruit, Asian-American students feel they are admitted instead of white students, Chan added. "That creates a certain amount of tension."

Linda Asato, a former undergrad at Berkeley who is now a grad student at Columbia University in New York, also remembered feeling "guilty for being Asian. You feel guilty that you pushed someone else out."

Administrators feed the feeling, if only subconsciously, argued Prof. Meyer Weinberg of the University of Massachusetts, who studies campus race relations nationwide.

"If you look at the role of Ivys and other prestigious colleges," he said, "it goes beyond education. Part of their role is to preserve a certain group of people."

Schools that owe part of their success to serving an upperclass, white elite, he maintained, would feel their status threatened by

Cadets Prepare For Advanced Camp

SUBMITTED BY
TERRANCE CARTER

The department of military science recently completed their fall FTX (Field Training Exercise) at Camp Butler, in Durham N.C. The FTX lasted over 2 days with extensive training in military skills such as mechanical zero with the M16-A1 rifle, land navigation course, night patrolling and proper procedure on PRC 77 (radio).

Each cadet was given a leadership position and assigned a mission in order to evaluate the cadets ability to make timely decisions in stressful situations.

Twenty-five cadets were broken down into six squads. The six squads were assigned a task officer who were in the MS-4 class. These officers were under the guidance of Senior TacOfficer Cadet Major Sam Macadoo. The tac officers evaluated their squads on the sixteen leadership dimensions. The cadets had a chance to incorporate skills learned at the previous FTX held on 29 Sept. 88. The MS-3's got a feel for living outside and learning the essence of field training and tactical maneuvers to better prepare the MS-3's for 6 challenging weeks of Advance Camp coming up next summer. Extensive planning resulted in an excellent FTX.

Military Car Wash A Success

The Military Science department held a car wash behind Swensons on 19 Nov. 88. It was held from 10:30 a.m.-3:00 p.m. The project was extremely successful, and funds raised will go towards the military ball to be held. The MS-4 class appreciates all effort and support provided and would like to thank everyone who participated.

Ski At Wintergreen

The 4th Annual Ski Trip to Wintergreen, Virginia, sponsored by the Wrightsville Beach Parks & Recreation Department is taking shape. Registration will begin on Monday, December 5, for the three-day, three-night trip. There is room for only 44 people, so if you register early, you can guarantee a space and save money too! The fee for early registrants is $245 if you furnish your own equipment.

If you need rental equipment the early registration fee is $300 which includes one free lesson.

Early registration will be open for one week only. Later registrants must pay $260 and $315, respectively. The fee includes slopeside lodging featuring 2 bedroom/2 bath condominium, lift tickets and transportation.

Skiers will depart Wrightsville Beach at 9 AM, February 12, and return at 11PM, February 15. A deposit of $125 is required and this includes a commemorative sweatshirt. For further information, call the Wrightsville Beach Parks and Recreation Department at 256-4744.

Gary Eckhart Displays Drama Sets

SUBMITTED BY UNCW DRAMA DEPARTMENT

An exhibit of theatrical set design renderings and models is on display through January 13, 1988, in the lobby of Kenan Hall on the campus of UNCW. The exhibit features the work of Gary C. Eckhart, head of the Theatre Design Technical Production program at the State University of New York, College at Fredonia and resident designer for the Tri-Cities Opera, Binghamton, New York.

He received his Master of Fine Arts degree from the Yale School of Drama. In his final year of study at Yale he was a design assistant to Donald Oenslager, one of the first to teach scene design on the collegiate level in the United States.

Mr. Eckhart is a member of the United Scenic Artists, New York local #829. United Artists is a union which carefully screens its applicants through a series of tests which require the designer to perform all aspects of his art under unusual time limitations. Once in the union, the artist is permitted to free-lance design in theatres nationwide that are permitted to accept only union designers.

Mr. Eckhart's design experience includes sets, lights and/or costumes for more than 100 productions of drama, musicals, opera and dance. These include designs for: Gingerbread Productions/Columbia Artists The Gin Game and Sugar Babies national tour, the Champlain Shakespeare Festival (resident designer 1982 to 1987) and the Cleveland Playhouse (including world premiere of Arthur Miller's The Archbishop's Ceiling).

Foster's Portrayal Of Rape Victim Praised

BY DIRK WHITLEY
GUEST REVIEWER

Jodie Foster plays a young woman with a suspect past who is savagely raped by a group of men in a bar. Kelly McGillis plays an assistant district attorney assigned to Foster's case. After plea bargaining with the rapists, Foster is enraged with McGillis for not fully prosecuting the men involved. Realizing that she has sold out Foster, McGillis vows to prosecute the men who encouraged the rape.

I can't say enough about this movie when considering the delicate subject matter, which this film deals with. Rape has never been an easy subject for the American public to understand, but this movie attacks the attitudes which still prevail in this country. Rape is crime, an act of violence, and should be punished accordingly. This film does not back down at all from the subject matter, and in fact challenges the viewer to consider his or her own attitudes toward rape.

Rape has never been an easy subject for the American public

Jodie Foster is excellent in her role and the supporting cast is good. Kelly McGillis is very mediocre; she does not seem to have the maturity to quite tackle the role. Foster's character however, is the key to the film, and her performance is the cornerstone of the film. I have never been a Jodie Foster fan and have always doubted her ability, but there is no doubting her performance.

The film is well-written. The story is memorable, in part because the film is based on an actual event, but also because the events of this film could take place anywhere.

We The Mediocre

By Kelly Holsten

THE SEAHAWK would like to welcome back, by popular demand, WE THE MEDIOCRE.

After a massive outcry of TWO letters and ONE anonymous phone call, the SEAHAWK has decided to let me continue to fill this small corner of space with my pathetic attempt at yellow journalism.

THE FIGHT was BLOODY but my three supporters waged a brave battle against the elite corps known as the SEAHAWK EDITORIAL STAFF. Seeing as how this paper was already filled to the brim with WIT and WISDOM, the staff felt that my innocuous OFFAL was not proper, nor "right", for the pages of SEAHAWK Pride. I was too UGLY, too OFFENSIVE, and too far off the UGLY.

Yes, so they have a point . . . But those are my good qualities! What's a university paper without some semblance of controversy or questioning? It appears as if THE SEAHAWK is wallowing aimlessly in its own unchallenged sense of self worth. I've been in and around this campus for close to SIX YEARS (GREAT JESUS, DID I JUST ADMIT THAT?) and I have witnessed nothing that could even be semi-mistaken as controversial or boundary challenging. This is a university of SHEEP being led to and fro by the prospect of GREENER ($$) pastures. Just take a walk around campus between classes and observe the VACUOUS masses of CLONES grazing about over the grounds while their eyes stare straight ahead, locked in an unwavering line towards destination BRAINDEAD.

Unfortunately, inside the classroom things don't appear to be too much better. Teachers are practically on there hands and knees in anticipation of an intelligent and insightful comment. Just recently I sat in on an upper level ENGLISH class dealing with RENAISSANCE literature. The professor practically had to walk the class through the text as if they were on training wheels. After the lecture, the professor appeared to be drenched in beads of sweat; his system had overloaded and he was reduced to a babbling wreck. The last thing I heard him mutter was something about Chad Everett being the star of "EMERGENCY!"

God, these poor LIBERAL ARTS professors are teaching to an ever dwindling clientele of haggard souls who have managed to retain some glimmer of HOPE in a society where "WHEEL OF FORTUNE" and DONKEY KONG reign supreme. Meanwhile, over at building F, classes in Advanced APATHY and CREATIVE BOOKKEEPING are overflowing into the halls.

WE WELCOME GEORGE BUSH and DAN QUAYLE with open arms; we march like CATTLE towards intellectual doom while waving a huge flag with PRIDE; we are learning to channel our minds into an ever narrowing funnel of closed thought . . . We are the University of the 1990's.

ANYONE FOR TWO TICKETS TO PLUTO? NEXT WEEK: REM's new album; new music form DINOSAUR, SONIC YOUTH, and VOLCANO SUNS.

admitting too many Asian-American students, no matter how talented they may be.

As proof, the groups have noted that colleges reject qualified Asian-American students in disproportionate numbers.

In 1985, for example, 17 percent of all applicants were accepted at Princeton University, compared to only 14 percent of the Asian-American applicants. At Harvard, 15.9 percent of all applicants and 12.5 percent of Asian-American applicants were accepted. At Yale, 18 percent of all applicants were accepted; 16.7 percent of Asian-American applicants were admitted.

The schools themselves deny they keep out the Asian-Americans.

Harvard admissions officer Susie S. Chao, for one, said, "It would be against our best interests to say 'that's enough.'"

Thomas Lifka, assistant vice chancellor for student academic services at UCLA, said he is prohibited from discussing the matter while it is under review.

Still other spokespeople say that while Asian-American students may qualify academically, they lack other attributes, such as athletic or musical skills, or alumni references, that increase their chances of being admitted.

They say Asian-Americans too often choose to study pre-med, science and engineering, which limits their enrollment opportunities.

And they point out more and more Asian-Americans are in fact enrolling at scores of colleges.

Asian-Americans make up more than 14 percent of the freshman class at Harvard, up from 12 percent three years ago. At UCLA, the current freshman class is 20.7 percent Asian-American, compared to 16.5 percent in 1985.

The number of Asian-American students, who as a group tend to achieve at higher levels than white and other minority students, has grown dramatically at other schools as well. At Berkeley, for example, 26.5 percent of the undergraduates are Asian-Americans, up from 20.7 in 1980.

Yet some believe that, if schools truly were color blind, the numbers would be even higher.

Curran said the Education Dept.'s probe won't be limited to illegal caps on Asian-American admissions, but will look into every aspect of admissions at the universities. He said the investigations do not stem from individual complaints, but from news reports and concern expressed by advocacy groups.

True or not, the students themselves often believe the reports, and act accordingly.

"You try not to conform to the stereotypes — being nerdy and robotlike — because you don't want to stand out," Columbia's Asato said.

"Even the way it's put by college admissions officers — 'do you realize how many of our students are Asian?' — indicates a problem," said Weinberg. "Somehow it's okay if there are a lot of white students, but not a lot of Asians."

And although many may argue that Asian-Americans no longer need affirmative action to help them succeed, Weinberg asserted that many — particularly recent immigrants from Southeast Asia — are poor, speak little English and need special help.

"I don't like the idea that Asians have made it," said Asato. "Many Asians haven't assimilated."

Pianist to Perform Benefit

WILMINGTON—Wilmington native pianist Laura Melton will present a benefit concert at 3 p.m., Sunday, Dec. 18, in Kenan Auditorium. Proceeds of the concert will benefit the Museum of World Cultures at UNCW.

Admission is $5, and the public is invited to attend. Melton's program will feature Johann Sebastian Bach's "Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue," Nine Preludes by Claude Debussy and Alexander Scriabin; Chopin's "Ballade No. 4 in F Minor," and Franz Liszt's Sonata in B Minor.

Laura Melton comes to Wilmington from the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik in Freiburg, West Germany, where

The college-aged heterosexual is in a low risk group, but the "largest growing HIV positive group is the 15-25 age group," said Jewell. And now that UNCW has a small but significant number of students with AIDS, the question of prevention and testing is raised.

"I strongly recommend AIDS testing for those who are either an IV drug user, a homosexual or otherwise considered to be in a high-risk group," stated Jewell.

The tests used are not always accurate and can even indicate to someone who does not have the virus as positive," Jewell further maintained.

Sorority from p.1

"Our own goals were reflected by the Alpha Phi representatives as well as the organization itself," said Angela Robbins, the sorority's secretary.

Robbins added that the reason behind forming another sorority on the campus was not due to dissatisfaction with the organizations that were already here, but to show "the necessity for growth in the Greek community on this campus."

Robbins was also pleased with UNCW's Greek community for "their contributions and support" in attempting to become affiliated with a national organization. "We're really proud of our accomplishments thus far and have worked hard to get along as far as we have in less than a year," said Mitchell.

Alpha Phi is one of the ten oldest sororities in the U.S. and is currently an international sorority with chapters in other countries as well. Annually, Alpha Phi presents 61 scholarships to collegians who have exhibited academic excellence, leadership capabilities and strong extracurricular performance.

The pledging Alpha Phi class currently has a membership of thirty nine. They are tentatively scheduled to have their initiation ceremony and sign their charter in mid-March of 1989.

As of now, there are only a few heterosexuals who have contracted the disease without coming in direct contact with someone in a high risk group. However, this could easily change in the future at the present rate of expansion.

"The AIDS Control Program has found that the number of cases of AIDS worldwide has doubled every 15 months, and will continue to do so," Owen said. "There are 2 million people in the United States who have AIDS, a figure that will also double approximately every 15 months."

The best way to prevent the disease is total abstinence from sex and intravenous drugs, along with little or no contact with blood," Jewell said. For the sexually active, Jewell suggests the use of a condom combined with a quality spermicide. The best way to prevent the virus' spread when using IV drugs is not to share the needles.

Commuter Survey Results Tallied

BY JACQUIE SKINNER
ASST. DEAN OF STUDENTS

One of the challenges the University has in response to different student populations is retention of commuter students. Here at UNCW, the number of commuter students is approximately 4500 students or 70% of the total student population. This number reflects the national trend in that 83% of all college students commute.

Why are commuter students a challenge for UNCW? In his book Achieving Educational Excellence, (1985), Alexander Astin noted that differences between commuter students and residence hall students accounted for differences in the retention of each group. In his article entitled "Finishing College: The Effects of College Type" William Velez cited the study he conducted on the retention rates of commuter and residence hall students. From a sample of 3,169 students, he found that 43% more of the residence hall students graduated than those students who lived off-campus.

In general, commuter students do not establish a real connection to the university. The typical scenario for the commuter students is that he/she comes to campus, attends classes, then leaves. It is not uncommon for a commuter student studying or easing in their car between classes.

Through a survey conducted here at UNCW it was found that approximately half of the commuter students do not get involved with any student organizations or other co-curricular activities. Consequently, new friends are not made and there is a sense of unfamiliarity with the campus.

In a report done by the National Institute of Higher Education they stated the following in regard to student involvement: "There is now a good deal of research evidence to suggest that the more time and effort students invest in the learning process and the more intensely they engage in their own education, the greater will be their growth and achievement, their satisfaction with their educational experiences, and their persistence in college, and the more likely they are to continue their learning."

Thus, it is critical that students get involved both in and out of the classroom. To this end, it is important that commuter students are familiar with the services and programs available for them to assist in their success while attending UNCW.

Well, what exactly is a commuter student?

If a student resides off-campus, he/she is a commuter student. This means they either walk, drive their own car, ride a bicycle or take a city bus to get back and forth to campus. Therefore, some students may be real close to campus by living in Seahawk Square or College Manor live as far away as Jacksonville or Clinton.

Within the Student Affairs Division, the Office of the Dean of Students has initiated efforts in being a resource to commuter students. The office has implemented the following:

- a) changed office hours to 8:00 a.m. - 6:30 p.m., Monday-Friday to better accommodate commuter students, especially those students who work and/or have children
- b) published a "Commuter Student Brochure" highlighting programs and services available to them on campus
- c) designated the Assistant Dean of Students as the resource person for commuter students
- d) currently in the process of developing a brochure entitled "Landlord/Tenant Rights and Responsibilities" for commuter students who are renting
- e) interface with the Housing Office and Parking Administrative Office to disseminate information on the "Off-Campus Housing Program," the "Board Plan," and the carpool permit.

In addition, because of the significant percentage of commuters and the issue of retention, the Office of the Dean of Students and Institutional Research conducted a survey during the 1988 Spring Semester to assess how the university can better meet their needs and develop a profile on the commuter student population. 345 commuter students responded to the survey.

The following are examples of the data yielded:

- SEX
- 67% Female
  - 33% Male
- DISTANCE FROM CAMPUS
- 31% within walking distance
  - 51% less than 15 miles
  - 18% 15 miles or more
- PRIMARY MODE OF TRANSPORTATION
- 77% drive own car
  - 2% ride with someone
  - 4% use carpool
  - 0.6% use city bus
  - 17% bicycle or walk
- CURRENT LIVING ARRANGEMENTS
- 30% live with parents or relatives
  - 70% live in private residences
- PERCENT OF FULL-TIME COMMUTER STUDENTS BY CLASS (SPRING '88)
- Freshmen- 92%
  - Sophomores- 86%
  - Juniors- 89%
  - Seniors- 78%

- SATISFACTION WITH ACADEMIC EXPERIENCE
- 18% strongly agree
  - 57% agree
  - 13% not sure
  - 10% disagree
  - 2% strongly disagree

In response to questions about campus services directly geared to commuter students, a significant portion of students were unaware of these special types of services: 75% are unaware of the "Off-Campus Housing Program" and 38% are unaware they can eat in the cafeteria (approximately 64% of commuter students choose not to eat on campus).

Finally, through this survey commuters expressed concern on the hours of operation for several offices on campus. The request is to have offices open at least 30 minutes earlier and/or close an hour later.

Currently, there is a campus ad-hoc committee that assists the Office of the Dean of Students in helping to meet the unique needs and concerns of UNCW's commuter students. For any student, staff or faculty member that is interested in joining the committee, please contact Jacquie Skinner, Assistant Dean of Students at 395-3119.

Kraft Offers Solution To The Federal Budget

JIM KRAFT
TREASURER
COLLEGE REPUBLICANS

In this year's presidential campaign, the cry of the liberals, the press and anyone wanting a headline, was: what to do about the deficit. What is interesting to note is that it was George Bush, the next president of these United States, that came up with a realistic and feasible proposal, the flexible freeze. However, no one has yet addressed the present deficit.

Today's so-called deficit is actually down as a percentage of the GNP from its peak in 1983 of 50 percent. This comes from a nominal decline in the deficit, but also from a much stronger economy brought on by the Reagan tax cuts of the early 1980's.

We are, in fact, growing out of the deficit, much to the chagrin of the liberal left in Congress who keep screaming for a tax hike, not so they can balance the budget, but so they can spend the added revenue on new programs, such as those welfare programs which have, over the past 25 years, so eroded the very moral fiber of this great nation.

To address the size of this so-called debt that the press has made out to be much larger than it actually is, let's look at it from an accounting standpoint. The federal government considers all expenditures current expenditures, to be paid off with present tax dollars.

This sort of mentality would get any businessman fired. The government does not look at certain assets as capital, i.e. those which are paid off over their useful life, about 35 to 40 years for a nuclear aircraft carrier. By purchasing such assets on debt, all who benefit from these assets will help incur the costs of their production, similar to a home mortgage, pay as you go.

When this is considered, along with all state and local governments' debt and surplus, there is, in the aggregate, approximately a $70 billion surplus, hardly cause for the concern the press has given it.

Again, to dispel another fallacy, the interest on this "debt" as a percentage of the budget has risen from 10.1% to 13.8% under President Reagan. In 1948, it was 14.6%, and in the years between 1968 and 1980, this percentage increased 44%.

At neither time did a crisis follow.

In relation to our trading partners, our situation is far better than some would like to make it.

Again, the liberal left, the press and anyone who would like to attempt to discredit capitalism, have tried to make a case by saying that we are in much worse shape than countries such as Japan and Germany.

In fact, just the opposite is true. In the years between 1973 and 1986, the U.S. has experienced a 41% increase in its debt to income ratio. Japan, the so-called banker to the world, the country that will outdo the U.S. as the world economic leader, has had a 194% increase over that same period. That's leverage.

Germany also has had a triple digit increase, jumping 121%. The U.S. average is the same as during the Kennedy/Johnson years, what some have called the "Good Ole Days."

Also, the claim that the U.S. is a debtor nation is hogwash. In 1987, when we were allegedly a debtor to the tune of $368 billion, we had actually earned $21 billion dollars more in interest on our foreign investments than we paid out to our foreign creditors, who some would like us to believe have come to own this country. Actually it is the other way around.

Our strong economy and the lack of the world's other leading economic powers to keep up, or willingness to keep up, is the chief reason for this budgetary imbalance. Our trading partners must cut taxes, attract foreign investment, expand their economies, and lower their trade barriers. Until such things happen, a world-wide, sound economy is impossible.

Jones Knocks War On Drugs And Spending Cuts For Welfare

WENDELL L. JONES
Vice-President,
UNCW College Democrats

There is probably at least one theory for every dollar in debt the United States finds itself. Make that 1.2 trillion and one. The problem however is not coming up with ideas and theories, it is finding one that will accomplish three essentials: 1) not bog down the economy, 2) not isolate and leave behind the poor, and oh yes 3) work. Conservatives have thus far offered but two equally pathetic ideas, "flexible freeze," and out and out spending cuts, (except for the military which they propose to increase spending upon). Both would bog down major segments of the economy, both would isolate and worsen the plight of America's poor, and neither will work. The goal facing the Bush administration and the Congress is not currently how to reduce the debt, but how to prevent it from increasing at the runaway speed Reagan set. By approaching it from that perspective the problem becomes only slightly less complicated but workable.

The first problem is the economy. For those who didn't already know it, the U.S. economy is loosely based on the theories of Adam Smith and the idea of free market capitalism. However, we have over the last fifty years moved more towards the theories of John Maynard Keynes who believed government should interfere with the economy to keep its peaks low and its depths shallow. The point being, a free market economy is like a roller coaster with many undulations in its course. Keynes observed that each undulation had become more and more severe and he predicted that America would eventually face an economic disaster leading to a severe depression...he was right.

The government does need to cut spending in all areas, but it must be done in a very careful manner. If the federal government suddenly slashes $200 billion from the budget, that translates into $200 billion plus that is not being spent on America. In other words, people lose their jobs and the economy goes to hell in a hand basket. Using Keynesian economic theory, the government can cut spending while at the same time stimulating the economy through manufacturing, job training, and education as well as investment and consumer purchasing. The goal being, where the government left off, encourage the American people to take up thus reducing the gap in GNP.

To further protect the gap, government must not cut the full $200 billion but only half. The other $100 billion over revenue must then be made up through increasing revenue. To begin with, loopholes need to be removed from the tax laws. The most obvious ones being deduction for interest on mortgage to a second family home, maintaining full tax liability on capital gains and a restructuring of current corporate tax definitions to remove the tax advantage for individuals to incorporate themselves. At the same time introducing tax breaks for investment in companies employing over twenty based on a graduating scale, as well incentives for companies to: 1) stay in America, 2) expand operations to hire more employees, and 3) retain current employees for expanding technological requirements. The government could further increase revenues by changes in current tariffs. First and foremost, American companies that choose to move their factories outside the United States should not have the right to ship those products back into the United States duty free.

Then there is the problem of poverty in America. When we discuss cuts in government spending caution is the key.

America cannot afford to make wholesale foolish cuts in welfare programs. To begin with, cuts would most effect the children. By cutting Aid to Dependent Children, Education Subsidies, College Tuition Programs, Medicare and Low-income Housing we would guarantee a specific class of "antagonists" in America. Those programs are the only way those children will ever have a chance to get out of poverty and provide anything resembling a decent life to their own children. I find this current crusade against drugs in America frustrating. The Nancy Reagans of the world seem to have this notion that drugs are the root of evil. The truth of the matter is that drugs are the results of a much deeper problem of the failing American infrastructure. When nearly one-third of America's homeless are in fact employed, there is a failing. Now is not the time to wipeout what little hope these people have left, now is the time to lift their spirits and lend them a helping hand. Government can in no way handle it alone, it is going to take the assistance of the wealthy. Maybe it is time we started placing low-income housing in wealthy neighborhoods as one community in New York has done. The only way to eliminate the necessity for such is to create a motivation in society to eliminate the need.

And when should we begin to pay off this massive debt? Indebtedness is a blessing for those in debt. It shows them to pay-off debts with money that is no longer worth as much. For example, a man in debt $100 thirty years ago, would find it much easier to pay it off today. Right now we need to halt the growth in our deficit. We can begin to pay it off when $1.2 trillion just won't buy what it used to...say 2020?

Minority Admissions Defended

To the Editor:

The editorial in the November 17 edition of the Seahawk entitled "UNCW Admissions: Who Gets In, Who Doesn't" is shallow, ill-informed, and whether intentional or not, panders to the racism that seems to be surfacing on campus as illustrated by the "Chi Phi" incident and the controversy it has spawned. The editorial is an insult to the students, the University in general, and the field of journalism.

First, the editor criticizes the Office of Minority Affairs, saying that it is an "office of black affairs", eschewing other minorities on campus. That office does offer help to other minorities; however, the editor forgets that blacks are numerically the largest minority in this state and this part of the country. There are few Asian-Americans or Hispanics in this state, area, or on this campus.

So, the Office of Minority Affairs naturally has more dealings with blacks since they are the largest minority in this area. If we were in South Dakota or Wyoming, where there are few blacks, minority might mean Native-American. If we were in Alaska, it might mean Eskimo. If we were in New Mexico, it might mean Hispanic. However, this is North Carolina and numerically the largest minority is black.

Secondly, the editor neglects to mention the REASON for the consent decree, which called for a greater black presence on campus.

The reason for that consent decree was that blacks had been specifically discriminated against in the past by the UNC system, the state, and the region. Jim Crow laws mandated racial segregation for blacks in most aspects of Southern life. The reason the UNC system is emphasizing increasing black enrollment is because for years they did not enroll blacks.

Why are there predominately black universities in this state? Because for decades blacks were prevented from attending white universities. When blacks were forced to go to segregated schools, drink from segregated fountains, or even swear on separate "Jim Crow Bibles" in Southern courts, these indignities were not equally accorded to all other minorities (except in isolated areas with large Native-American populations). The consent decree was entered into to make up for discrimination that was aimed overwhelmingly at blacks.

Moreover, if the University was being so lenient in admitting blacks this campus would be inundated with black students. If the University was being lenient, blacks would comprise more than a mere 6.6% of the student body.

The editor criticizes the idea of trying to get a certain percentage of black students at the University. But education is more than learning a mathematical formula or a law of physics. It should be a learning to interact with diverse people, which is hard to do on a homogeneous campus. That is why the predominately black universities in the state have been asked to increase their white enrollment.

Lastly, the editor says that in their admissions procedures, the Admissions Office "probably" separates applications by race and if they can't find enough to fill out the 7% they "might" have to recruit more blacks. Doesn't she/he know? It would seem that part of the editor's journalistic responsibility would be to go and talk to the Admissions Office to find out how this process works before printing "probably" and "maybe". It just so happens that this was an inaccurate description of Admissions Office policies. The Admissions Office does not set aside a certain number of slots for blacks and whites. Other minorities and whites are not being turned away to let in blacks.

The editorial was shallow. The editor did not interview pertinent people to gain information about what she/he was saying. Furthermore, the editor does not seem to know much about the history of this region and its legacy of racism against blacks. Unfortunately, such editorials, filled with misinformation and half-truth, do little to help us overcome that legacy of racism. What we need is more understanding, not misinformation.

Earl Sheridan and Roger Lowery, Department of Political Science

EDITOR'S NOTE: We are willing to admit that the editorial in question was poorly researched and was full of ambiguity.

However, we are not willing to retract or change our viewpoint. For we maintain a belief that the only true equality comes from blindness of differences.

If all schools would remove race and sex from their applications, then a certain equality would be achieved, for the cards would fall as they may.

We recognize the value of college being a microcosm of the society in which one lives, but feel that recruiting specifically one kind of people perpetuates the stark divisions that society.

Shouldn't we be encouraging more of all kinds of people to come here? The only way to improve society is to change it.

And if we are seeking to compensate those we have exploited, we should start with the native American Indians, and include Asians and Orientals as well. Although we haven't abused some of those groups in the South, it is not fair to prepare our students only for the type of society one encounters in the South.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We would like to remind or inform anyone who wonders who writes the Seahawk editorials, as we are often requested to give the writer's identity, the editorials in any newspaper are not necessarily written by the editor. They can be written by anyone, but must be approved by the editorial staff, as properly representing the newspaper's stance on an issue.

Cheerleaders Exhibit Racism During Games?

Due to the poor attitudes that are shown by the cheerleaders for UNCW basketball games. I feel that it is only right that I criticize their neglect of a certain section in the coliseum. It just so happens to be that this section is often occupied by the black students of UNCW. I feel that the black students at this school have just as much school spirit as the white students but the cheerleaders fail to see this as exemplified by their lack of attention toward this particular section. As example when they distribute school paraphenalia they show favoritism toward the white section. It would be deeply appreciated if we could get further corporation from the cheerleaders.

Thanks,
Tijana Hill

Some People Stay Offended

There are many ways to offend. Some days, one need only get up and someone's offended; other days it will take a while to offend someone.

I opened a door for a woman coming out of a Zip Mart the other night and it really ticked her off. That was a double offense: first, it offended her because she felt I was being a "stereotypical male chauvinist." And secondly, it offended me because I was simply being courteous. She failed to recognize courtesy, but hey, that's fine by me.

Sunday I passed someone on the interstate driving 55 mph in the left lane. Okay folks, the interstate has a statewide speed limit of 65 mph, there are signs across the state that say "Slower Traffic Stay Right," so if you want to take your time and look at the scenery do it in the right lane. I offended this person royally by passing him on the right and pointing out his error from a position about twenty feet in front of him.

There are even some people who think that no animals should be used in laboratory testing. I agree with these people to a point -- that being that there is no need to test animals for data we already people take the place of the animals and then the scientific community would kill two birds with one stone. They would not offend animal rights activists and they would be able to discern what the effects of whatever they test would be on humans.

What offends me the most, however, is that people seem to have this "holier than thou" attitude toward what the South should be like. I was raised in the South, and yes, the South has its problems, but if you're not from the South what makes you such a professional critic on how to improve it? I don't go to someone's home and tell them how to decorate or clean it, because it's not mine. If you want to complain about my home, make your home a utopia first, then tell me how to make mine the same. If you don't like it here, go home.

Finally, if you want to go through life being offended, just decide that you're always right. Don't worry about the facts, they're irrelevant ... appoint yourself to a level of intelligence equal to the almighty and tell everyone else what way is the right way (your way).

This is truly the most ignorant way to go through life.

Wake up people. This is the only life you've got to live. You can enjoy it or you can spend it being a critic and expert on the world according to you.

I know I've probably offended at least two out of the three people who will read this and I'll probably hear about it up here sometime next week (I always do), but everyone is entitled to their opinion.

Also, don't forget what an opinion is. It's that wonderful balance of upbringing and education tainted with various amounts of ego. If one can get the ego out, and more of the education in, then maybe, just maybe, the world would be a little better off.

have. There is, however, a need for using them in tests. My reason for being offended by these people is this: they actually place the life of the animal on the same level as that of a human being.

My solution is to let these

Love Is The Essential Gift

The Christmas Advent season has begun. Advent means "coming toward" and we are certainly in a "coming toward" time. We are "coming toward" exams. It is a real time of stress with papers to be completed, reading to be done and tests to be taken. Some are "coming toward" graduation which carries its own combination of joy and stress when jobs are not readily discovered.

But in the main, it is the advent of Christmas, a season that takes us back to the ancient days when the Hebrew people were looking and waiting for a Deliverer, the Promised One whom they expected to bring them freedom from the stress of Roman oppression and personal peevishness. Wise men from outside Palestine looked into the heavens for a sign of the One to come. Holy men looked into their scriptures. Common folk looked to the places of power. The anticipation of all was focused on the places of wonder and holiness and power.

It behooves us to remember that when the Deliverer did come and was found, it was in the most ordinary places. I hope you will not overlook them. Some very ordinary moments become transformed into times of high holiness through acts of love simply done. Find the housekeeping staff in your dorm, say thank you and see how it feels. Thank a professor when you discover that you have learned something new. Look at your friends: one by one, figure out one thing you appreciate about them and tell them. Find the cafeteria staff and tell them about a meal you did like. Write down ten things you do like about yourself and celebrate. Stop a policeman and tell him that you appreciate him. If love lives in you, wrap it in swaddling clothes, the ordinary stuff of life, and give it to someone.

Every time you do, you will be taking a quick, quick journey to the lovely Holy place deep inside each one of us. Such little acts of love feel good because they touch our own loving center. And, perhaps, during the stress of exams and in the midst of whatever other anxiety is affecting us, we need to remind ourselves that what happened almost 2,000 years ago is irrelevant unless there is a Holy loving place within us. Let part of your advent journey be a new "coming toward" your deeper holier self.

Note: Our Campus Wide Christmas Candlelight Communion Service will be at 11:00 p.m., December 8 at St. Matthew's Lutheran Church across from Trask Coliseum.

This is my last column of 1988, so it's time to reflect. It was a most forgettable year. Any year which is highlighted by George Bush winning the presidency, is a year that will go down in the "anal" as the year that wasn't. Locally and nationally, most events were predictable.

Locally, the opening of Toys-R-Us was the biggest thing to happen to Wilmington since liquor by the drink was implemented. I haven't had the guts to enter the Christmas store from hell. Maybe it will be safe from Christmas returns when April rolls around.

On campus, the college republicans lived up to their expectations. Last Spring, they placed tombstones on the union lawn, depicting all the countries that have "died" of communism because the U.S. didn't stop the cancerous growth. In the Fall, the CR's wrote a petition to keep the gay and lesbian group from receiving funds. They actually received many signatures from paranoid students. I feel that if anyone shouldn't be funded, it should be the CR's. What do they need money for? They could just ask daddy for money.

Speaking of funds, I forced to further fund the University when I received a parking ticket. I suddenly parked in a staff spot.

Since it was completely inadvertent, I contested it by filling out a required form. I plead temporary insanity. I explained that I always park in that lot near New Hanover Gym because there are always available spots at nine in the morning. The lot is nowhere near my classes, but I don't mind walking. I explained that I didn't realize I parked between yellow lines and asked for leniency since I have never illegally parked in my four semesters at UNCW. Well, six weeks later they send me a letter which virtually says, "Too bad Bud, pay up. No leniency at this school. You cannot contest it anymore." Sincerely, Parking Appeals Board.

In the meantime though, I have figured out why I parked there because I did it again, but noticed after I got out of my car.

Since I can't appeal again officially, I will do it through this column.

Dear Appeals Board:

I have discovered that at around 9:00 a.m. on a sunny day, when I'm facing the sun, I cannot distinguish the yellow lines from the white. They all look white: Especially with amber sunglasses on. As far as I'm concerned, I parked between white lines on that fateful day that you ticketed me. I believe that a student who paid fifty bucks for a parking decal should get a second chance when they plead for one, especially a student with no previous tickets. You should make sure that your parking lines aren't ambiguous. You should send a ticket pusher to that lot at the time I mentioned so he/she can see what I'm talking about. Sincerely, Just another broke, ripped-off student.

OK, back to the column. On the National front, George Bush managed to BS most of the nation by transforming himself from a wimp to a macho man in a matter of months.

The worst part of his presidency will be when he appoints new Supreme Court Justice. That can affect us for twenty to thirty years. It sure appears as though the country will take a step backward by making abortion illegal.

Be prepared for Harry's abortions, aka Abortions-R-Us. Qualifications--father is a plumber and brother-in-law's best friend, used to be a doctor. Motto--Harry's abortions, you rapem, we scrapem; No fetus can beatus. (Hey, I haven't been crude in a while.)

The only good outcome will be that the right-to-lifer's will be able to crawl back under their rocks. They deserve a rest. They had a busy year of crawling on sidewalks and shouting and being carried off by the cops. I saw them on "48 Hours", what a bunch of nut cases. I pity the cops. It would be difficult not to kick the hell out of them. I'd hate to have to carry off a bunch of able bodied persons who just lay there limply. Some cops did administer the Vulcan pinch though, I like that. I find it funny that all of these protesters were too ugly to ever worry about getting pregnant or impregnating anyone. (Thank God)

Those news shows received much attention in 88 due to the writers strike. As a result, many shows are premiering in December. Maybe they won't be reruns until February of 1989.

Sometimes no news is good news. I was glad to see that no parent allowed their baby to fall into a well and wind up rich and famous because of it. If my boy fell down the stairs, social services would be at my door the next day.

Other news in 1988--Elvis was big. More people have seen him this year than in 1978. In pro sports, there were no surprises because LA and NY were the champs. Ho hum. A local man lived in a tree to save it from a slaughter, and won. It was funny now some politicians admitted that they were afraid to get involved for fear that they would be labeled "environmentalists" -- boy, that's political suicide. They don't mind being called liars and cheats, but environmentalists--no way.

On campus, the School of Business opened beautiful Cameron Hall, while the communications department continued with their two classrooms with the broken podiums. Rumour has it that they may receive new chalk in the spring. We have our fingers crossed.

We shall soon see what 1989 will bring us. Maybe there will be a few surprises such as Cleveland winning a championship in some sport. Maybe the CR's and Parking Services will show a little compassion--Naah. Perhaps President Bush--Whoah--talk about on oxymoron--will revert back to his wimp ways. And maybe I'll stop bitching so much--don't count on it.

Dr. Pseudocare Cures Holiday Blues

The semester is winding down and this may be my last opportunity to extend my wishes for a merry Christmas. Actually, I don't really care what kind of Christmas you have, just as long as you do it elsewhere, but if for no other reason than sheer politeness, feliz navidad, hombre.

My real concern, however, is for those of you who may be troubled with some lingering sports-related question that has kept you lying awake at nights, thus causing you to sleep through those tedious Tuesday-Thursday classes. With exams approaching, I simply cannot bare the thought of any of you missing a final due to lack of sleep stemming from a problem I can help you with.

So as my seasonal gratuity, I will attempt to alleviate any unnecessary stress by solving your dilemma. Already, I have received numerous questions from concerned students. The volume was so large, in fact, that I could only publish those who enclosed a little green gift alongside their letter. Remember, address all letters, (and complaints, I suppose) to "Dr. Pseudocare," who believes your problems are your problems.

Dr. Pseudocare,

I haven't been able to sleep in weeks. Christmas is coming, and I can't think of anything to get my 10-year-old boy. He's really interested in football and wants to play for Oklahoma when he's old enough. What would you suggest I do.

"Perplexed in Portsmouth"

-Dear "Perplexed",

The best gift you can give any prospective Oklahoma football player is an unlimited check card. This will teach him at an early age what it means to spend money he hasn't earned, and will eliminate that catastrophic culture shock most players receive when they move from their hometown shack to a booster's condo. Remember, it's never to early to begin preparing.

-Dr. Pseudocare,

I have a terrible heart condition, and my doctor claims that cross-country skiing is the most effective form of aerobic exercise. I am a little skeptical. Can you please tell me what you feel is the most beneficial exercise?

"Heartless in Hartford"

-Dear "Heartless",

Safe sex. Unsafe sex, defined as cohabitating with a married woman, which in itself, is not unsafe, but the thirty foot leap from her bedroom window following the unexpected return of her husband can wreak havoc on the body, and must therefore be kept to an absolute minimum.

-Dr. Pseudocare,

I was recently playing golf the other day with a buddy of mine and after finishing eighteen beers in eighteen holes, we lost count of our score and were disqualified from the tournament. Should I protest?

"Free Swingin' in St. Louis"

-Dear "Free Swingin'",

Of course you must protest. Whether or not you can recall your score is irrelevant. How could any man suffering from Heinenitis or Strohzenia be held accountable for keeping his own score. Complain to the chairman that there should have been at least one sober official with every foursome. Also, for your trouble, deduct one shot for each beer you drank, because that is what you would have shot in the first place.

-Dr. Pseudocare,

I was recently watching a boxing match on ESPN, and the guy in the red corner kept kneeling down and making a cross on his forehead, like he was praying or something. Will praying in between rounds help you win?

"Wondering in Wyoming"

-Dear "Wondering",

Not if he can't fight.

-Dr. Pseudocare,

All my oldest son wants to do is play basketball. He plays day and night. His school work is suffering and we are afraid he won't qualify for a post-secondary education. We asked him how he did on his boards and he said "12 game, mom." Are there any schools out there who would accept a "69" all-state senior who scored more points in one week than he did or his SAT's?

"Worried in Wilmington"

-Dear Worried,

All of them, my dear. All of them.

Great Gatling Guns Down Hawks

BY CHRIS WRIGHT
SPORTS EDITOR

If Old Dominion's Chris Gatling is indeed human, he showed no evidence of it Wednesday night as he scored 31 points to lead his Monarchs to a well deserved 68-66 road victory over UNCW.

The 6'9" sophomore dominated every aspect of the game, hitting 13 of 16 shots from the field, and pulling down a team high five rebounds. For good measure, Gatling also collected six blocked shots, the last of which, helped preserve a two point lead with just under two minutes remaining.

"He's everything we thought he'd be," admitted UNCW head coach Robert McPherson. "They did a fine job of getting him the ball. When we fronted him, they lobbed; when we played behind him, he used his soft hook. He played like superman tonight. If we would have had a magnum 37, we would have used it. He's that good. He's a franchise player."

Anthony Carver, a 6'7" junior helped open up the inside by connecting on three long range bombs en route to 18 points for the undefeated Monarchs.

UNCW took a 33-31 lead into the half as Antonio Howard executed a set play perfectly in hitting an off-balance jumper with time running out. The same play was called for again, but this time it failed.

With twenty seconds remaining in the game and the Hawks trailing by two, 68-66, McPherson elected not to call a time out. Howard, who scored a team high 18 points, dribbled frantically, looking inside for Larry Houzer. As the clock ran down, so to did his options, and finally he let fly a desperation 25-footer that fell short.

"I had a pretty good game, just not when it counted," said the dejected Howard. "I took the shot and I accept the responsibility."

The Monarchs Donald Grant rebounded the errant shot and headed down court, running over a set Howard in the process. And in a game where the Hawks out fouled their opponent 18-8, again the official cited the blocking violation against the Hawks.

"We got hammered all night," said McPherson. "Sometimes you've just got to get the whistles."

Grant missed the front end of the one-and-one, but Joe Cherry's forty footer at the buzzer caromed off of the rim and Old Dominion escaped with their third win of the season.

"We ran a similar play at the end of the half," said McPherson. "It's a set play. Antonio did everything correctly, they just did a good defensive job on him. His job is to penetrate and either dish off or shoot. He has nothing to hang his head about."

The second half began with a three pointer by Greg Bender which gave the Hawks their biggest lead, 36-31.

The lead changed hands seven times in the second half as Houzer and Gatling staged a playground one-on-one battle.

Houzer, returned to his dominating style in the second half, scoring 10 of UNCW's last 12 points, including a short turnaround over Gatling, which gave the Hawks their lead 64-63, with just over two minutes remaining in the game.

Gatling, who McPherson referred to as "the best big man in the Sun Belt (Conference)" answered every Houzer basket with a duce of his own, running together spurts of seven and four straight points down the stretch and culminating the game with his sixth blocked shot.

With :29 seconds remaining and the Monarchs clinging to a 67-68 lead, Joe Cherry fouled Grant. Grant missed the front end of the one-and-one, and following a scramble retained possession and was fouled again. He closed out the scoring by hitting the first free throw.

"That was the turning point," McPherson said. "Three of our kids had their hands on the basketball."

While not thrilled with the loss, McPherson stated that this was the Hawks best showing. "We did everything we had to do to win. I'm very pleased with the effort. We had good bench support, and Larry played the second half the way he is capable of playing."

Houzer scored 16 of his 18 points in the second half.

"Larry's getting better everytime out," McPherson said. "He played better tonight than on Monday, and he played better Monday than he did Saturday at Boston College. He knows we need his contribution, and in the second half, he responded to the challenge."

Freshman Joe Cherry provided a season high 10 points in his first home start. Matt Fish came off the bench to add six, while Bender chipped in eight.

Houzer and UNCW's next challenge awaits them Saturday night when the 1-4 Hawks square off against intra-state rival North Carolina A&T at Trask Coliseum.

UNCW lost a heartbreaker 68-66 to ODU.

Laker's Look to Tri-Peat in West

ALLEN BEASLEY
STAFF WRITER

Pacific Division

The LOS ANGELES LAKERS will win the Pacific Division for the seventh straight year. Behind Magic Johnson and play-off MVP James Worthy, they'll also win 60 games again. Behind those two, Byron Scott, ageless center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, and a good, deep bench, L.A. will win the division by 15 games. Rookie point guard David Rivers of Notre Dame will give Magic more rest.

If anyone gets within 15 games of the Lakers, it will be the PORTLAND TRAILBLAZERS. They're a good, solid team. The guard tandem of point guard Terry Porter and Flashy Clyde "The Glide" Drexler is second only to Dallas' Harper and Blackmon. Center Kevin Duckworth, a 7-0, 280-pounder, finished second in most improved player voting. Jerome Kersey and Kiki Vandeweghe both averaged 20 points per game at small forward, and Steve Johnson is a dependable power forward. They are solid reserves on the bench.

The SEATTLE SUPERSONICS lost big forward Tom Chambers to Phoenix. They'll miss him at first, but second-year man Olden Polynice and Derrick McKey should take up the slack. Along with 20-point scorers Xavier McDaniel and Dale Ellis, they should finish third. But lack of depth prevents them from finishing higher than third.

The GOLDEN STATE WARRIORS will improve this year if only because Don Nelson is their new coach. His teams in Milwaukee were always over-achievers, so these should, too. To do so, he must get more from Ralph Sampson than Bill Fitch did in Houston. The backcourt of Winston Garland and Chris Mullin is first-rate, so Kansas State rookie Mitch Richmond will be able to develop slowly. Larry Smith and Manute Bol will join Sampson up front. Depth is a problem here as well.

The PHOENIX SUNS were once a model franchise, but five straight losing seasons polished off the lustre. But master rebuilding coach Cotton Fitzsimmons will begin the rebuilding process with a fairly talented young team. Free agent Tom Chambers will team up with last season's top draft pick Armon Gilliam and Kenny Gattison in the frontcourt. Rookies Dean Garrett of Indiana, Tim Perry of Temple, and Andrew Lang of Arkansas will see plenty of action. Steady Jeff Hornacek will be the point guard and Craig Hodges, a good three-point shooter will be the guards. Olympian Dan Majerle is their back-up.

Half of the LOS ANGELES CLIPPERS were drafted in 1987 or 1988, which means a young team will take its lumps. Danny Manning, the top pick in the entire draft will team with Ken Norman at forward. Inconsistent Benot Benjamin is at center with veterans Norm Nixon and Quentin Dailey at guard. When the youngsters develop on the bench, they'll contend. Until then, they'll suffer.

The SACRAMENTO KINGS are the weakest team in the division. Former UNC star Kenny Smith had a good rookie year at point guard, and Center Kleine continued to improve. Forwards Otis Thorpe and Harold Pressley had decent years, but improvement is needed here. Rookies Vinny Del Negro and Ricky Barry will add solid depth.

Hawks Split Weekend Meets

BY PATRICK FOWLER
SEAHAWK SPORTSWRITER

Rocking and Rolling is the term to describe the weekend swimfest of our exciting young Seahawks. Dress in holiday apparel of green bathing suits and Santa Claus hats; they flood out of the dressing room in which they created an awesome thundering sound with wild cheers and rubber flipper drumsticks. To say the least they were loose and ready to tame the Cougars from Charleston.

Thanks to an almost semi-packed crowd, they did just that as "The Team" roared to a men's victory of 137-64 and a woman's victory of 113-96. However when they traveled down the road to Duke they were taught a valuable lesson in the art of swimming consistently by falling miserably to the Blue Devils.

Against Charleston the men never were pressed at all and grabbed a commanding lead of 27-8 after only five events. They captured victories in seven out of ten events and swept the diving competition with first and second place showing on both boards.

Once again they were led by the swimming talents of freshman Brad Kinkema, who recorded three victories on the day. He compiled winning times in the 100 Free, 200 Medley Relay , and 200 Free Relay. His time of 48:8 just missed a new freshman mark. "Brad had a really good performance this meet but the efforts of Nick Revelas and Tim White was also a big boost for the team," said Coach Dave Allen.

Nick Revelas was also a triple winner gaining victories in the same races as two relays as Kinkema and in the 200 Freestyle The Seahawks had two triple winners, 3 double winners, and totally dominated the Cougars from start to finish. Jeff Carles won the diving venue by default when the Charleston team left their divers at home however he dove well enough to deserve his first place finish.

The men up their record to 4-1 before they were humbled Sunday by the Duke Blue Devils, who outswam and outdove the Seahawks. "The team just didn't do the job. We swam much slower on Sunday than on Saturday. I really felt after Saturday's outstanding showing that we had a good chance of beating Duke. We had the opportunities to do so but we didn't capitalize on them. I blame myself too for the defeat," said Allen.

The names of Mills, Grant, Tarter, Riggins, and Mucci were instrumental in catapulting their season mark to 2-3 as they approach the 500 mark. Mary Beth Mills had the single best outing of her career at UNCW by setting pool and collegiate records on both the one and three meter board. The one meter mark had stood for four years and the three meter ten year mark of 275.5 was obliterated by Mills' 286.82. This diving spectacle also qualified her for the southeastern Regional Meet.

I can say enough of her talents as she performed spectacular flipping twisting combinations and always ended with a rip entrance. She never received any score lower than a six and on one particular dive earn an 8 from a judge. Then after her last dive off the afternoon, she bounded out of the pool and made a mad dash to the swimming area where she swam the anchor lap of the women 200 free relay. Like a true champion, she helped her team to a second place finish. I ask you; what more can she possibly do?!

Laurie Grant not to be over shadowed by Mills outstanding performance quietly broke her 50 Freestyle Freshman record again with a 25.7 that eclipsed her earlier mark of 25:82. However she seemed upset that she didn't swim a 25.5; that's a true competitor for you.

"I thought I could've gone a lot faster," said Grant. The pace she is going right now it won't be long before she attain this mark too. Mary Tarter had a similar stellar performance collecting victories in 200 Medley and 100 Breaststroke. Beth Riggins and Mary Mucci also swam extreme well for the Hawks.

Against Duke the team never gave themselves a chance and recorded their fourth loss of the season. "Are expectations were too high for this meet and we had an off day. I hope we do well against N.C. State, but I don't think we can win. We really don't want to feel that awful feeling of a loss that we could of prevented," said Allen.

The women meet starts at three o'clock and the men begin at five o'clock. Come on out to feel the exciting feeling of Seahawk Swimming when they try to turn back the Pack of N.C. State.

UNCW Divers Reach For Lofty Heights

BY PATRICK FOWLER
SEAHAWK SPORTS WRITER

Well here they are, as promised, the flying fishes of the weightless air domain. The men and women of the 1988 diving team. You'll hear comments from their dedicated coach, Marc Ellington, and the soaring Seahawks themselves. Just sit back and listen up as I take you down the wet wonderful world of college diving.

Allow me to familiarize with the talk of the trade, so you can really feel a part of the diving scene. Each diver is required to execute several required dives for the judges before entering their own personal selection. Dives are rated on a difficulty scale from 1.0-4.0, with 4.0 being the most difficult. The diver must exhibit poise, good diving mechanics, confidence in presentation, and nail a rip entry (no splash) in the water in order to gain a good score. Scores are on a 0 to 10 basis, with the better scores given out for the high difficulty dives. The scores given by each judge are added up to give the diver a total score for each dive. When all 10 dives are completed, the diver's scores are tallied up to reach a cumulative point total for the diver at that board level and a placing is given. The board levels are 1 meter, three meters, and platform. The latter is not used in CAA competition. Now with this crucial information in your mind, let's start our journey.

The leader and best diver on this team is a peppy blond firecracker by the name of Mills..... Mary Beth Mills. She has taken control of the unclaimed space level by sweeping top spot in one meter board competition against American, Richmond, and William and Mary. The three meter top spot eluded her against Richmond, but she bounced back to her lofty podium against foes American and William and Mary.

The three most important aspects of diving are understanding of mechanics, good solid practice sessions, and confidence on the board, and she possesses all three. "Mary Beth improves every meet and is a terrific worker in her practice sessions. She listens so well to my instructions and just goes out there and does the dive. I'm trying to build up her ego and perfect her technical merit on the board but as far as I'm concerned, she is the best diver in the conference, with some of the most difficult dives." And thank-you coach Ellington. I ask you what more can a coach say about one of his proteges, but let's get it from the queen of the air herself Miss Mary Beth Mills.

"I try to remain calm up on the board by reciting this phrase, Positive Mental Attitude--Be Aggressive. I think only of the motions of the dives that I worked through practice and put my fears on hold. The team really pulls together as a whole and supports one another." She grins and tosses her hair back before continuing. "The one meter is my favorite board to do the inward two and half. I just hope I can qualify for NCAA Zones and win the Conference."

The next two diving darlings are newcomers Jessie Pustis and Elisabeth Crabbe, who are both competing in this first full year of diving. "Jessie and Elisabeth are very hard workers and show much improvement in every meet. Improvement is necessary in their mechanics and confidence level, but that will take time. Through repetitions they will conquer the one meter basics and overcome their fears of the three meter board. Their strong mental attitudes and capabilities will serve not only the team well, but also be a tool to gain access to the next level of diving. The most important thing they're gaining is experience," said a supportive Ellington. Listen gang, I've witness to these divers efforts. They are in the pool at six o'clock until nine and come back to practice around three in the afternoon. These ladies and men really work hard. I can't even imagine opening and eye at six in the morning.

Megan Mc Carthy is a true novice who is following under Ellington's guidance to obtain the same levels as her more experienced counterparts. She has had no previous diving experience, but if you'll excuse the pun, dives in to her work with youthful enthusiasm. "She is starting from ground zero but is improving a lot." If you ever decide to attempt a twisting two and half somersault before the sun's comes up in to lake warm water you'll experience what Jeff Carles goes through every morning.

Frankly if I can stumble from my bed to the bathroom at ten o'clock in the morning I feel I've really accomplished something! This man is amazing. I was privy to his workout in which he executed many twisting turning, painful-like maneuvers (at least to me) and consistently hit his rip entry. "Jeff has a lot of raw talent that needs some redefining due his lack of diving experience in high school. He and Dan Kiser need more work on the board. Jeff is willing to go that extra step to improve himself. Both men perform better at the one meter board and have only to polish up their dives. The three meter is where work is needed on their back and twisting dives. I hope they qualify for Eastems," said a pleased Ellington.

Jeff Carles had these thoughts on how he felt after emerging from the pool mouth after a hard workout. "I feel really good about my dives right now and I'm learning to compete well. I'm still working on my twists and pike positioning, but I'm satisfied right now with my diving at this point of the season." You should be Jeff, for you dove your way to two second place finishes on Saturday and Sunday.

That's it Hawksers, our journey has reached its final destination in to the realm of unidentifying flying Seahawks or UFS. The adventure doesn't have to stop here. The whole gang brings their act back home this Friday against N.C. State in the Trask Natatorium at three o'clock for the ladies' meet and a five o'clock start for the men.

Irish Poised for Mythical Title

BY ALLEN BEASLEY
SEAHAWK SPORTS WRITER

The Christmas holiday season is upon us again, and for the football fanatic, its paradise. There are 17 college bowl games being broadcast by the three major networks and ESPN.

The biggest prize to be won is college football's mythical national championship. Three teams are in the running: #1 Notre Dame, #2 Miami, and #3 West Virginia. The possible scenarios involving these teams are very interesting. Notre Dame and West Virginia face each other in the Fiesta Bowl at Tempe, Arizona, on January 2 while Miami plays sixth-ranked Nebraska in the Orange Bowl, at Miami, Florida, also on January 2.

The first possible is cut-and-dry. If Notre Dame wins, then they're the champions. They've beaten four teams playing in bowl games, including Miami, #5

Southern California, and #10 Michigan. But if West Virginia should happen to win, then things get a little tougher.

First, there is the question of West Virginia's schedule versus Miami's schedule. West Virginia played nine teams with losing records to finish with an 11-0 record. The only Top 20 team they played all year was Syracuse. Conversely, Miami's schedule was much more difficult. The Hurricanes played (and beat) #4 Florida State, Southeastern Conference champion and #16 Louisiana State, Southwest Conference champion Arkansas, and Western Athletic Conference runner-up Brigham Young. Their only loss was to Notre Dame. So if both West Virginia and Miami win, then Miami should win the championship based on strength of schedule.

Polls, however, aren't always in agreement, nor are they logical. In 1988, the Associated Press board of sportswriters and broadcasters selected Alabama as the #1 team. Also in 1978, the United Press International selected Southern California as its #1 team. Who's to say which one is right? Both choices came from widely respected sources, so questioning the picks would've been tough in that case. Logical ascension into the No. 1 spot doesn't always occur, either. The two most unbelievable snubs took place in 1982 and 1983. In 1982, second-ranked Southern Methodist finished 11-0-1. The only blemish on their record was a 17-17 tie with #8 ranked Arkansas, who finished 9-2-1. The No. 1 team, Georgia, was beaten by #4 Penn State in the Sugar Bowl. The win helped Penn State jump to the top spot and win their first title. In 1983, Auburn finished 11-1 against the nation's toughest schedule but wound up #3, even though #1

Nebraska and #2 Texas lost. They were passed by #4 Miami, who had defeated Nebraska in the Orange Bowl.

The only way to eliminate disagreement and illogical choices is to set up a national play-off system. Simply take all of the teams in Division I-A (about 95) and run their vital statistics--strength of schedule, home record, road record, number of Top 20 teams played--through the computer program devised by the NCAA. Come up with the best 16 and let them be paired off, #1 vs. #16, #2 vs. #15, #3 vs. #14, and so on. Over the space of four weekends, one clear-cut, undisputed national champion will be determined on the field instead of in the frequently brain-dead minds of the national media.

Inaugural Season a Success

UNCW's infant cross-country team strided to its finish this season with high aspirations for the next. Bill Cason, coach of the new cross-country and track squad, is confident that "Everybody knows what it's going to take to move up next year." With this type of assurance, the Hawks are definitely headed towards a successful season.

In its first season, the cross-country team exhibited amazing stability and Cason hopes the trend will continue for a long time. Now, with the establishment of the Greene Track, runners will have much more available area for practice.

Overall, the cross-country team has improved significantly since the beginning of the season. Freshman Beth Holt finished in the top ten overall at the CAA Championships in Williamsburg, Virginia. Holt ran the 5000-meter Dunbar Course in 19:34, the second UNCW runner to finish a meet in the top ten. In the District III Championships, the women's team placed fourth in the meet and many of the runners achieved their best personal time. Senior Ellen Fuller, captain of the women's cross-country team, received the most valuable runner award of the season.

According to Coach Cason, the team desperately needs middle distance runners, as well as any who will be committed to the sport. In an effort to recruit new runners, and in the hopes that new talent will emerge, several scholarships are currently being offered.

Since the beginning of the season in early fall, there have been few injuries, Cason comments. Those runners who have suffered from those agonizing shin splints received them from training improperly.

Coach Cason will be introducing intramural track, which is expected to begin in the near future.

You don't need your parents' money to buy a Macintosh.

It's never been difficult for students to convince their parents of the need for a Macintosh® computer at school.

Persuading them to write the check, however, is another thing altogether.

Which is why Apple created the Student Loan-to-Own Program. An ingenious loan program that makes buying a Macintosh as easy as using one.

Simply pick up an application at the location listed below, or call 800-831-LOAN. All your parents need to do is fill it out, sign it, and send it. If they qualify, they'll receive a check for you in just a few weeks.

There's no collateral. No need to prove financial hardship. No application fee.

Best of all, the loan payments can be spread over as many as 10 years.

Which gives you and your parents plenty of time to decide just who pays for it all.

Whaley Wins 4th Annual Pageant

BY RICK HEYMANN
NEWS EDITOR

The fourth annual Miss University of North Carolina at Wilmington Scholarship Pageant was held at 8 p.m. on Saturday, January 14. Out of the eight students who competed, Deanna Lenore Whaley won the title of Miss UNCW along with a $1000 scholarship. Coupled with the scholarship, she received a vast array of gifts from local merchants, including "a lot of dinners for two!" said Whaley.

Almost a standing room only event, Kenan Auditorium was host to "the best organized pageant to date," said Whaley; who was making her second attempt at the title.

The second place winner was Kelly Michelle Rodney, taking home a $500 scholarship and the Betty Jo Welch award worth $100. The third place title and a $300 scholarship was given to Carla Jill Williams.

Other awards given included the Sponsorship Award, presented to Phyllis Michelle Bowie in honor of the fact that she had the most sponsors. The Most Talented Non-Finalist award was given to Maria James Costakia for playing Beethoven's "Für Elise" on the piano.

This year's Miss UNCW Pageant was sponsored by the Alumni Association, which donated all the awards, and by the SGA, which allocated a budget of $4000 to hold the pageant. "A charge of $5 per person was charged, the proceeds of which went to pay all unpaid bills. The remainder of these proceeds goes for the travelling expenses of the reigning Miss UNCW," said Karla Alston, SGA President.

The festivities began with a truly professional performance of a progressive version of our National Anthem by Lisa Finley, followed by a lengthy introduction of the judges by Janet Hogan, Mistress of Ceremonies. Last year's winner of the Miss UNCW crown, Wanda Witherspoon, sang "Stubborn Love," which preceded an entertaining version of "Hot, Hot, Hot" by the Senior Performing Arts Troupe.

Next on the agenda was the swimsuit competition, oriented to traditional runway fashion. It is unknown who won this or any other competition because the judges did not release any of the scores as the pageant progressed.

Approximately 35 reigning queens from various pageants around North Carolina were introduced in their formal gowns before the talent competition began. By far the most popular of these queens were the children; some as young as 2 years old.

Of the eight contestants in the talent competition, six sang, one danced, and one played the piano. Following this facet of the program, the Senior Arts Troupe danced for the final time performing "Rhythm Is Gonna Get You."

$1 Million Gift Banquet Honors Sisson

BY BRUCE FOLEY AND KAREN FOYE
STAFF WRITERS

UNCW honored William E. Sisson Tuesday night with an appreciation banquet for his gift of $1 million in the form of an irrevocable charitable remainder trust, which will go towards the advancement of the Marine Science Department at the time of his death.

"His philosophy is that this is not a donation, but an investment. He has looked at the program offered at UNCW and has seen the potential for the returns," said F. Douglas Moore, Vice Chancellor for University Advancement.

Sisson, the retired owner and president of Travelers Oil Company has always had an appreciation for the southeastern coastal environment and is concerned about it's preservation.

"I am concerned that future generations may not be able to experience the ocean as I did, as a young boy, because of pollution," said Sisson.

The Marine Science Department is ranked fifth in the world for its academic program, and puts considerable emphasis on conservation and research of coastal North Carolina.

Faculty members expressed a number of needs that could be met with these funds.

Dr. Merritt, Director of The Center for Marine Science Research, stated that Sisson's generous donation will strongly enhance the Marine Science Department. This money will allow their budget to reach beyond the limitations of the past.

"It will give us the opportunity to take advantage of new, innovative directions that we could not afford to follow in the past," said Merritt.

"At the present time, I would like to have a visiting scientist series, to generate new ideas among faculty, as well as students.

"I would also like to see an undergraduate internship to provide the necessary experience that can only be obtained through working in a Marine Research Laboratory," said Merritt.

Dr. Sizemore, Head of the Marine Science Department, praised Sisson for his contribution, because it gives the faculty the opportunity to respond faster and with more flexibility.

"If there were an oil spill off the coast of North Carolina, we, at the University, have qualified scientists who could study the spill. With a ready source of funds we could provide them with the equipment they would need without going through state channels," said Sizemore.

Sizemore explained that state funds were time consuming and difficult to work with. Red tape, involving rules and regulations governing their utilization, often slows their ability to act.

"The Marine Science Department needs better and more sophisticated equipment. Unfortunately, the prices are increasing tremendously.

Ceremonies Observed King's Birthday

BY BELINDA ROCHELLE
STAFF WRITER

Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., a pivotal figure in the civil rights movement, was celebrated on Thursday, January 12, by approximately 200 people attending a program in the University Union in his honor.

King was shot while standing on the balcony of the Lorraine Motel in Memphis, Tennessee, April 4, 1968 by James Earl Ray. North Carolina is one of forty-six states commemorating Dr. King's contribution to a people and a nation by recognizing his birthday as a federal holiday.

The Office of Minority Affairs sponsored the sixth annual program commemoration, "Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Remembered." The program featured the UNCW Gospel Choir, Rev. Dr. Dennis Proctor, and Charles Fort, director of creative writing, who dedicated three of his own poems to Dr. King.

Dr. King's speech at the March on Washington in 1963, is almost universally recognized and remembered. King was well known for his oratory skills as well as for his leadership capabilities; so it was appropriate that the featured speaker was a gifted speaker in his own right.

Unlike past speakers, Rev. Dr. Dennis Proctor, pastor of St. Luke AME Zion Church, did not dwell on the past accomplishments of Dr. King's work or the sorrowfulness of his death. Proctor emphasized that the basis of all King's work was a spiritual, deep faith in God and even a deeper belief in the love of humanity.

Juniors Prepared for Leadership

BY CATHY BIRMINGHAM
DIRECTOR LEADERSHIP CENTER

How would you like to be one of 50 college juniors participating in a ten week national summer leadership program? Leadership America is a major national leadership development opportunity for select students from colleges all across the country. The purpose of this program is to prepare student leaders to accept major leadership responsibilities earlier in their careers and to handle them more effectively. The program emphasis is on global awareness and changes in technology.

The main requirement for participation is "outstanding potential for leadership" and completing the junior year before June 9, 1989. This ten week program consists of various leadership development workshops and a host of new adventures. Through the program you will meet influential, national leaders, learn about your leadership abilities, increase your self-confidence and make life-long friends from all over the country.

The program begins June 9, 1989 and ends August 17, 1989. Participants will spend one week in Greensboro, NC; one week in the Rocky Mountains; three weeks in Dallas, Texas; four weeks in a selected internship, and one week in Washington, D.C.

This is the third year of Leadership America. The majority of the costs are paid by the sponsors of the program. (Sponsors include American Airlines, The Coca-Cola Company, Haagen-Dazs, IBM, and The Henry Luce Foundation.) All inter-city transportation and housing throughout the seven weeks is funded. Most meals during the five week formal session are funded. Normal personal expenses (e.g. laundry, telephone snacks, etc.) are the responsibility of the participants as are all food and local transportation expenses during the internship. Based on need, a limited number of scholarships (up to $2500) are available to those selected to the program. Applications are available in The Leadership Center, UU 212. They are due January 23, 1989.

Orientation Leaders Needed

BY SARA SCHILLING
STAFF WRITER

The Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs is looking for twenty energetic, dedicated, responsible students to be Summer Orientation Leaders. These leaders will assist entering freshmen in getting acquainted with UNCW this summer.

The application process will begin on January 24, at 6:30 p.m. in room 100 of the Union with an informational meeting. This meeting is not required, but will give applicants a chance to discuss the responsibilities of Orientation Leaders. There will also be past Orientation Leaders present to answer questions. Applications will be available at this time.

Beginning January 25, applications will be available in the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Office of the Dean of Students, Office of Residence Life and the University Union Information Center. The deadline for applications to be turned in is Monday, February 6, at 5 p.m. They must be turned in to the Office of the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs (101 Alderman). Once applications are turned in, an interview will schedule an interview.

Applicants must have at least a 2.0 GPA and be available for all three Summer Orientation sessions (June 11-12, 14-15, 18-19) and training. There will be valuable training one night per week from Spring Break until the end of the semester.

Each Orientation Leader will receive $150 for all three sessions plus meals and a residence hall room during Orientation. Freshmen and upperclassmen are encouraged to apply and former Orientation Leaders who wish to apply may do so. This is an excellent opportunity for leaders and potential leaders to use and enhance leadership skills.

The Orientation program is directed by Dr. Richard Mullendore, Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. Sara Schilling and Burt Kilpatrick have been selected as Student Directors for the 1989 program. They will assist in the selection process, leader training and implementation of the Summer program.

UNCW Gains Lipman as Resource Developer

(UNCW NEWS) -- Howard R. Lipman has joined The University of North Carolina at Wilmington Advancement staff as executive director of resource development. In this capacity, he will be responsible for solicitation efforts for alumni, parents, business, and industry.

Lipman's first fund-raising activity begins this month with the UNCW Annual Alumni Telefund.

"In the evenings from Jan. 18 to Feb. 2, student volunteers will be calling alumni seeking their support for the alumni annual fund," said Lipman. "This year we will be inviting alumni to join the Step Up Program, by asking them to move up to the next gift club level. We will ask our alumni to buy a coffee cup for the university each day at 30 cents a day for 365 days—that adds up to $109.50 a year.

"We are particularly interested in increasing our donor base this year." "We want our alumni to become further involved with their alma mater, not only financially but also on a volunteer basis."

Alumni contributions help fund academic enrichment programs, scholarships, faculty research, and much more.

Lipman, who grew up in Wilmington, was previously employed as director of annual giving at Saint Joseph's University in Philadelphia. The son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley A. Lipman, of 215 Braxley Lane, Wilmington, he is a 1985 graduate of East Carolina University with a degree in Political Science.

Marine Manuscripts Accepted

(UNCW NEWS) Three members of a UNCW research team have been notified that their manuscript has been accepted for publication in the Spring, 1989 issue of Undersea Biomedical Research. The team is comprised of Dr. William Overman, professor of psychology; Dr. Ralph Brauer, former director of the Institute for Marine Biomedical Research now the Center for Marine Science Research and presently program director for UNCW's Science and Culture Program; and psychology graduate Robbie Burke.

"The paper describes the results of a four-year project which evaluated the long-term effects of deep sea diving on learning and memory in monkeys," said Overman. "This study is something of a real landmark. To our knowledge, it details the results of the first attempt by any laboratory in the world to systematically apply standard psychological measures of learning and memory to non-human primates before and after a series of simulated deep dives in compression chambers."

Some years ago it was believed that divers, after years of diving, had a noticeable memory loss as well as some personality changes. These assumptions, along with a research diving accident at another university, made it necessary to halt human participation in diving experiments. Overman, with experience in memory training in monkeys, and Dr. Brauer, with experience in compression, got together and began testing monkeys for simulated deep dives in compression chambers.

"After observing a series of three dives, we would bring the animals up after each dive and test their memory. What is important is that there was no evidence of impaired memory. What is important is that there was no evidence of impaired memory except after the first dive. However, the animals recovered after one week. These very same results had also been shown in human dives. Following each of the first dives, none of the other dives indicated any type of memory loss or personality change in the animals."

This evidence is significant in that it offers implications for a number of professions concerned with deep diving such as commercial, military and recreational," said Overman. "Diving is indeed dangerous, and all divers need to be carefully selected. For example, when the military is looking for divers, emphasis needs to be placed on making sure these individuals are stable and exhibit stable personalities."

In concluding, Overman summarized, "The big question is, are there permanent changes in memory loss and personality changes after diving a number of years." During the diving studies, the animals were thoroughly challenged. We acknowledge that this one study of animals cannot be conclusive but, the results of our study indicate that there was no evidence of memory decline."

The project was funded by the United States Office of Naval Research and the Research was conducted between 1982 and 1986.

Fire Started in Graham Hall

SCOTT WHEELER
STAFF WRITER

There was a minor disturbance in Graham Hall on the night of January 6. At 12:38 a.m. the fire alarm sprang into action when a candle that was left burning on the top of a fish tank, belonging to John Gordon "Tripp" McKenney, in room 322 set the tank ablaze.

The candle set the light cover of the fish tank on fire and was estimated to have been burning for approximately half an hour before the smoke detector signaled the police dispatcher of the situation.

At 12:42 Sgt. Robert Riley and Officer Avery Tuten responded to the call. They made sure that the building was evacuated and then proceeded to the room where they were met by Residence Life staff member Rob Lackey who had extinguished the fire with one of the portable fire extinguishers located within the building.

Two minutes later Officer Becky Marshburn arrived to help with crowd control.

There was about $600 to $1000 worth of damage done to the room.

"It was mostly smoke damage to the walls and ceiling and to the personal property of the occupants," said John Geddie, Safety Coordinator for UNCW.

"There are some lessons to be learned in this, open flame, open coiled burners, candles and oil lamps are all forbidden in the residence halls," adds Geddie.

There were rumors that the police had not responded promptly but further investigation revealed nothing to substantiate them.

Plyler Resigns as Dean

(UNCW NEWS) - Dr. Daniel B. Plyler, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, will resign that position effective July 31, 1989, to return to teaching and research in the biology department. In announcing Plyler's decision, Chancellor William H. Wagoner said that he accepted the resignation with "regret and very deeply mixed emotions."

Wagoner singled out two areas where Plyler's contributions to the university have been most noteworthy.

"Dan provided tremendous assistance in helping me assemble on this campus what I believe to be one of the most distinguished and competent faculties in the UNC system," Wagoner said.

He also commended Plyler for his leadership in making the many "transitions necessary for a growing institution like ours, in particular the major reorganization of academic affairs, establishing a College of Arts and Sciences and three professional schools, and most recently a graduate school."

The chancellor's remarks about Plyler's contributions to the university, and said he will be missed. "Dan has a good analytical mind. He has a way of cutting the fluff away and getting to the core of the problem. I have always valued his opinions."

In announcing his decision to department chairs and his colleagues in the College of Arts and Science, Plyler noted that when he agreed to accept an administrative position, he made a commitment to himself to one day return to teaching and research. In the Fall of 1990 Professor Plyler will again be in the biology department.

"Service to the university in this and other administrative appointments for the past 16 years has provided me with some of the most challenging and rewarding experiences of my life," he said.

"I am especially grateful for having had the opportunity to serve the university during its exciting, formative years."

Plyler came to Wilmington College in 1966 to teach biology and in four years he was department chairman. This is where his climb up the administrative ladder began. He was the first director of the marine sciences program from 1972-74, between 1973-75 he was Assistant Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

Plyler has played a key leadership role in the development of the university. He first came to Wilmington College in 1966 as associate professor of biology, one of only six people in the young department. In 1969, he was named professor of biology, and served as department chairman from 1970-73. From 1972-74, he was active in establishing and became the first director of the program in marine sciences at UNCW that has subsequently received national and international acclaim.

Plyler also served as assistant vice chancellor for academic affairs between 1973-75, and became the first academic dean when the position was established in 1976. In this capacity, he was responsible for administering all academic areas and directed the growth of professional programs in business and education.

When UNCW grew to the point that professional areas were organized into schools in 1979, Plyler became the first dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. During this time, the nursing program was a department within the College of Arts and Sciences and it too has subsequently evolved into a separate School of Nursing. Plyler has served as dean during a period of tremendous expansion in students and faculty. Until three years ago, he taught a course each year in genetics and human affairs.

Plyler is looking forward to getting back in the classroom and working with students. He is also ready to tackle a research project in plant physiology. In particular looking into the growth phenomenon of the sea rocket, or salsola, a hardy succulent that is found worldwide and grows along the forward coastal dunes.

Plans for a search committee have not been finalized, although it is anticipated that UNCW will look nationally for someone to fill the position. Plyler stated that this is the first time UNCW has had a key academic position vacated, and "filling it will be a new experience for us."

Measles Threat Imminent

DORA JOHNSON
STAFF WRITER

In the past month an outbreak of measles occurred in Rowan County near Salisbury, N.C. With students returning from the holidays, a question is raised, might there be an epidemic occurring on the UNCW campus?

It is required in the Student Handbook (G.S. 130A-152), "Effective Feb. 1, 1989, proof of immunizations is required by UNCW and North Carolina Law or you will not be allowed to attend the University."

"Even though the handbook states the immunizations must be up to date, we do not have the power to remove students from class because of this recent information on the measles vaccination," stated Kathleen Jewell M.D., director of the Health and Wellness Center. "The N.C. legislature has not passed a law stating that all students who had the dead virus vaccination need to be re-vaccinated, and there has been no move to do so."

There has been no reported symptoms of measles, such as pneumonia, hepatitis, inflammation of the heart, Encephalitis-inflammation of the brain, and even death.

"With this high risk of contamination, our campus of 7000+ students could be in real danger if students do not make an effort to update their shots," suggests Dr. Jewell.

"The shot given between 1963 and 1968 was a dead virus, and that anyone who received their measles vaccination before 1968 up to 32 years of age needs to be re-vaccinated," commented Francis Orall of the New Hanover County Health Department.

The symptoms resemble those of a common cold, fever, cough, runny eyes and nose with the occurrence of spots on the inside of the mouth and tongue and a blotchy rash over most of the body.

"Even though UNCW does not require students to get a new shot it is a public health risk, and it is in the best interest of the school and student body," states Jewell.

Any student or faculty member wishing to get their measles shot can receive the vaccine free of charge at the New Hanover County Health Department located at 2029 S. 17th St. between the hours of 8:15-12:00 p.m. and 1:00-4:30 p.m. Mon. thru Fri.

Beyond College...

BY CAROL TREMBLAY
STAFF WRITER

There are many important decisions to be made through the course of a lifetime, but none so difficult as "What am I going to do after college?"

Sure, some people knew exactly what they were going to do at age 5 when Granddad sat them on his knee and asked that age-old question, "So what do you want to be when you grow up, dear?"

But there are still those out there who can attend two or three years of college and have no career objectives. Students need a hand in learning what is available to them and finding the direction that is best suited for their interests, abilities, and lifestyle.

The Career Planning and Placement Center, located in the Student Union, has lots of information of positions available to students wishing to pursue part-time and full-time work. They also help graduating students in job prospecting and preparing.

Representatives from all kinds of businesses in a number of different areas conduct interviews on campus to those searching for employment after college, as well as summer positions for undergraduates.

There are also many publications in the Randell Library that outline career choices and give vocational guidance. The Reference Librarian can assist in finding the books on these subjects.

One way to determine which career is fitted for you is to write down all your interests, hobbies, and what skills you are best at. Then look at job descriptions in a career guide to see which ones you qualify for.

The 1989 job market looks promising for college graduates of all disciplines. According to an article by Michael O'Keefe of the College Press Service, engineering, accounting, nursing and other health professions, marketing and sales, financing, computer science, clerical, and automotive students are all in high demand.

A Michigan State job survey shows the highest paid jobs are given to engineering students (30,600 a year) with chemistry (28,488) and sales and marketing students (25,560) not far behind.

Looking beyond the statistics, it is also important to enjoy the career you choose. Develop your skills and making career objectives early prepare you for a satisfying position with the benefits and options that meet with your expectations.

HOW TO ENRICH YOUR EDUCATION
BY $1,000
A MONTH.

If you're a math, engineering or physical sciences major, you could be earning $1,000 a month during your junior and senior years.

This excellent opportunity is part of the Navy Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate Program. It's one of the most prestigious ways of entering the nuclear field - and rewarding, too. You get a $4,000 bonus upon entrance into the program, and $2,000 more when you complete your Naval studies.

You also receive a year of paid graduate-level training that's the most comprehensive in the world. And you'll acquire expertise with state-of-the-art nuclear reactor and propulsion plant technology.

As a Navy officer, you'll lead the adventure while gaining high-level experience that will help make you a leader in one of the world's high-tech industries.

In addition to the professional advantages, nuclear-trained officers get an unbeatable benefits package, travel opportunities, promotions and a solid salary.

Find out more about the Navy Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate Program, and make your education start paying off today.

Simplification: The Key to Success

Welcome back to another round of business where our daily challenge quickly becomes, "How am I gonna get everything done that I have to do today?"

Many of us have a wide variety of responsibilities both where we live and at UNCW. And in the background of our thinking there is often a nagging voice that says, "You should simplify your life. Simplify! Simplify!" and with that voice comes a scene of a life with simpler patterns of ownership, a laid back lifestyle and a much lower stress level. My life seems to attract detail, as if my motto were: "complicate, complicate" rather than, "simplify, simplify."

Over the holidays I read an article that gave me a brand new insight about simplicity. The image of simplicity that includes fewer responsibilities and limited ownership of things belongs to an earlier, simpler era than no longer exists. Even Thoreau who was wise, childless and jobless managed to spend only 2 years in the cabin beside Walden Pond.

Our world is in fact more complicated. Every entity, every organism that grows and develops increases in complexity. That appears to be the very nature of things, the part of the design of creation.

Researchers have discovered that there was a time in the early moments of creation when the universe was simpler with, perhaps, only one kind of force and one kind of particle in existence. Now the universe experiences many forces and particles and contains everything from "stars and galaxies to daudelions elephants and the poems of Keats." Complexity is part of God's plan.

Even the process of growing from a child toward adulthood carries with it a natural increase in the complexity of our responsibilities and the decisions we have to make for our life. Such complexity, all complexity, actually represents an increased field of opportunity.

Our complex has brought to us opportunities for education and travel and career choice that most of our parents, and certainly, our grandparents, never had in their more simple world. I am giving up complaining about the stress attendant to getting my 10 year old daughter to piano lessons and gymnastics and overnight visits with friends. All of these are carefully chosen acceptances of opportunities in which she can participate to enrich her life.

I want to focus more on the goodness of the opportunities that my complex world brings to me than feel guilty because my life is not simpler. One of the reasons, I think, we yearn for the simple life is that we would like to return to being children without all the responsibility that a more adult life brings to us.

The real issue is not to devalue the world's choices that can enrich our lives, but to learn to simplify ourselves. More time and energy need to be spent on reflecting on what's truly core values and commitments.

The problem is not the complexity of the world that we live in, but our own double mindedness that allows so many forces outside of ourselves to have control over our emotions, our values and our feelings about ourselves.

As this semester gets underway, let us expend some energy in seeking to clarify our inner world, in seeking a simple heart. To do so holds some promise of finding increased richness in the infinite complexity of the world we are gifted to live in.

AIDS Story Clarified to Help Save Lives

In the time preceding the holidays, the Seahawk paid increasing, fervent attention to the issue of AIDS infection, here at UNCW as well as at other universities. Starting with articles on and off the front page, and an editorial or two, we strived to deliver the message that AIDS has arrived on the college campuses of the nation.

Our attempts for the semester ended with a front page story gone awry, and this is our brand of clarification and apology for a misleading headline, and a story which missed its point.

But the thing which has amazed and disturbed us since running the story titled "AIDS Strikes our University" is the lack of response to it by the student population, for that title was very near sensationalism, yet no scare was provoked by it. A more appropriate title would have been "HIV Threatens UNCW Students", as the information we received from the Student Health and Wellness Center confirmed that there is HIV infection on our campus; and although the numbers cannot be confirmed, nationwide studies indicate that with an average infection rate of three per thousand, UNCW would have eighteen or nineteen people who carry the virus and can give it away.

This alone should have alarmed students, even without the help of a misleading headline, yet there was no recognizable response. In this respect the story fell short of the mark and failed, for it is of urgent importance that we as the shapers of tomorrow's society realize that it is no longer safe to be intimate with strangers or casual acquaintances.

The story needed to strongly convey the message that one does not have to have developed AIDS from HIV to give it to someone else. Even if you are HIV positive and don't die from AIDS, you certainly can give it to someone who will.

According to a speaker for the local AIDS Control Program, for every one positive test, there are 30 to 50 people who would test positive.

HIV has no symptoms, and the lengthy incubation period for AIDS accounts for the low AIDS rate in the 18-25 age group.

The bottom line is this, it is no longer safe to assume that you are not at risk for coming in contact with HIV, or even that you do not already have the virus, if you have had contact with anyone whose sexual history you are uncertain of.

Don't be selfish or ignorant; if you have even minute doubts, contact the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center where you can be examined and referred for testing. Being careless might cost many more lives than just your own in seven or eight years.

Matt Fish
Apologizes

Dear Fellow Classmates,

I would like to apologize for my recent actions concerning the incident at Wrightsville Beach, and more recently the attempt to buy beer with a false identification. I realize now that I made a mistake and now must pay for it. Sometimes a person doesn't realize how much he has until he is almost loses it.

I would like to thank my parents, Coach Elbe, Coach Hood, Coach Rosenkranz, and especially Coach McPherson for staying behind me and giving me another chance to prove myself at UNC Wilmington.

Sincerely,
Matt Fish

In light of the fact that a new semester is upon us and parties are becoming commonplace again, we are faced with the myth that "beer rules" and that Tuesday night's party is more important than Wednesday morning's exam.

Here at UNCW a significant portion of our populace actually believes that alcohol isn't that bad for you. It amazes me everyday that people who made it all the way to college believe this. This mentality added to the belief that without alcohol parties wouldn't be worth going to is even more baffling.

It has even been bad enough over the past year to prompt city and campus administrators to form a task force to deal with the problems created by large drinking parties.

I've had my nights with a few too many generic beers, Coors Lights and even the omnipresent Gibleys Gin. I've also hugged the porcelain God and thought, "Hey, maybe this isn't such a good idea."

That was my body's way of saying that drinking to excess wasn't a good thing and I was in a bad position to doubt it on the nights in question. The next day on several of those occasions my body again told me that drinking wasn't such a good thing. It screamed it from the base of its pain control center and turned up the volume on every pain neuron that lay beneath my skull.

I know my limits now as a result of those times. What amazes me is the people who think, "Hey, this is great. I can drink, feel good, get laid, puke and go on with my life."

What you don't see of hear is that most of the people with this mentality end up dead.

Sure you can drink and have fun, but when you don't know your limits you're no fun to anyone, including yourself. If you think that you're more entertaining when you're drunk, wrong! You're just stupid and slow. And this isn't just for the guys, the girls are the same way.

Parties are parties and there's nothing wrong with getting together to have a good time, but when that leads to fights, arrests, and deaths we should snap out of the realm of stupidity and get a grip on ourselves.

Think about how many parties have been held without alcohol, how many dry rash parties were really exciting. Odds are there probably haven't been any.

Michael Gorabachev once said that he preferred negative press to good press because people enjoyed the bad more. The same is true of parties without alcohol. Rarely is there a fight, rarely is there an arrest and rarely is there a next morning where someone regrets having slept with someone else because they had "beer goggles on." In short they're boring.

With alcohol there's good chance that the police might show up, there might actually be a fight, someone might get arrested and being intoxicated gives you an excuse to act like a moron and sleep with anyone you choose. That's fun. At any rate it is something I think about even if you do glorify the effects of alcohol and convince yourself that you're no fun without it.

The Other Side

By Rick Cairns

Rick's Special Surprises for 1989

As all the prestigious newspapers such as the National Enquirer do, I will make my predictions for 1989. Some of them may seem a little far-fetched, but they will all come true. Brace yourself!

On the music scene: Tiffany will give birth to triplets: the father will be Sting. The babies will be named, Crystal, Bite and Luch--no last names of course.

Duran Duran will open fire on their brain dead audience killing at least fifty. The band will change their name to Deranged Deranged.

Michael Jackson will record a new album entitled Good. The hit single will be "Man In The Closet."

George Michael will record Faithless, and his huge success of the year will be, "Even Though You're A Dirty Rotten Slutty Bitch--I Still Want Your Sex."

Debbie Gibson will finally attempt to relinquish her virginity to a sixty-nine year old man. His penile implant will put a damper on the whole affair though. This experience will provoke her to write a new album entitled, Inflated Love. The hit will be, "I Gave It Up, But He Couldn't Get It Up."

Now to the real world: Fred

Flintstone will go on a rampage with a bird powered chain saw and hack up Wilma and Barney. He will then cave up with Betty. Meanwhile Dino will come out of the closet.

Hot dogs will remain as American as hotdogs. Even though they can both put you in an early grave. (How's that for social commentary?)

Tammy Baker will admit that she is actually a man and that Jim is a female. Jim will be pleased at her announcement because it will explain why he did the nasty with a man and why Tammy wears so much make-up.

Jimmy Swaggart will stop bawling this year. (I'm going out on a limb on this one.) In Hollywood: Dustin Hoffman will play an Irish Setter in his new movie "Barf The Wonder Dog." To prepare for the role, he will not shave for six months and will defecate on the livingroom rug daily.

Arnold Schwarzenegger will have the starring role in "The W.C. Fields Story."

On the political front: Bush will get tough with Gorbey. He will blurt, "Read my lips Big Guy."

Gorbey will counter with a, "Read This Dork" as he flips him off. Quayle will save the countries with some well-timed Quayle jokes, such as, "What is my favorite war song? 'Over Hear.'"

Reagan will make a guest appearance on "Night Court." He will play a bumbling fool. All the critics will say that he's a natural.

The national anthem will be changed to "Killing For Jesus" by the Circle Jerks. (I'm not completely sure about this one, I dreamed it.)

The national credo will become "nothing matters and what if it did?"

A new lab test will be invented for pre-employment physicals. The test will use stool specimens (Doo Doo for you lay people) to detect if the person ever had a communicable thought. The Surgeon General will warn against its accuracy though. He will call it "nothing but a crap shoot."

On the sports scene: Michael Jordan will offer to pay off the national debt with his '89 earnings, but Bush will turn it down and proclaim, "We will pay off the debt the old fashioned way--we'll borrow it."

Replacement players will be big in the NFL again because half the players will be on drug suspension.

The Cleveland Indians will win the pennant with Joe Carter taking league MVP honors.

The Cleveland Cavaliers will go all the way.

On the local front: Wilmington will be crowned the Fast Food Mecca of the south.

A local man will climb on a large dog and fast, in an attempt to save its life--they will both be gassed.

This columnist will get looper and looper as graduation draws nearer.

The evening gown competition was the last effort on the part of the contestants in an attempt to win. It was in this competition that the women had to look their best, and according to the audience's participation level, it seemed as though they did.

Kim Tracy, Co-Director of the 1989 pageant, mentioned that a significant amount of work and "a year's planning" had gone into this pageant. The contestants were not "sought after" but rather "applied on their own free will," added Tracy. "We don't pick the number of contestants [who can participate]; it is just a matter of who shows up [for] the rehearsal."

Whaley has competed in six other pageants in North Carolina, winning three of those. She was the 1985 Shrimp Festival Queen, 1986 Miss Vixon High School Queen, and 1988 Miss Onslow County Queen.

Whaley participated in the 1988 Miss North Carolina Pageant but did not place in the final ten. She said she has "only the highest hopes to place in the 1989 Miss North Carolina Pageant," which will be televised on July 8, 1989.

Having participated in the 1987 Miss UNCW Pageant, Whaley has noticed significant changes in our present pageant. "This year we had supportive people instructing workshops and seminars to help us with our make-up and wardrobe, etc. It was these seminars that allowed all of [the contestants] to win because [they] will have something to take with [them] for future use in pageants to come."

Whaley wishes to add a new dimension to her newly won title by publicizing the theme of "The Importance of Education." She feels that "every winner of this crown should pick a theme of [political] importance and use her title to enlighten and spread the theme."

The theme of education seems to be central to her career goals; as she wishes to continue to teach dancing at a dance studio which she owns, and to teach her major, Spanish. "This is one of the best produced and most supportive pageants I've been in," said Whaley. "It was more like a show than a pageant, [it was] very entertaining."

We The Mediocre

By Kelly Holsten

What does it mean to be an English major in 1989? What does it really feel like after you've just come to the realization that five years of college has gone by and there's nothing more between you and the gaping MAW of Real World CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS, TECHNICAL WIZARDS, and BUSINESS MUTANTS? Is this the appropriate time to consider stuffing yourself down a big Incinerator? Actually, cartwheeling onto I-40 to be flattened by a horde of vacationing Wilmingtonians heading towards middle America could prove to be an even wiser choice. Yes, there's a fine line between being wise or incredibly stupid.....Of course, I've never been able to locate this line, much less negotiate it!

You see, English majors do their best to avoid anything having to do with lines; in fact, most English majors can be found wandering aimlessly, while other more pragmatic types are in the line straight to REALITY. And let me tell you straight from the pit of this English major's confused mind, REALITY might as well be a four-letter word filled with fear and ugliness.

I have done my best to avoid the prospect of having to actually join the REAL world. And majoring in English is just one more step into the stratosphere. Unfortunately, many of them will try to fool you with real world answers regarding the validity of their meaningful degree in literature. Because when faced with ridicule, the English major knows NO boundaries; he will begin babbling uncontrollably about the merits of being able to read, write, and communicate in a world of specialized four year trade school graduates. He might even resort to flapping about like a wounded animal while waving a copy of The Lighter Side of Elizabethan Syntax or, God forbid, Why I Love Bartleby the Scrivener. This is all meant to baffle and confuse the subject into thinking the English major is REALITY!

The English major must be straightened out at this point.....if only for his own good! Tell him to be strong; he must resist the temptation of the "Real World." Because when he finally meets Reality, it will resemble a fully-loaded MACK TRUCK with no one at the helm.

Give him HELP.....Give him needed encouragement, for there is only ONE solution to this predicament: GRADUATE SCHOOL. What better way is there to avoid reality for another two or three years? And if that's not enough, there's the goal of the mighty Ph.D. hovering like a Holy Grail.....But if he is a TRUE PURIST, he'll want to run the gamut to the outer limits of escapism, to the land where Gravity is an Alien Concept.....Yes, to FULL PROFESSORSHIP.

This is the English major's final escape; this is the final GREAT LEAP. For it is here where you will actually be PAID to exist in a world which REQUIRES one to show others how ugly and horrid Reality has become! In the end, this is the ONLY place where the English major can actually DEFINE his OWN REALITY!

Rape Awareness Questionnaire Results Tallied

Students Have Misconceptions

BY DOUG BARNES
STUDENT INTERIM DEAN OF STUDENTS OFFICE

"At a Western university, a freshman student returned to her room and went to sleep after attending a residence hall party at which there had been excessive drinking. Sometime later, a male student who had been at the same party came to her door, forced his way in, pinned her down on the bed, and raped her. The next day, with the encouragement of friend, the victim reported the attack to campus authorities. Nevertheless, for weeks afterwards, she saw her assailant on campus every day. He lived down the hall in the same residence hall." (Sexual Assault on Campus: What Colleges Can Do, 1988)

A rape is reported about once every six minutes in the United States; nevertheless, reported rapes represent only a fraction of those that actually occur. About half of all reported rapes are acquaintance rapes. And, underreporting is much more common among victims of acquaintance rape than victims of stranger rape. College students are more vulnerable to rape than any other age group. Nationally, the majority of reported victims and offenders are of college age, with the rate of rape victimization highest among 16-to-19 year olds. The second highest victimization rate is experienced by women between 20 and 24 years of age. The offender population shows a similar age distribution. In a national survey of college students, 27.5% of the women had experienced a rape or an attempted rape since the age of fourteen. Overall, 1 out of every 3 women in their lifetime will be assaulted.

Victims of sexual assault experience both immediate and long-term effects which have the potential to significantly affect physical and emotional health and, for college students, may interfere with academic and career plans. The most psychologically damaging is acquaintance rape in which the victim knows the assailant. Acquaintance rape is also the most prevalent type of rape on college campuses. Three results occur from an acquaintance rape: the victim loses her sense of trust and judgement, she may feel guilty or ashamed of what has happened, and feels she has lost control.

UNCW recently presented a Rape Awareness Week entitled "Intimacy, Pleasure, or Pain? The Reality of Sexual Assault", which was held November 14-18, 1988 and sponsored by the Office of the Dean of Students, the UNCW Department of Public Safety and the Wilmington Rape Crisis Center. Throughout the week, an information table was set up in the University Union where passersby were asked to fill out a questionnaire pertaining to their knowledge of sexual assault issues. Two hundred eighty-three questionnaires were completed: 29% by males, 37% by females, and 34% by individuals not indicating gender. Sophomores made up the largest portion of respondents with 31% of the surveys, while Freshmen, Juniors and Seniors were, in general, equally represented at 22%, 21%, and 22%, respectively. A small percentage (4%) was comprised of graduate students and faculty. Students were asked to answer questions according to how they felt about that particular question, not as to what they thought the correct answer should be.

In general, most respondents were accurate in answering whether the statements were true or false; however, results for a few questions seem to indicate doubt or serious misconceptions by students. For example, the response to Statement #1 ("Sexual intercourse is the primary motive for rape.") was that 70% of the respondents indicated that the statement was false; 30% answered true. (The correct answer is false.) Though a significant percentage of the respondents knew the true motive for rape, almost one-third of the respondents did not. This percentage is just as significant.

Nearly 90% of the Juniors and about 80% females knew that Statement #8 ("If a man is raped, the crime is usually committed by a homosexual.") was false, whereas all other groups and the total sample as a whole believed it to be true. (The statement is false.)

The statement giving all groups difficulty in deciding, and which was left unanswered most often, was Statement #9 ("The majority of sexual assaults happen in private residences.") Males had the highest percentage for the correct answer at 66.7% (the statement is true.)

The overall results of this questionnaire seem to indicate that the participating students have a generally good grasp of some of the issues pertaining to sexual assault. Those areas which seemed to give individuals some difficulty can now be focused on more directly in future awareness programs. An additional series of programs relating to dating, intimacy, and sexual behavior is planned for the Spring Semester of 1989; all students, faculty staff and community residents are encouraged to come learn more about these issues.

We would like to thank all those who participated in the program and helped to make it a success.

Rape Awareness Questionnaire and Answers

1. Sexual intercourse is the primary motive for rape.

FALSE. Sexual assault is an act of power and control...NOT an act of sex or passion. The motive of sexual assault is aggression, humiliation and power, NOT sex.

2. Sexual assault cannot occur between people who know each other. FALSE. The majority of sexual assaults (60 - 80%) occur between people who know each other. The assailant is often a casual acquaintance, friend or relative of the victim. Also, the assailant can be a spouse or lover.

3. Forced intimacy in a dating situation is considered sexual assault. TRUE. Forced intimacy in a dating situation IS sexual assault, even when the victim has gone on the date willingly, has been seeing that person for an extended period of time, or had previously had sex with the assailant.

4. Rapes are committed by sexually deprived and perverted men who are probably mentally ill or insane. FALSE. Most men convicted of sexual assault are "normal" and not classified as sexual deviants. They do tend, however, to be more violent and aggressive in their behavior. Most offenders, at the time of their act, were involved in a consenting sexual relationship; therefore, making it difficult to rationalize their assault with the concept of deprivation.

HOPE YOU ENJOYED IT WHEN IT WAS HERE... WITH TEMPS IN THE HIGH 60'S, WE MIGHT NOT SEE IT AGAIN THIS YEAR !!!!

Write A Letter To The Editor Today

5. A man has a right to force sexual intercourse on a woman if he has spent money on their date. FALSE. A man during any given situation, does NOT have the right to force sexual intercourse on a woman.

6. Immediately following a sexual assault, the victim will always appear acutely anxious, or distressed and will want to talk about what has happened. FALSE. Immediately following a sexual assault, the victim may seem withdrawn and quiet. Victims often go for long period of time without talking to anyone about the situation, because of the emotional, pain and embarrassment, and in hopes that they will be able to forget about it.

7. In most sexual assaults, the victim does something to provoke the attack or "asks for it". FALSE. Victims do not provoke sexual assault. No one enjoys, desires, or "asks for" violence and humiliation against oneself.

8. If a man is raped, the crime is usually committed by a homosexual. FALSE. Though the assailant could be a homosexual, the assailant could also be heterosexual, bisexual or a woman.

9. The majority of sexual assaults happen in private residences. TRUE. Most sexual assaults occur in the residence of either the assailant or the victim...NOT in dark alleys and other remote places.

10. Most everyone (female and male) will be affected by sexual assault at some time, either directly or indirectly, through a friend, spouse or relative. TRUE. Most everyone (female and male) will be affected by sexual assault at some time, either directly or indirectly, through a friend, spouse or relative. Sexual Intimacy????? or Sexual Violence?????

RUNNING SCARED

I thrive on controversy, it's that simple. I usually am not one to go looking for it or creating it, but I am surely not one to back down from it either.

This past Christmas break a few of our fellow students, allegedly, of course, decided to throw a little party. No details were released. They seldom are around here, as I am sure you have noticed by now.

Everyone I personally talked to sounded like a store bought pre-recorded message, and on cue, responded with a resounding "No comment."

I may be reaching, but it seems to me that those directly involved, in addition to those running interference, should be more than willing to comply to a few questions that might help in clearing up this mess because, if for no other reason, it is quite naturally assumed that by not commenting, then they are, in essence, admitting their guilt.

I have absolutely no idea what occurred that day, but let's say hypothetically speaking, of course, that four guys (or girls) decided to have a little party in their dorm room, and rather than just buy a couple of six-packs, they decided to buy a keg, which we all know is in violation of our housing code (page 33 of our student handbook).

And let us just say that perhaps, there may have been a couple of guys (or girls) who were under age (which we also know, is in violation of North Carolina's drinking laws) that participated in the consumption of this beverage.

And as if that isn't enough to raise suspicion, let's say that an official employee from the housing staff discovered the fracas and turned his back, probably because of the lofty status of the alleged perpetrators, and failed to notify anyone of the infraction.

However, the higher authorities of this campus, the campus police confiscated the keg and rather than filing a report or at least charging those who should have been charged, they notified coach McPherson, who, of course was unavailable for comment.

Holy caca dismissed!

I learned that the athletic department, more or less, rents out the dorm during various vacations and hence, has to provide for guardian care.

The athletic department is acting as if nothing ever happened. I know for a fact something did happen on the night of January one. I don't place any blame on the actual participants. They're college students and college students are going to drink, regardless of their age. Besides, they are merely puppets whose strings are being manipulated by McPherson to sing an innocent tune.

I find fault with a system that allows a coach to set rules and regulations that are obviously in his best interest.

These athletes were not sent before the dean of students. Does McPherson have so much power that he can dictate to the hierarchy how he wants to run this school? Does this mean by simply making the basketball team you are permitted to disobey rules that the mass population must adhere to?

These questions need desperately to be addressed. Over one-third of McPherson's squad has been involved in an alcohol-related incident this season alone.

How can we be expected to show responsibility for our actions when the very people who are telling us to do so act irresponsibly?

So, in summation, the money we spent on tuition, fees, etc. more than likely helped to house this "party". I figure the least they could have done was to invite us. Afterall, we somehow payed for the damn thing. I deserve my beer, and so do the rest of you.

I can only hope that if I am ever caught in a similar situation, hypothetical or otherwise, McPherson and Co. would go to the same extremes to preserve my credibility.

Somehow, though, I kinda doubt it.

Robert McPherson

Hawks Under Investigation

CHRIS WRIGHT
SPORTS EDITOR

Four UNCW scholarship basketball players received stiff penalties stemming from their involvement in a New Years Day party in room 402 of Hewlett Hall.

Kenny Mickens, a senior guard from Winston-Salem and Rickey Griffin, a senior guard from St. Louis, Mo., were suspended from the team for allegedly housing a keg of beer in their dorm room, according to an anonymous university spokesman.

Two other players, sophomore Major Wiggins, and freshman Ed Chesney were suspended for the Richmond game for allegedly drinking under age, according to the same spokesman.

Campus officials were patrolling the fourth floor when they reportedly noticed a water leakage near Griffin's room and upon inspection, discovered the keg.

The keg was then confiscated by an anonymous officer and was later re-claimed by the players. No charges were filed at the time because, according to an anonymous source, there was no one at school, and could be, in essence, quickly brushed aside. After the officer confiscated the keg, head basketball coach Robert McPherson was contacted.

According to the student handbook, "there are to be no kegs of beer in the students' rooms or elsewhere in the residence halls or apartments except during official Residence Life functions where an alcoholic beverage permit is completed in the Office of the Dean of Students and approved by the Chancellor."

No such action transpired.

The handbook also states that the officer was within his rights to remove the keg because it was found in clear sight.

"This was an interesting situation," said another anonymous university spokesman. "Due to the timing, Residence Life has no jurisdiction," therefore the degree of punishment was in the hands "of McPherson."

The source did add that because the students were athletes they "did not receive any preferential treatment."

not out of it. We were very positive about the whole thing," he added.

Houzer, who said that it was easy to come out with a lot of intensity because of (McPherson) being right in his ear during the briefing, scored five points within the first five minutes to reduce the lead to just two.

"I realized what I had to do," he said, "and everytime we scored, the crowd would lift us, encourage us to play harder."

After Houzer's two free throws brought the Hawks to within two at 39-37, Senior Greg Bender unleashed a clutch three-pointer that not only gave UNCW its first lead, 40-39, but set off a wild celebration among the fans.

UNCW never relinquished the lead thereafter, and ended up stretching the lead to seven, their largest of the game, as Bender hit two free throws with :37 remaining.

Bender and Howard joined Houzer as the only double figure scorers with 11 and 12 point respectively.

UNCW now 3-1 in the conference travels to the nations capital on Saturday to take on Navy.

By George, UNCW Crushes Mason

CHRIS WRIGHT
SPORTS EDITOR

For the first one-third of the season Head Coach Robert McPherson varied his starting line-up from game to game. Saturday night, in Trask Coliseum, he may have solved the riddle by capitalizing on a newly imposed three-guard offense that helped propel the Hawks past George Mason, 77-66.

Antonio Howard again led the way, connecting on seven-of-10 shots from the field en route to a team high 19 points.

"We've worked on the three guard offense," said Howard, "and tonight it definitely helped. We were much quicker and were able to apply more defensive pressure than before."

UNCW, fresh off a 39 point scalping of William and Mary, wasted little time in asserting itself as they quickly stalked out to a 10-2 lead on a Larry Houzer turn-around jumper with just over fifteen minutes to play in the opening half.

Only moments later, Houzer pushed the lead to 11, as he hit with two defenders hanging on him, giving the Hawks their largest lead of the game at 15-4.

George Mason, often bothered by the quickness of UNCW's guards, looked to conference player-of-the-year Kenny Sanders, who scored 11 of his game high 23 points in the opening period, to spark a 25-13 run that ended as Henri Abrams scored to give Mason their only lead of the game, 29-28 with just under two minutes to play.

Freshman Mark Eaton came off the bench to score UNCW's last five points of the half, hitting two layups and a free throw, to a close out the half with the Hawks' leading, 34-29.

"Our kids coming off the bench are beginning to respond," said McPherson. "Eaton's play at the end of the half, grabbing the rebound and scoring, helped motivate us."

Freshman Brian Withers opened the second half by scoring six of the Hawks first eight points.

"In the beginning (of the year) I was tentative," said Withers, "and I wasn't playing my game. I knew I was capable of playing better. Tonight I just told myself to be aggressive and don't worry about the coach yelling at me," he added with a smile. "I have to make people play me."

Brannon Lancaster's three pointer from just left of the key increased the lead to nine points and Houzer followed with two free throws to push the lead back to 11 with just over 14:00 left to play.

Mason cut the lead to five as Sanders connected on a three-pointer, but were never able to get closer than seven thereafter.

The puzzling aspect is the attempted makeover of the athletic department, and in particular the action, or lack there of, from McPherson. He remained unavailable for comment, and has persuaded his players to forego commenting, as well.

According to Campus Security there is a report of the incident occurring, but they refused to allow The Seahawk to view it.

McPherson told the press following the incident that it was a team violation that had been broken and he would handle it accordingly.

The campus police refused to comment on the matter pleading the Barkley Amendment prohibits them from divulging information pertaining to students.

Assistant Basketball Coach Lee Hood also refused to comment on the matter.

Joe Browning, Sports Information Director said only that "we have put the incident behind us." He refused to acknowledge just exactly what the incident was, however.

They're back and ready to rock the natatorium in 1989. The Seahawk swim team resumed their tough meet schedule by taking on the Purple Pirates of ECU last Saturday. This meet followed a rigorous post-Christmas practice schedule that included double swim sessions and weight training workouts.

"We swam 180,000 yards in a nine day period. This team handled the Christmas training as best as any team I had," remarked coach Dave Allen. Diving coach Marc Ellington agreed, stating, "The team returned really well and progressed at a good rate on the boards."

The ECU meet held many mixed feelings, from the senior members down to the youthful freshmen. "I hope I can improve my times and just swim by best," commented freshman Debra Fastuca. It also showcased a duel between the top two divers in the conference, pitting our Mary Beth Mills against the Pirates' Sherry Campbell.

The results of these fine divers was a dead heat. Mills grabbed the one meter diving crown with a 232.2 score while Campbell took the diving top spot on the three meter board. Unfortunately, this was the biggest highlight of the whole day for the Hawks, who found themselves barely treading water on the short end of a 88-138 men's score and 77-131 drowning on the ladies' side.

This marks the sixth straight year that the Seahawks have been unable to capsize the Pirates' boat since we started including them in our swim schedule.

Earlier before the meet both senior captains Phillip Roth and Maru Mucci expressed a wish to end the Seahawk's drought against their heated rival. "We really get hyped up for ECU. They're fun to compete against especially in their fast pool," said Mucci.

Roth also had a simple approach. "We have a chance to beat them if we work as a team." However that last point is what the Seahawks lacked, a full team effort.

Coach Allen wasn't very pleased at the lackluster effort put forth by the squad and made them know in a closed practice Monday. "I was disappointed in their performance. We are capable of a higher level of competition and just didn't go in there with the right intensity in mind," said Allen.

Bad experience sometimes is a painful pill to swallow -- but let's hope the Hawks have learned their lesson well! The final home meet of the regular season is January 28 against UNC - Charlotte Forty-Niners at two o'clock. Remember the CAA Championships will be held February 9, at Trask Natatorium.

"Our defensive intensity was the key," McPherson said. "Brian (Withers) answered the challenge tonight. The three guards give us better shooters on the perimeter which helps open up things down low for Houzer."

This was the second game in which the three-guard offense was implemented. UNCW blew away a weaker William and Mary team earlier in the week using the same starting lineup.

"I told the guys we would use it definitely for the first two minutes," McPherson said. "I then decided we would go with it as long as it worked."

UNCW connected on only 45% of its shots, but held Mason to a dismal 37%.

"Our intensity level is up," admitted Houzer. "We are playing much better now, and the three guards are freeing up the middle for me and Brian."

Scott Tierney, back in action following a brief sabbatical, provided the necessary spark in the second half as he came off the bench to score seven-second half points.

Houzer finished with 16 points, and Withers added 14 points and six rebounds for UNCW.

The Hawks, now 2-1 in the conference, await the arrival of Lefty Driesell and his 2-1 James Madison Dukes for a 7:30 Monday night encounter at Trask.

Lady Hawks Escape O.T.

BY TASHA ROORIE
SEAHAWK SPORTS WRITER

Update! Update! What about those Lady Seahawks? Right now the Lady Seahawks have an overall record of 7-5 and a record of 1-3 in the CAA. However, the season is still young and anticipation is high.

With the loss of Cindy Makowski, the starting guard (due to injuries which may put her out for an infinite period), takeover has been shifted to Gina Bennett, to take control. She has had a high of nineteen points against Baptist. However, she has had 64 assists for the past twelve games. Also, there is Tracy Bradshaw who can take guard position with speed and steadiness.

Charlene Page and Kelly Kincaid have been repeatedly top scorers. Page who also is a good rebounder has reached a high of 28 points twice this season; once over Christmas break during the St. Peter's Tournament and again against UNC Asheville. Both games were wins. Page is an excellent player who can be seen all across the court.

The opening game against East Tennessee State was a big win for the Lady Seahawks as well as Kelly Kincaid who dominated the scoring board with thirty points. Kincaid has the highest number of points on the team thus far.

Other players like Jennifer Bennett and Tressa Reese have held top scorer and rebounder positions. All members contribute in the success and of the Lady Seahawks.

The last home game for the Lady Seahawks was before Christmas break against William and Mary. A hard fast passed exciting game was played against the Tribe.

Let's take a step back in time, with one minute and fifty seconds to go Rosalyn Flood goes up for two. The score is 72-73. Ball goes to the Tribe, and they come down court, Brenda Watson hits a three pointer (again).

The Tribe are up by two 75-73. We have the ball and Page shoots. It's a tie 75-75. The crowd is wild!

A foul is committed against the Tribe. At the free throw line she makes it. Yes! We are up one 76-75. (Can the Lady Seahawks do it?) We've committed a foul on them and the score jumps to 76-76. Oh no! (Overtime?)

There's eighteen seconds left. Ball goes in, dribble, dribble, pass, pass, the last pass is to Tressa Reese she goes up for 2 with two seconds on the clock she makes it! 78-76, Lady Seahawks win it by two. Whew-w-w-w (Wipe my forehead) Of course I knew they could do it all along!

Tonight the Lady Seahawks travel to Aggie Land to meet with the Lady Aggies of North Carolina A & T on their home court. Wish them luck on their journey and may they be victorious!

UNCW's Hockey team's win over the local Black Hockey Team was especially gratifying for Jeff Silverman, president and founder of the new Hockey Club. The self-sufficient 22 member club, who incidentally receives no funds from SGA, played their first game last Monday night, winning 4-2. There were "few penalties" is the game as the Seahawks easily overtook their competitors. Silverman believes that there is much talent among the players and encourages all who are interested to come and supports the Hawks on ice.

Non-Smoking Residence Next Year

Attention All "Non-Smoking" Resident Students! Tired of smoky clothes? Tired of runny eyes? Tired of all that smoke? If you, or your friends are interested in living next year (Special Interest Housing) with all Non-Smokers, please contact Deborah Haywood LivWell Alternatives Center, UU 395-3683).

UNCW Sexual Assault Advisory Board

The Office of the Dean of Students extends an open invitation to UNCW faculty, staff and students to serve on the "UNCW Sexual Assault Advisory Board." The board will provide assistance to the Office of the Dean of Students for policy and procedure recommendations, and continued review of the educational component related to campus sexual assault programming. Interested individuals should contact Jacqueline Skinner, Asst. Dean of Students, at 395-3119.

Aerobic Classes Held

There will be a meeting for those people interested in aerobics next Monday, January 30, at 6:30 in Hanover Hall.

The Society of Atheist Scholars

Do you believe in God? Whether you do or not, you may be interested in this organization. The Society of Atheist Scholars is a new organization formed for the purposes of awareness and discussion. Contact Robert, 395-3844.

Students Against Drunk Driving

ATTENTION: Students, faculty, and staff: Students Against Drunk Driving (S.A.D.D.) is a new organization now being formed on the campus of UNCW. If you are interested in being part of the organization to help protect your classmates and others from fatalities related to drunk driving, call Christy Godwin at 395-3577.

S.G.A. Looking for Van Driver

Student Government is looking for anyone interested in driving a school van to and from downtown on the hour for the Homecoming Semi-Formal. You must have a class "B" license. A salary will be paid! If interested contact Laura Hudson at 395-3553 or 395-5665 ASAP!

Homecoming Semi-Formal Tickets on Sale

Remember to go by the Information Center and purchase your tickets for the Homecoming Semi-Formal. It will be held on February 18th following the Navy game. It will truly be a night to remember so don't miss it!

Research Support Facility

The office of research administration and the graduate school announce the opening of the Research Support Facility, a facility to assist faculty and graduate students with certain types of photographic work directly related to their research projects. There will be no user fees or other charges associated with the facility which is housed in FH-230 and staffed by Dr. David Padgett, professor of biological sciences. A variety of photographic services will be available and all materials are provided except for color slide film and processing. All work must be camera ready and submitted with 10-days lead time. For additional information call Dr. Padgett at 3486.

Big Band Swing Concert

UNCW's Jazz Ensemble directed by Frank J. Bongiorno, assistant professor of music, will present a "Big Band Swing Concert" February 10 at 8 p.m. in the Hawk's Nest. Music will include big band sounds of the 30's and 40's as performed by Woody Herman, Glenn Miller, Tommy Dorsey, Count Basie, Benny Goodman, Duke Ellington and others. The ensemble's performance is being held in conjunction with UNCW's ALTERNATIVES! Center's observance of National Collegiate Drug Awareness week. ## Measles Confirmed on Campus

BY CHAD ADAMS
MANAGING EDITOR

According to health officials at UNCW's Health and Wellness Center, after outbreaks throughout other areas of the state, a case of Red Measles has developed at UNCW.

The student was diagnosed Wednesday afternoon at the center and her diagnoses sparked an intense search through student medical records both here and at the New Hanover County Health Department to determine which other students or citizens would be in need of inoculation to prevent further spread of the disease.

Officials at both UNCW's health center and New Hanover County's Health Department stayed through the night Wednesday to determine who would need to be immunized.

Dr. Jewell, Director of the Student Health and Wellness Center, stated that those most at risk were the students "born after January 1, 1957 who received the vaccine between 1963 and 1968 or students who received the vaccine before they were fifteen months old."

According to Jewell, "the signs [of Red Measles] start out like a cold. You cough, you may get a runny nose, watery red eyes, a high fever and then the rash, which is a blotchy red rash [that starts in a localized area and then spreads throughout the body]."

The disease is dangerous to children, but does more damage in adult hosts. The effects of the disease are diverse, including such severe conditions as pneumonia, encephalitis (swelling of the brain) and in some cases, death.

The student with the disease is a local student and authorities have been unable to determine where she contracted measles as it is an airborne disease and she had not traveled into any of the current outbreak areas, indicating that she contracted the disease in New Hanover County.

Workers spent Wednesday night in the Health and Wellness Center, searching the students' immunization records.

According to Jewell, at least thirty percent of the student population will need immunizing, and that percentage may climb up as high as fifty percent.

"Anyone that enrolled before the fall of 1986 wasn't required by law to submit immunization records [for enrollment purposes]," said Jewell. Those students who enrolled before that date are still not required by law to submit proof of immunization. (The student who had been diagnosed Wednesday had been at UNCW since 1984.)

Students whose immunization records are not at the Health and Wellness Center or who fail to present proof of inoculation to that office by Tuesday, January 31, will be suspended from their classes at UNCW. Students are going to be responsible for obtaining their own immunization records should the school not have them.

SGA Considering Impeaching Senators

PATRICE BRAZZELL
SEAHAWK STAFF WRITER

At least 2 members of the SGA senate are in danger of being impeached this semester for excessive absences from SGA meetings. SGA Vice-President Robert L. Smith said the 2 senators missed enough meetings or left early several times to warrant grounds for impeachment.

The Student Government Constitution states that four unexcused absences is grounds for impeachment. The new rule for SGA meetings says a roll call will be held at 7:30, giving early leavers 1/2 an absence.

SGA President Karla Alston explained that it is "common courtesy" to go through the process of a reprimand, which is basically a slap on the wrist, and a censure, with which a senator loses his chairmanship on a committee. But the first two are not necessary to refer an article of impeachment to the judiciary committee.

At the SGA meeting Monday night, a motion was presented to the Senate concerning whether articles of impeachment should be presented on the two senators with four absences to the judiciary committee. The motion was passed by 2/3 of the voting Senate to refer the articles of impeachment to the judiciary committee.

Smith believes excessive absences make "ineffectual senators" and the reason for this absenteeism is that some "Have no idea why they're in the senate." He says the majority are good attendants, and if they do miss a meeting it is because of some other student involvement.

Smith says these absentee senators "never speak up [in meetings] and if they do it's to complain."

He admits that some of the other senators who are good attendants rarely participate, but they are "rookies."

He also says one of the senators being considered for impeachment has been there at least one year as long as he has and therefore have "no excuse for not speaking out."

According to Smith, students see the SGA as an "arguing, bickering" group, but he says "it is the only fair way to make a decision, and the only way the minority opinion has a say."

A couple of senators objected to the fact that there are no written guidelines about excused and unexcused absences. Senator Barnhill continued that

New Policy on Campus

Smoking Banned in Buildings

BY RICK HEYMANN
NEWS EDITOR

As a result of the Board of Trustees recent approval of legislation to ban smoking on campus, smokers can only wish the long road the policy has endured was longer.

The smoking resolution had its beginning in January of 1988 during a meeting of the Faculty Senate, where it passed unanimously. To the senate's disappointment, the Board of Trustees did not even consider the resolution that Spring.

"It was not until September of 1988 that the smoking proposal passed unanimously again by the Faculty Senate," said Richard Veit, Lecturer in the English Department. "After we passed the resolution a second time, the Board of Trustees considered the proposal in December [1988] and passed it. The resolution was planned to go into effect in January of 1989," he said. After the Senate's success, Veit, Rodney Earle, assistant professor of Education, Design and Management, and Bob Walton, vice chancellor of Business Affairs were charged with the responsibility of writing the final draft of the official resolution. "This final draft was then approved by the Board of Trustees for the last time," said Walton.

The present version of the smoking policy calls for a complete ban of smoking at all times in UNCW classrooms, academic rooms, corridors, bathrooms, and all public areas of the library. Walton commented, "The residence halls and the two dining areas are different animals that will be left up to the Chancellor to deal with."

Chancellor William Wagoner has scheduled a meeting on Monday, January 30, to make recommendations concerning the appointment of a senior person in each building to design a smoking area. "The senior person will not necessarily be the department head, and will not be anyone involved with the Physical Plant," said Norma Rutherford, secretary to the Chancellor.

Of the few hundred ashtays that will be left in the wake of the new ban, Walton explained, "We will just have to sell them as surplus items. We can't do anything else with them."

Deborah Haywood, Coordinator of the LivWell Center, may well have influenced the Board of Trustees with the introduction of a smoking petition during LivWell 88, the annual health fair. The petition contained 900 signatures of smokers and non-smokers alike in order to lobby for the smoking policy.

Haywood commented that, "The timing was right for the petition. I can only hope that it had some influence on the Board [of Trustees] since the smoking policy has been an issue for the last two or three years."

Haywood attributes the alleged influence to the fact that the petition was worked through several administrative channels until it was reviewed by Vice Chancellor Bob Walton. "Another factor that may have supported the popularity of the petition was the simple fact that the health fair received so much publicity," said Haywood.

Despite the fact that the petition may have had influence on the legislation, some students feel shortchanged by the whole situation. One anonymous student commented, "Because I am a smoker, I only

The 'New Slang' Replaces Old Vernacular

BY SCOTT WHEELER
GUEST COLUMNIST

"Chill out, man!"
"Bite moose goob-a-tron!"
Can't you see I'm tryin' to play tonsil hockey with this girl. Pretty soon I might be parallel parking!"

If all of this makes no sense to you, like myself, then you are not up on the latest buzzwords that are sweeping the nation's college campuses.

For those of us not up on our slang, this means...

"Be cool, man!"
"Get lost nerd! Can't you see I'm trying to get up with this girl. Pretty soon I might even get lucky (note the use of one sexual euphemism for another).

What does all of this mean to the people who steadfastly hold to the practice of Standard English? The answer lies in the past as well as the future. We have gone from one generation to the next, each leaving their mark on our language. In the "roaring 20s" the term in vogue was "23 skidoo," which meant that everything was acceptable. In the 50s everything was "hip." In the 60s it was all "groovy." The term that sprang up in the 70s was "cool." And the word "chill," widely used in the 80s, is a derivative form of "cool," with a slightly cooler connotation as far as temperature is concerned. If the slang speakers of the 90s use the same thought pattern that the "slangers" of the 80s used, then we will take the word "cold," strip it of its original slang meaning of "rueful," and apply the "everything's alright" meaning to it; thus making our language all the more complex.

We do not need for this to happen as we already have the toughest language to learn in the world; although French takes the cake for pronunciation.

I learned, in my linguistics class, that any dialect of the English language has a grammatical basis, with very definite rules that govern its usage. This would suggest that all forms of English are equal; but Northerners tend to look down on people with southern accents and Southerners tend not to accept Black English Vernacular as English. This is explained by the simple fact that each of us views his own dialect to be the more standard version of English.

As with any sweeping generalizations of this nature, there are going to be a few exceptions; but for the most part this is generally true.

Some of the other "new and improved" versions of old slang words are: "PC," "granola," "groovy" and "talking to Ralph on the big white phone." "PC" means politically correct. Someone can be "non-PC" as well. I have a problem with this terminology. The problem being: whom is to determine exactly what is correct for our political system. You? Me? I don't think so, and since our nation's leaders would never stoop to the use of slang terms with their contemporaries, the term "PC" is most (look it up).

Another new "buzzword" that I have run across is "talking to Ralph on the big white phone" (I did not make that up). This quite simply means vomiting. We college students know all about this subject and have several euphemisms for it, including spewing, spoofting, technicolor yawn, laughing at their shoes and shouting at the carpet. Indeed, quite a few of us have spoofed our way through our freshman and sophomore years.

Master's Degrees Valuable in 1990's

CAROL TREMBLAY
SEAHAWK STAFF WRITER

If your after-college plans include going to graduate school, you're not alone. And if you chose UNCW, you would have the company of 265 others who are pursuing a Masters degree!

But what's the point of going to graduate school when you can get a job with a bachelor's degree?

Dr. Eric Bolen, Dean of the UNCW Graduate School, says "A Masters is becoming more commonplace as an entry level requirement (for most disciplines)." He feels having the extra background education is better than the two years experience you would be missing to attend graduate school. Bolen adds that this may not be true for all studies and varies with the individual.

The obvious advantages of going to graduate school is to further your education. James Braye, the Director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, states that graduate school "emphasizes your specialty." That is, your undergraduate studies are usually basic educations, graduate school is one step further. Braye stresses that once you "assess yourself, focus on what you are going to do, and have some direction."

So who should go to graduate school? Anybody who qualifies that has the motivation, desire, and a reasonable GPA. This sounds simple enough, but it really depends on the individual and their intentions. Do you know what you want to specialize in? Do you have a firm grip on your expectations of yourself? Do you have enough money to go to grad school? All these are aspects you need to consider before making the final decision to go.

Lisa Acanfora, a senior in Communication, is going to graduate school to "further (her) career in Speech Pathology." Lisa wants to go to USC due to it's reputation.

She defended that "it is good to go out of state because the North Carolina programs (in Speech Pathology) are fairly new."

But there are plenty of other graduate schools to choose from. Chapel Hill is one of the most popular graduate schools in NC because of its extensive medical, dental, and law programs.

If science is your thing, NC State is an excellent choice. And Duke is known nationwide for its business program. If your taste tends to be more prestigious (and extensive), go to Harvard or Vanderbilt.

How expensive are these schools? The cost of a 1-2 hour semester for a commuting student at UNCW is $83.50. For a full-time, on-campus grad from out-of-state, the expenses can reach $3,590.50. Private and larger schools can cost the student a pretty penny, such as Carnegie Mellon in Pittsburgh, PA at over $10,000 a year!

If you would like to investigate these and other graduate schools, there exists an extensive collection of catalogues located in the Randall Library against the wall, just around the corner from the Reference desk. Another good book to look at is the "Peterson Guide" to graduate schools, which may also be found in the library.

But if you are looking for a graduate school a little closer to home, give UNCW a test drive.

As of the fall of this year, six new graduate programs will be introduced to UNCW. According to Dean Bolen, the new degrees will be in Biology, History, Math, English, Chemistry, and a Master of Arts in Teaching.

Bolen is very excited about these new programs. He feels this is a "springboard of graduate education (for UNCW), and we are going to jump at high and far as we can and try to make a big splash!"

Homecoming Court Selection Process Changes

SPECIAL TO THE SEAHAWK

Court selection for Homecoming has been changed this year. "Using a panel of judges to select the best qualified King and Queen, we hope to make this as prestigious as Who's Who," says Becky Hunt, 1989 Homecoming Court Coordinator.

In the past, students were sponsored by a campus organization, then voted on by the student body. But this process had several problems.

First, it was basically a popularity contest. If you were well known on campus, you would get nominated and unrecognized faces weren't voted for.

Second, was the lack of a large voting population. A small percentage of our students vote in campus events, even though all that is required is a student ID.

Those students who did vote were shown only a picture with which to decide, never knowing their qualifications, if any. "We want to be sure we are getting the best on our campus to represent us to the alumni and the community," says Todd Shaver, Student Activities Advisor. "With the old system there is no guarantee."

After several discussions between Hunt, Shaver, and Johanna Harrington, Homecoming Steering Committee Chairman, it was decided to change to selection of candidates by judges. These judges were chosen from the alumni, faculty/staff and students.

There are nine judges in all, with four coming from the students. The large amount of student judges allows the decision to remain, to a large degree, in the hands of the students.

Candidates will be chosen on merit and personality instead of popularity and looks. They no longer need to be sponsored by an organization.

"This is purely on a an individual basis and open to any registered student," says Hunt.

Applications are available in Room 202 in the Union. They are due back at 5 pm Friday February 3. Interview nights are February 7 and 9 at 7pm, room 210 UU.

Earlier this week, N.C. State students found themselves in a similar situation. They either had to present proof of immunization or they were suspended until they were immunized.

Mass immunizations have begun on campus and will continue through Friday and further if necessary at posted locations. The Health and Wellness Center will be sending notices to student's P.O. Boxes notifying them as to whether or not they need to be immunized as well.

"The disease is highly contagious because it is airborne," said Jewell. "We are telling students with rashes to come in the back door, that's how contagious it is!"

Student reaction to the development of the disease at UNCW has been mixed. In light of AIDS and other serious diseases that have received national attention some students don't fear contracting measles and downplay the seriousness of the disease. When asked if students really will be concerned about measles, Cindy Day, a sophomore at UNCW commented "some will, some won't." That attitude was reflected as well by Lou Dicello an older undergrad who thought that students would see the whole issue, "as a pain, but one that needs taking care of."

Students with questions regarding their immunization records should check posted notices regarding this issue and their P.O. Boxes for information. The immunizations will be provided free of charge at posted locations.

it has been a "tradition to judge the excuses on an individual basis" and that it is "easier to go with your mind and opinion" than with all the excuses that can accumulate.

Several senators commented that they were here to serve the student and absentee senators are delinquent in their duties. SGA meetings are held every Monday night at 6:00 in Room 100, and if students care about where $235,000 of their money is going, they should attend meetings and participate.

Painting Churches Opens SRO Theatre

BY RODNEY INGLE
STAFF WRITER

This February 22 will be opening night for a new UNCW S.R.O. Theatre production. The S.R.O. players will be performing Painting Churches by Tina Howe through February 26.

Mrs. Howe is a renowned playwright that hails from Boston Mass. She has many plays, besides Painting Churches, on her repertoire already.

Some of her earlier works were: The Nest (1970), Birds and Afterbirth (1973), Museum (1976), and The Art of Dining (1979-80). Museum went on to become a smashing success on Broadway.

Painting Churches was first performed at The Second Stage in 1983, the same year that it was written. Later, the play was moved to The Lamb Theatre. In both locations, the leading role was played by renowned actress, Elizabeth McGovern.

Though Elizabeth McGovern is not playing the leading role at UNCW, everyone can still expect a very favorable and professional performance by the S.R.O. cast.

Hillary Russell, a senior at UNCW and resident of Wilmington, will play the part of Mags, a well-respected painter in her 30s.

Randy Soare, a junior at UNCW, will play the part of Gardner, a notoriously famous poet in his 70s, and senile father of Mags.

Last but not least, Julia

Brockmann, a senior at UNCW, will play the part of Fanny, the somewhat flaky and ditzy mother of Mags.

The play itself deals with the problems of a young woman, (Mags), growing up and coming into her own; i.e. finding herself.

Being an "artist," like her father, and wanting to live up to his reputation makes the normal difficulty of a child-parent relationship that much greater.

Howe, herself being from an artistic family, in a sense portrays an autobiography with this play.

For those in the audience who are familiar with Howe's work, this play may hold a certain artistic nostalgia, but for many novices, the nostalgia and memories will be the product of the play that really hits home!

Student Athletic Test, Scholar's Nightmare

This Proposition 42 thing is getting serious. (For the uninformed, Prop. 42 is an amendment to the current Prop 48 which will, if approved, revoke scholarships from freshman athletes whom do not meet necessary entrance requirements of at least a 700 SAT and a 2.0 gpa.)

It has already begun to show ramifications in my hometown. I talked to several players who were considering foregoing further participation until their grades improve.

I'm as of yet undecided as to whether this proposal is healthy. There are many aspects that need to be dealt with.

Many coaches feel the SAT (which is the standard measuring mechanism the NCAA uses for disposing scholarships) is inherently bias. Statistics seem to justify that premise. It stands to reason that the lower socio-economic stratosphere may not score as well because more than likely their school district could not afford the luxury of a quality education.

The coaches argue that this proposal is a direct attack against the minority (in most cases, black) athlete, and again, I suppose it is.

The NCAA will be in essence penalizing these kids twice. Once for failing the test and once more for forcing them to pay for their initial year. It seems logical that if the kid could afford to pay for college then he couldn't have afforded to move out of the projects, doesn't it?

I have always held the belief that there are athletes and there are scholars and rarely are the two interchangeable.

If a kid wishes to become a doctor then he applies for medical school. Not once has the kid ever been required to pass a Standard Athletic Test. Why not?

Wouldn't it be interesting to make that student successfully make eight of ten free throws. I can just see Elmore telling dad that he was denied entrance because he couldn't make a "simple" foul shot.

What a dummy! 420 Tyrone could have hit eight of ten.

Who determines one "SAT" is more valuable than the other. I just don't understand what makes the athletes endeavor less worthy than the scholars.

I've heard the statistics and they are alarming- less than one percent of all college athletes go on to the professional ranks.

The chances are only slightly better for a prospective lawyer coming fresh out of law school.

The university is supposed to provide an opportunity to learn new skills and improve upon past ones.

The administrators continually complain of the high cost of paying these ineligible players (through scholarships, of course) without benefit to the school. I suppose they have a point. What they mean is they cannot sell a commodity that isn't in operation.

I'm against paying these players in cash- that would tarnish my ideals of amateurism. However, I see nothing wrong with paying the kids first year of school even if he is ineligible to compete athletically.

The money is there, contrary to what these administrators think. Case in point is Patrick Ewing. Georgetown invested roughly $50,000 in the seven-footer over four years. Esquire magazine reported that the university received over $6 million in return through TV contracts, advanced ticket sales, souvenirs bearing Ewing's name, etc.. Ewing never saw a dime (well he probably did but that is another story).

I agree something must be done, you know, to stop, you know, the increasing numbers of illiterate athletes. But is that the responsibility of our colleges. Prop. 42 seems to think so.

I think the problem stems from the kids background. I see nothing wrong in administering a no pass- no play rule in our junior highs. That would allow the athlete time to take necessary precautions to insure that he graduates with the proper credentials. I know it helped me.

The first time I encountered Prop. 42 was in the sixth grade. I received an "N" in hand-writing (of all subjects). By the time my mother got through with me I couldn't even sit, much less try and hit a baseball.

Too Much Too Late

STAFF REPORTS

UNCW came within a tenth of a second of setting a school-record third straight road victory Monday night when they squared off against American in a game that ended in controversy.

Two free throws by Dale Spears with 38 seconds left gave the Eagles an 86-85 lead.

Joe Cherry missed a jumper with 11 seconds left and following an American miss on a one-and-one with five seconds remaining, Larry Houzer hit a three pointer. After the buzzer, "I don't know if it was after it sounded or not," UNCW head coach Robert McPherson said. "It was awfully close."

UNCW led three times in the opening period, but American runs of 12-0 and 11-0 helped propel the Eagles to a 47-35 halftime advantage. The half ended as American scored 18 of the last 22 points.

The 47 points were the most points the Seahawks have allowed in one half this season.

UNCW countered with a season's-best 50 point second half while holding the Eagles to just 39.

The Hawks used a 12-0 run to even the score at 63 with 10 minutes left. The lead exchanged hands several times over the remaining nine minutes and UNCW held its largest lead, 82-77 with 4 1/2 minutes to play.

"I thought the key play was when Brannon (Lancaster) got a five-second call," McPherson said. "We had a two point lead with a minute left."

"According to the rules, when you pick up your dribble, a new five-second count starts. The (official) never started again. But bad calls are part of the game. We had an outstanding effort."

Antonio Howard led the Hawks with 22 points. Houzer, coming off a season-low 4 points, added 19 and a team high seven rebounds. Sophomore Major Wiggins added a career-high 14 points and Cherry 11, 10 in the first half, for the 4-2 Seahawks.

"It was an outstanding game," McPherson said. "American came out juiced up and our shot selection wasn't what we wanted for the first half."

"American has the most talent of anybody in our league. We have nothing to be ashamed of."

The Hawks await the arrival of CAA rival ECU Saturday night at Trask Coliseum.

UNCW Sinks

Midshipmen

STAFF REPORTS

UNCW ended old streak and continued a new one as they won for the first time at Navy, 72-64 in Saturday night's CAA matchup, as they handed the sinking Midshipmen a school record ninth straight defeat.

"It was a hard fought game," UNCW head coach Robert McPherson said. "We told our kids all week about military academics, and about how hard they worked and how they never stop playing hard."

The Seahawks capitalized on an inept Naval attack with a 15-0 run during a 10 minute span of the first half.

UNCW opened the half with a 21-2 outburst to build a 28-10 lead but Navy reduced the deficit to 35-23 and closed within 39-36 early in the second half.

The Hawks pushed the lead to 52-39 on a 13-3 run ended on an Antonio Howard lay in. The Midshipmen were then kept at bay, not drawing closer than five points thereafter.

"I think we really responded with those two big scoring bursts," McPherson said.

The Seahawks built a 69-59 lead with just over a minute remaining before Navy scored five unanswered points to close within 69-64 with two seconds remaining in the game.

UNCW preserved the win by hitting three free throws, two by Howard and one by senior Greg Bender, to provide the final margin.

The win was the Seahawks second straight CAA road victory and first in five attempts at Annapolis.

A win Monday night over CAA foe American would set a school record third straight conference road victory.

Freshman wingman Joe Cherry led the Seahawks with 13 points, all in the second half while reserve power forward Robbie Carter chipped in 12 points and a team high seven rebounds. Howard and freshman Brian Withers also reached double figures, contributing 11 points a piece.

Senior All-America candidate Larry Houzer mired in foul trouble scored only four points before fouling out.

Eddie Reddick scored a game high 25 points to lead the Midshipmen (0-6 in CAA), including 21 points in the second half when Navy outscored the Hawks 41-37.

The win pushed the Hawks above .500 for the first time this season.

They visit American Monday night before returning home to Trask Coliseum to face Tennessee Tech on Thursday night.

Cason Leads Hawks in Annual Fun Run

STAFF REPORTS

The UNCW track team and the Wilmington Road Runners joined forces to host this unique first annual event. The race consisted of a one mile run on the new $700,000 Harold Greene Track and a fast and flat 5,000 meter course around the UNCW campus which started and finished on the new track.

In the one mile run, Bill Cason the head track coach at UNCW and the race director used a strong kick to win in 4:24 and UNCW runner Missy Hall finished in like fashion to win the women's division in a P.R. time of 5:23 which was also a new school record for the event.

The 5K event featured a strong local field with many of the UNCW runners doubling back from the mile run. Again, Bill Cason ran to a new course record time of 15:58.9 and was followed by UNCW runner Shawn Brinton (16:22) who was also second in the mile (4:29). Third place was taken by White Oak's Steve Moffitt (16:26).

The women's division was won by UNCW freshmen, Laloni Walker in a new course record time of 21:51, second place was taken by another UNCW runner, Beth Holt (23:32) who was followed by Wilmington's Susan Rumpf (24:35).

A Stroke Away From Victory

BY PATRICK FOWLER
ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR

They're head to head on the final turn, the volume level goes up an extra notch, the timers' thumbs tighten on their stopwatch, as two long wet arms stretch for the cement wall and .... we're short.

Five points separated UNCW's mens' swim team from victory. A single placing, determined in a millisecond of time, gave the Furman Squad a 125.5 120.5 victory.

The loss, the Hawks' third this semester, dropped the mens' mark to 4-6 and left an uncertainty of what direction they are heading into as they near their final meet before the CAA Championships. The women's team, still hurt by low numbers, recorded lost number eight 74-119.

Cosch Dave Allen was content with the Seahawks' output against their Furman opponent.

"They swam well in some places but not hot in others. Their performance was much better against Furman than it was at ECU."

However, he expressed an emphasis on a gaining a victory against UNC-Charlotte with a strong effort and low times.

"We need to focus a little hard as a team unit and head into the Championships on some positive momentum. The team held a two hour meeting yesterday to discuss our situation. We went over what we felt was wrong and reaffirmed our support in working as a team unit."

Most swimmers agreed that the meeting was worthwhile. "We really had a good team meeting. I think we'll do well this weekend," commented Laura Deep. The meeting really inspired swimmer Glyn Boze who guaranteed a Seahawk victory by stating "We'll blow the 49ers out!"

Against Furman, top performers for the Seahawks included Philippe Roth, Brad Kinkema, and Glenn Boze. Roth won the 200 fly and Kinkema the 200 breaststroke.

On the women's side the tandem of Marti Mucci, Laura Grant, Laura Spanjes, and Mary Riggins set a new Seahawk's record in the 400 free relay with a timing of 3:57.60. Mary Beth Mills captured the 1 and 3 meter diving top spot yet again for the ladies while fellow divers Elisabeth Crabbe and Jessie Pustis finished 3rd and 5th respectively on the one-meter board.

They, the girls, finished 3rd and 6th on the three-meter. Dan Kiser and Jeff Carles finished in 2nd and 3rd place on both boards.

The team spent all this week on working on their sprints in hopes of avoiding another close defeat.

The Seahawks will try to break a five-meet losing streak and set up some forward momentum going into the CAA Championships.

"We put the past losses behind us and are looking ahead. What's done is done. We need to overcome the fatigue that has taken over with some much needed rest," commented Allen.

The 49ers opened the Seahawks for the first time last year and will try to duplicate the feat Saturday at the Trask Natatorium. But the Seahawks are tough to beat in their own pool with most of their victories occurring there. The meet starts at two p.m. for the Hawks, who will try to turn back the tidal waves of defeat.

"Excuse Me, You Gotta Buck?"

A beer can rocked against the park bench. The gentle clang of the can affected the people there little, if any. Its inhabitants had more to worry about than a simple empty beer can.

If one looked farther, past the litter-strewn lawn and past the grimy benches there could be seen the sidewalk that drew the line between the fast-paced life of L.A. and this sanctuary for the homeless.

On the sidewalk could be heard a man down to his last bit of self esteem. He had no alternative, but to beg.

"Excuse me sir, ya gotta buck ya can spare? I'm kinda down on my luck."

His hand was outstretched and hopeful. He harbored no hatred for his country and blamed no one for his plight.

His addressee was slim, about thirty-two years old and quite successful from his appearance. He slowly reached into his pockets as if searching for something and stopped suddenly.

"Excuse me. Would you like to work for this?" he said.

The man, hand still outstretched looked up, perplexed by this response. He looked his potential patron square in the eye and detected the seriousness of his inquiry and nodded a nervous "yes" in reply.

"Tell you what, clean up this park for an hour and I'll give you seven bucks," he said.

The beggar was speechless, but the offer was good and seven dollars was at least two good meals, so he worked.

The man paid him and said he would be back the next day.

On that next day the beggar had a friend, they worked for an hour and got seven dollars for their work. Within a two weeks there were about thirty-two homeless people wanting work and the man who had made the original offer had received some financial help from several local companies.

Now those homeless people in L.A. are working two hours a day and are receiving fourteen dollars for their services.

They wear special shirts provided by the local companies which have continued to support the project and clean up areas of L.A. under their sponsorship.

This story is true although no names have been mentioned. The report was on CNN yesterday and it made me think. This took place without government intervention, there was no mention of the word "Democrat", "Republican", "Subcommittee", "Activist", "Taxes", "Welfare" and in short no use of the word "Government".

I realize that this is no answer to the homeless situation, but it does give these people something that they previously had little of, self-esteem and hope. These people aren't receiving handouts, they're working.

In the future when we complain about the government not doing enough to help these people why don't we first think that we as individuals aren't doing enough to help them. Our government wasn't designed to support the people, it was designed to be supported by the people for the people. The answer, I believe, lies not in what "Government" can do, but what we can do.

Editorials

Measles: Taking the Threat Seriously

Please do not grow tired of hearing the Seahawk admonish you on health matters; realize that we only use our editorial column for emergencies. The measles epidemic which is threatening to sweep many North Carolina Counties is one such emergency!

Although it currently afflicts only one UNCW student, the incubation period is two weeks, and there could be many who carry and will develop it. After questioning several people, the Seahawk found most did not know the date or age at which they were immunized, which means that a lot of students, faculty and staff will be searching for their immunization records, or should be.

Red measles is not to be taken lightly. Although the first symptoms resemble cold symptoms, at least one of the possible resulting complications is quite serious. Encephalitis, an inflammation of the brain, can cause from memory loss to retardation and deafness. And the adult who contracts measles is at a much greater risk for permanent damage if the disease is not treated promptly.

Because of this, the New Hanover County Health Department reserves the right to prohibit mass gatherings, which includes everything from Symphony performances to, you guessed it, basketball games.

But it can be prevented! And one should be taking all steps to find out your inoculation history. The people we spoke with were amazed to find that the school has taken care of the possibility of procrastination by promising suspension to all students who do not bring proof of inoculation or receive the shots which will be given on campus by next Tuesday, January 31. And in this case, we hope they stick very firmly to their guns, and save the discomfort and possible damage of many UNCW students.

Why Discontinue A Free Class?

To The Editor,

It concerns me that the free aerobics class provided entirely by Terry Schiver has been discontinued. His time, his music, and his motivation has been of immeasurable value to many students. I have attended his class for two and a half years, and it has made college life bearable by giving me a constructive outlet of frustration and stress. As a junior honors student at UNCW, I owe my motivation to excel to this class. I have participated in many aerobics programs and have found none that could compare. I have paid money for aerobics with certified aerobic instructors only to develop shin splints and a stress fracture. I recovered in Terry's class and was able to continue without pain.

Aerobics is not something you can stop and start. It is an ongoing commitment. Rather than depriving over 50 people of this valuable outlet, I ask that funding be found for Terry's certification or have a program sponsored by internships like every other college campus. Terry has volunteered for 5 years with no pay or money for stereos and tapes. He has more than earned his $200.00 fee for certification.

We are all hurt and feel very betrayed by an institution we have paid a lot of money to. We hope you will find a satisfactory solution.

Thank you,
Beth Gregg

Can You Imagine Life Before Clocks ?

We can save time, buy time, make time, call time, waste time, run out of time, sell time, tell time, fight time, cheat time, be on time, and spare time, but the big hand on the clock still takes a minute to make one revolution.

Time--what a concept. Each culture has their own perception of time. In our culture--clocks rule.

Other cultures on the other hand, believe time is insignificant and something that can't be controlled.

In America, we are obsessed with saving time. If we do manage to save time, what do we do with it? Sell it? Waste it? Put it in the bank?

Only in sports can you truly save and waste time. Where else can a minute take half an hour? I've seen basketball and football games won with one second left on the clock.

Not all sports are time conscious. Baseball prides itself on being a timeless game. A pitcher can stand on his mound and fiddle with his rubber indefinitely, while the batter squirms and toys with his genitals until he's got them right. The umpire may occasionally tell them to "play ball," but they can call time out.

Real life isn't like that of course. We can't toy with our genitals for forty minutes instead of taking an exam, and there are no time outs. We can't call time when it's time to do an oral report. And we certainly wouldn't stand there playing with ourselves either. (At least I wouldn't)

Even though we can't control time, we do treat it unrealistically at times. We say things like, "That waiter is taking forever to bring my beer." When someone says, "I'll be back in a second," will they really? You can win a basketball game in a second, but you can't be back in a second.

We think that we are real smart when we "buy time" by sending an unsigned check to the power company or begging for more time to study for a test. That's probably a case of cheating time or stealing time. The only way to buy time is to buy air time from TV or radio. But that is an abstract concept. If time were concrete, you know that someone would be making big bucks off of it. We would see ads for polysaturated time, sugar-free time and time light--everything you ever wanted out of your time and less. Of course, new improved time, would be all over the airwaves.

We know that the only way to improve time is to not spend it working. It's amazing how time drags at work or in class. Eight hours can seem like three days because you're so conscious of time. If you want time to speed up--go on vacation. When you're on vacation and glance at a clock, you can swear that it's a fan--the hands are moving so quickly. The best thing about a vacation is not having to worry about time.

We are forced to be aware of time when we're back in the real energy for ourselves and a few close people in our lives. It seems easier and easier to convince ourselves that just making it through a week demands all of our energy that is used in simply taking care of ourselves and issues that impinge are upon us immediately.

We must struggle to recapture the sense that we are part of the human family that is larger than our immediate narrow focus. We must recapture that sense not only for the sake of the human family but for our own sake, for the very narrowness of our concern works against the very possibilities for happiness and joy that we desire and can only be truly found when we open our self concern to include significant concern for the well being of others. Self centeredness dries up, leaves us tight, anxious and deenergized as we wind more and more tightly around our own little world. Finding specific ways to care for others expands us, feeds us with serendipitous encounters with people who wind up giving us energy rather than taking it from us. To give ourselves away is one of the surest paths to finding a deeper dimension of ourselves, to feel strengthened and loved.

Whether you are dealing with the issue of hunger or homelessness or working with the terminally ill or tutoring a young child, it matter not. The fact is that you need to be concerned about others outside of your small circle of personal acquaintances both for their sake and for your own. Our narrow concern for happiness if self defeating. To open our lives to the needs of others and to engage in some serious commitment to serve others is one sure path to an increased sense of well being.

How small is your personal world right now? Are you, by any chance, out of balance? You are needed! For the sake of others and for your own sake find a specific place to get involved where you can give a part of yourself away for the sake of others. Business is not an adequate excuse. The issue is too important.

The Other Side

By Rick Cairns

If you aren't, you aren't likely to have a job very long. If your job starts at eight; that means eight or a little earlier--never later. Many jobs have a time clock which prevents you from sneaking in unnoticed. Whoever invented the time clock was a sick son-of-a-bitch. I wonder how many car accidents he caused throughout the years. People will drive like maniacs to get to work on time so they won't "get in trouble."

Many people actually do get reprimanded for being a minute late or feel badly about it. One frigging minute! And we wonder why heart disease, drugs and smoking are so big in America.

Our lives are so time regulated that any small fluctuation from the norm makes us uneasy. If we have to work longer than eight hours, we feel like dropping. Movies which are longer than two hours become boring and too long. A sitcom on TV can't be longer than thirty minutes or we'll lose our minds. How many times have you been out having a good time and you made the mistake of looking at a clock? If it's late, you are
